Capt. Tom. Best Speaks at Empire Theatre Sunday 4:15 p. m.

The Y.M.C.A. takes advantage of the day and occasion to have a special Men's Mass Meeting at the Empire Theatre, Sunday at 4:15 p.m., the management kindly donating the use of the building for this purpose.

Captain "Tom" Best, who has served overseas as a Special representative of the Y.M.C.A. during the past two years will be the speaker. Captain Best is well-known as an interesting speaker and coming direct from the front will be able to give first-hand reports of how our Canadian boys are conducting themselves under the strain and stress of soldier life.

Asa Huycke will sing, the Salvation Army Band will play, and a large attendance of men is anticipated. J. J. Turner will be in the chair.

There is no admission charge and all interested men are invited to attend.

CAVAN SOLDIER IS OFFICIALLY REPORTED AS KILLED IN ACTION

Pte. J. A. Hardy of the 136th Battalion Meets Death in France---Lakefield Member of 93rd Battalion and Corp. Ernest Wellwood of the 33rd Battery Are Both on the Wounded List--To-day's General Military News

KILLED IN ACTION.

Pte. J. A. Hardy late 136th Battalion Cavan.

WOUNDED.

Pte. B. T. Watley late 93rd Battalion, Lakefield.

Corp. Ernest Wellwood, 33rd Battery, C.F.A.

PTE. J. A. HARDY.

Pte. J. A. Hardy of Cavan, who went overseas with the 136th Battalion of Port Hope, last year, is officially reported killed in action, his name appearing in yesterday's list from Ottawa. Pte. Hardy was transferred to another Canadian Battalion at the front after going overseas with the 136th.

PTE. B. T. WATLEY.

Pte. B. T. Watley, a Lakefield member of the 93rd Battalion, is officially reported wounded. Pte. Watley enlisted in the Lakefield platoon of the 93rd Battalion early in 1915, and after going overseas with Lieut.-Col. Johnston's unit, was transferred in a draft to another battalion in France.

The official message stated that Pte. Watley was suffering from a gun shot wound in the hand and from fractured fingers. He is a son of Mr. Edward Watley.

CORP. ERNEST WELLWOOD.

Mrs. Thos. Sproats received word yesterday that her brother, Corp. Ernest Wellwood, Canadian Field Artillery, is officially reported seriously wounded in the foot. Corp. Wellwood enlisted in the 33rd Battery and went overseas with that unit. His many friends here will wish him a speedy recovery.

Kingston, June 22.—The only departure of troops for an eastern training point in several weeks took place on Thursday evening, when Capt. J. E. Freeman took away eighty-eight forestry men, and Capt. Blezard took away fifty men of the Army Medical Corps. The troops travelled by special train, on which was also over 100 men from the Cobourg Heavy Battery. Major G. I. Campbell accompanied the troops to Montreal. There was quite a number of citizens at the train when it pulled out.

KINGSTON, June 23.—The arrangements for accommodating soldiers at the new Queen's Military Hospital are being rushed through with th greatest possible speed, and it is hoped that the institution will be quite completed by the first of next week, when some 200 soldiers will arrive for treatment. The orderly, dietician, kitchen, medical, etc., staffs are being arranged for so that all will be ready.

Major K. Mundel and the officers of the Army Medical Corps are certainly doing everything to make the camp one of the best that has ever been at Barriefield. Electric lights are to be installed immediately. A stable for the transport horses of the unit is nearing completion.

CONSTRUCTION OF PRINCESS ST. SEWER IS TEMPORARILY STOPPED

The cessation of the construction of the Princess street sewer was ordered by the Council last night until the required appliances for facilitating the work were procured. It was stated that this sewer was costing $18 a foot, that the progress was too slow, and that it was not likely to be accelerated until a supply of steel sheeting and a pile driver was obtained.

Ald. McIntyre drew attention to the condition when he complained that Engineer Parsons had neglected to provide Foreman M. Neary with adequate equipment.

The Engineer replied that he was trying to get the sheeting and a small steam hammer, but without success.

Ald. Dobbin suggested that the work be discontinued until this material was procured.

Ald. Stratton remarked that it was a waste of time and money at the present rate.

Ald. Weir stated that Mr. Neary had five men on the work, and that the water and quicksand retarded progress.

Ald. Stratton—A foreman over five men and wanting higher wages.

Mr. Parsons stated that the work was particularly difficult on Princess street, the water boiling up there. It was costing far more than it should.

Mayor Duffus remarked that the Council could not think of building a sewer at that cost per foot.

An apparent lack of team work between the City Engineer and the Foreman was indicated in Mr. Parsons' statement that he had had an idea of the difficulty that would be experienced, but that the foreman was confident he could do the work. As the work advanced, however, he realised that the plank sheeting was inadequate.

Ald. Stratton remarked that the Engineer should have given the foreman the materials he required. Mr. Parsons replied that he had written to Toronto jobbers who had secured that city for applications without locating any.

Ald. Stratton moved, seconded by Ald. Dobbin, that the work be discontinued until the materials were procured, and that they be got as soon as possible.

Funeral On Monday

The funeral of the late Mary E. Lendrum who died suddenly this week will take place on Monday afternoon from the family residence, 699 Water Street at 2.30 o'clock. A short service conducted by Rev. Mr. Rowand will be held at the house at 2 o'clock before leaving for the Little Lake cemetery.

At the present rate of increase in the consumption of native lumber in New Zealand it is estimated that the supply of standing timber will last not more than 30 years.

HON. GEO. P. GRAHAM IS IN FAVOUR OF CONSCRIPTION

Declares His Belief in Sir Wilfrid Laurier But Remarks That He Must Differ From Him and Vote Against the Referendum and for the Bill.

YESTERDAY'S DEBATE

OTTAWA, June 22.—Hon. George P. Graham, the first lieutenant of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Parliament, speaking in the Commons to-day from his place next to his revered and trusted leader, did as Mr. Pardee, Chief Liberal Whip, did yesterday, with the full permission and respect of Sir Wilfrid. Mr. Graham, following the traditions of Liberalism, expressed his own honest convictions on the great issue before Parliament and the people. While declaring his sincere belief that Sir Wilfrid, the veteran and experienced statesman, was pursuing the course he thought wisest in helping to secure national unity in Canada, and the most far-sighted method of helping to win the war, Mr. Graham said he must differ from Sir Wilfrid, and vote against the referendum and for the Conscription Bill. Though the conclusions might vary as to policy, said Mr. Graham, one motive dominated, namely, the reaching of the common goal of what was best for Canada, and what was best for the Allied cause.

Other Liberals Declare For Bill.

Another Liberal, Mr. W. A. Buchanan, of Medicine Hat, the first of the Alberta Liberals to be heard from in favour of the bill in a telling and earnest speech, took the same course as Mr. Graham, while Mr. E. W. Nesbitt, North Oxford, said he would support the principle of the bill on its second reading.

A Closely-Reasoned, Moderate Speech.

Though he was suffering from a temporary attack of neuralgia, Mr. Graham's analysis of the whole situation was a closely-reasoned one moderate in its tone, fair and frank in its criticism of the mistakes of the past and constructively helpful in its concrete suggestions for immediate and courageous organization of the whole power of the nation for war efforts. Readiness for every effort, he urged, should be accompanied by steadiness in Parliamentary decision, curbing passions and prejudices, preserving national unity to the utmost extent, and equalizing war sacrifice as far as possible among those who stay at home as well as among those who go to fight.

Quebec Situation Reviewed.

He succinctly reviewed the Quebec situation noting the natural result of the Nationalist propaganda, the sudden breaking of every pledge given the people of the Province in regard to Conscription, the gross mistakes in recruiting methods pursued in Quebec, and the lack of any inspiring Governmental leadership to the people of that Province. In Ontario there had been similar failure of any consistent organization of recruiting effort. What had been accomplished had been done principally by the voluntary effort of patriotic citizens rather than by the Government itself—almost despite the

WAR VETERAN IS HONOURED ON EVE OF MARRIAGE

Mr. Oliver White, Financial Secretary of the Peterborough Branch of the G. W. V. A. Receives Handsome Clock From Comrades

AN ADDRESS WAS READ

A delegation representing the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, invaded the home of Mr. Oliver White, Charlotte street, last evening, and presented him with a most handsome mantel clock, on the eve of his wedding. Mr. White, who went overseas with the 21st Battalion, and was wounded a year ago, is Financial Secretary of the Peterborough branch of the G.W.V.A., and is most popular with the war veterans.

The presentation was made by Secretary T. R. Cooper, while Vice-President R. H. Muir, who was with Mr White in France, read the following address:

Peterborough, June 22, 1917.

Mr. Oliver White, Charlotte Street.

Dear Comrade,—On the eve of your marriage we, your comrades of the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association—some of whom have fought side by side with you in the trenches and all of whom have learned to admire and respect you—desire to extend our congratulations and, at the same time, to show our regard for you by presenting you with his clock which we ask you to accept with our best wishes.

May your married life be always happy and bright, may the rations always get up, may the "S. R. D." never fail, may your "fatigue" be light, and may your future be as glorious as the cause for which you fought in France, are the earnest wishes of your friends and comrades. Signed on behalf of the G. W. A., Peterborough Branch.

A most enjoyable evening was spent, stories of the campaign in France being interspersed with songs.

Mr. White's wedding took place today.

Peterboro' Man Has Been Awarded Military Medal

Lance-Corporal Lassenby Rewarded For Good Work and Bravery on the Field

Mrs. C. Lasenby, 485 Donegal street, has received word to the effect that her husband, Lance-Corporal C. Lasenby, has been awarded the Military Medal for good work and bravery on the field of battle. Lance-Corporal Lasenby enclosed a piece of ribbon from the decoration. He enlisted in Peterborough with the 39th Battalion and was subsequently transferred to the 19th Signallers' section.

MINISTERS TO BE TRIED

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, June 23. — It is announced to-day that the trial of Sir Rodmond Roblin, former Premier, Hon. George Caldwell and Hon. James Howden former ministers, will go on Monday, despite rumours to the contrary.

DRUNK ON JAMIACA GINGER AND LOCAL OPTION BEER

Loaded with an infusion of Jamaica ginger and 2 per cent beer, three Trenton men engaged to work on the Quaker Oats plant, were arrested yesterday afternoon, and fined $10 each this morning for being drunk in a public place.

WHEN IN DOUBT.

It is generally understood that each person is furnished with only one pair of eyes, yet every day we see someone taking chances with their sight, by wearing glasses not made for them, it is like drinking some one else's medicine, so as not to waste it. If you are doubtful about your eyes, call and see Dr. Lacey, 410 George.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1917

PETERBOROUGH AND ITS TREES.

About three weeks behind the normal leafy June is with us. In ordinary years leafy June is upon us in full glory with the first day of the month, but this year only the longest day of the year saw our trees in the full opulence of leafage. And what a scene of beauty, with our long avenues of street trees in full leaf! Stately trees monuments to the public spirit of dead citizens—no doubt to-day sitting under the shade of the Tree of Life—meet in arching green over the cool comfort of the shaded, paved and oiled streets. The view from street end to street end seems a tunnel of greenery, a delight to the eye, and providing cool shelter in the scorching days that are at hand.

Visitors to Peterborough all tell us, and we all can see it when we lift our eyes above the earthly level of the street, that the summer glory of Peterborough is our street and other trees, while, till very recently, the chief disgrace of Peterborough has been her wretched streets.

To whom do we owe the glory of the one and the disgrace of the other? We owe our tree beauty to the public spirit of Peterborough's citizens, and we owe our bad streets to the successive city councils we elected.

Our magnificent endowment of street trees cost us nothing as a corporation. Our lately disgraceful streets cost us dray-loads of money, not so much spent as wasted.

The city never planted a tree, and our trees are the only, or the few things, we can boast of in the way of public beauty. Our streets, bad as they have been, and good as they are now, are the only things the councils deserve credit or blame for, as the case may be.

It costs as much to put one street in good and decent repair as it would do to plant the whole of the vacant places of the city with trees.

Why is it that we can't get aldermen that have a soul above the mud of the streets? Aldermen that will take an interest in adding to, and conserving, the crowning glory of our city streets—their magnificent trees?

No alderman, as an alderman, has ever added a tree to the city; but our aldermen have laid low dozens, if not hundreds, of magnificent street trees, planted by the God of nature, and growing where they listed for a century. Such trees are priceless and worth preserving; but because to some utilitarian alderman they perhaps obscure the light of a street lamp, they must come down. It would never do to shift the street light. That would be the commonsense and esthetic thing to do.

What can be done to rouse in our representatives a sense of the beautiful, some sense of responsibility in respect of the crowning summer glory of our city—our trees?

The city is called upon to act, and to act systematically. At present, and in the past, street tree planting has been nobody's business. Everyone had his "go" at street tree planting. The consequence is that bad varieties have been planted, on irregular lines, and at bad distances, and the results, fine as they are en masse, would have been better if proper methods had been adopted.

If the city would undertake the work, or appoint a park commissioner, we should have better results. Trees would be planted of a kind suitable to the soil of the district, and at proper distances.

Private planters of trees seem to learn nothing from seeing trees jungled together so closely that they have to be cut down after growing to great size. A few stands of street trees have been planted by private enterprise this year. The only lot that conforms to proper planting ideas is around St. Peter's school grounds—about thirty feet apart—giving a chance for the individual tree to expand and develop the greatest, vitality and beauty.

Thirty feet is the closest distance street trees like elms and maples—about the only proper street trees—should be set. Well-planted and cared for, such trees in a few years will get their branches together. On Ruhidge and Reid, and other streets, maples planted on opposite sides of the street, have reached across a space of fifty feet, and their branches join.

Tree planters, like public bodies, don't look ahead, or they would see what trees do when they have a chance to spread, when they are planting them ten, fifteen or twenty feet apart.

On behalf of the public and the public beauty of Peterborough, the aldermen are adjured to take an interest in doing something that won't cost a mint of money, but provide a wealth of beauty—look to the future, plant the streets with trees where they are needed, and they will leave a monument to their public spirit and foresight, more enduring than streets that get worse and wear out.

OLEOMARGARINE AND BUTTER.

In the excitement of the [illegible] political situation, or conglomeration of situations, at Ottawa, we are apt to lose sight and, for the moment, memory, of many things that in their place have considerable importance. We have, perhaps, become so accustomed to paying high prices that we are prone to regard them as normal conditions, till we are recalled to reality by some sudden and unexpected action of the government. The Borden government for the past three years has been pronouncing against conscription, yet it suddenly announces as a measure of compulsory military service. Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, who has long turned a deaf ear to demands for removal of the embargo upon the importation of oleomargarine as a substitute for butter, has now announced that the government is favourably considering the numerous petitions asking permission for the sale of margarine in Canada.

"Farm and Dairy," an excellent agricultural paper, thinks that such an action would be detrimental to the dairying interests of Canada. It remarks upon the alleged action of the Minister of Agriculture, as follows:

> If the Minister is reported correctly, it means that the clamour of a few city newspapers and the insidious campaign of the packing interests, who hope to benefit by the removal of restrictions, counts for more with the government than the interests of some 700,000 farmers, almost all of whom are connected to some extent at least with the dairying industry.
> The dairy farmer asks for no special favours. We are not afraid of honest competition. We have every reason to fear, however, that oleomargarine masquerading as butter, will have a decidedly detrimental effect on the butter market. Oleomargarine interests have never been content to sell their product on its merits, and if Canadian authorities can head off the campaign of fraud and deception that has been practised in every country where oleomargarine is sold, then our legislators have more wisdom than we have cause to give them credit for. We would be glad of an announcement from Ottawa stating just how oleomargarine is to be kept in its own clothes and dealers therein made honest by legislative enactment.

There are always two sides to a question, and the above is a suggestion of the view of the interests directly concerned in a proposal to attempt to relieve the stringency of the food situation. That is the dairy and farm side of the subject. This attitude is perfectly natural, and no doubt very largely justified—under normal conditions. But the conditions are not normal. For instance, the price of butter is abnormal, and to a point that prevents many families in the land from enjoying the use of butter as an article of daily diet. Did the farmer ever contract his satisfaction at getting 40c or 45c a pound for his butter with the dissatisfaction of the consumer at having to pay such a price? Thousands of persons, with their meagre income raided in every direction—affected on every article of food by high prices—would welcome the relief afforded by access to a substitute for butter, that would be within their purchasing power. It is in the interests of this class of our citizens that it is proper to allow the sale of oleomargarine. Is it not possible that opening the market to oleomargarine would not affect the sale of real butter? The class of citizens who would buy margarine would not do so because they preferred the best of it to good butter but simply because the price of margarine would correspond to the measure of their means. People that could afford to buy butter would still buy it, and on no account would think of buying a substitute. Is it probable that the sales of dairy or creamery butter would be less or the price less because a certain proportion of our population, who cannot afford to buy butter, and will not therefore buy it, have access to a substitute that they can afford to buy, and which it is said is a very fair substitute for butter, wholesome and not bad to taste? It is reasonable to assert that no one who can afford to buy butter will buy margarine, and therefore the farmers' wives will have the same demand and price for their butter, even if margarine is permitted for sale. If oleomargarine is admitted in the interests of those who cannot buy, and will not buy, butter, and if its admission is only a temporary expedient, it is probable that the strongly established dairy business will not suffer.

It is of course necessary, that if the sale of margarine is permitted, it should be surrounded with such restrictions as are necessary to protect both the public and the dairy interests.

City people, however, are apt to be critical, if not cynical, in regard to the prosperity of the farmer. Many of them forgetting other conditions that affect farmers' profits, come to, or jump to, the conclusion that the farmer is not much in need of sympathy when a ready market is found for eggs at 35c to 40c a dozen; butter at 40c to 45c per pound; cheese, retail, between 35c and 40c, and nearly all farm and dairy products at a similar scale of prices. It is probable that the farmer and dairyman are unduly alarmed at the prospect of the introduction of oleomargarine. Time was when the motor car was regarded with disgust and alarm by the farmers; motors were at first fairly mobbed when they passed through the country. Now auto cars are almost as generally used by farmers as reaping machines, and we had reported in the press recently that at an agricultural gathering in York County, a mile of farmers' auto-cars was ranged adjacent to the pic-nic grounds, an evidence at once of the prosperity of the farmers and of the fact that a once-detested and sneered-at innovation had become a necessary instrument of the farmer's convenience and pleasure.

Live and let live, is a golden motto.

How French Machine-Gun Man Kept Hun Battalion At Bay

Emile Alexandre Bigorne, a simple machine-gun operator, has just been awarded the Legion of Honour, the highest military decoration that France can give to an ordinary soldier, for having repulsed, single-handed, with his machine-gun, a German counter-attack. No fewer than 800 Germans were killed, wounded or put to flight. Bigorne's exploit demonstrates to some extent the role which the machine-gun has come to play in the present war, where it is, without question the most formidable weapon now known. Its death-dealing effects far exceed those of heavy artillery, and are probably only approached by the "soixante-quinze" guns of the French. Following one of the French advances in the early part of the present offensive, Bigorne found himself holding down a German trench in company with a dozen other machine-gun men of his company. The Germans had kept them isolated all night by a barrage fire, and early in the morning gave indications of preparing a counter-attack. With the gradual increase of the morning light the German fire became more accurate with the result that one by one Bigorne's comrades were killed. They had had orders to hold the trench regardless of cost.

When Bigorne found himself the sole survivor with a heavy Germany counter-attack preparing a few dozen yards in front of him, he gathered together the machine-gun belts of his dead comrades. Altogether he found himself in possession of about 1,000 cartridges. Adjusting his machine gun, and placing the cartridge belts near, where he would be able to feed them in himself, he waited till the first Germans were close in before opening his deadly fire. The Germans began falling one by one. Then, as they crowded to the attack, by fives, tens, twenties, and fifties, Bigorne never wasted a shot. Yet as the Germans went down by the score, still other scores leaped up in their place. In the end Bigorne found himself with a last cartridge belt, and a whole column of Germans still swarming to the assault. He fed the belt in and then took a last long sweep across the entire front of the approaching Germans. It was his last cartridge, but it proved sufficient, for, under his deadly aim, the entire column broke and dashed back to its trench. For two hours Bigorne continued his position absolutely without ammunition, waiting to see what the Germans would do. Finally he was relieved before another attack could be launched, and upon being conducted to the rear, mighty thankful that he had got out alive, he was greeted, to his amazement, by his general. He announced that he was to be recommended for the Legion of Honour. On the day Bigorne got his cross with his citation signed by General Nivelle he was also given six days' permission to visit his aged mother, who, since the beginning of the war, had been held by the Germans, but finally allowed to return to France. As he boarded the train at Paris for home, after getting his cross of the Legion of Honour, he declared that he did not know which of the two recompenses he really preferred.—United Press Correspondence.

What Can Be Done When You Try

A year ago a man working on Simcoe Street bought a lot from me in South End, continuing to work every day he also started to build, with the help of a good wife and small boy had his house ready to move into in October now he has it nearly completed and intends to commence another very soon. Where there is a will a way can be found. Now is the time to see and select a lot. Now is the time to buy from me. July is close at hand—act to-day.

2,000,000 Tons Of British Shipping Have Been Lost

NEW YORK, June 21.—Germany has sunk about 2,000,000 tons of British ships alone since the unlimited submarine warfare was declared on February 1, according to figures cited to-day by a maritime expert, based on calculations from the official British lists of losses.

In the submarine campaign to date, the British have lost 642 vessels. Official figures available since March 4, give 336 British ships of more than 1,600 tons sunk, and 135 or less than that tonnage.—From February 1 to 25 the size of the 171 vessels sunk was not officially given. Best information, however, estimated the division as 100 ships of more than 1,600 tons, and 71 below that figure. This would make a total of 436 large vessels sunk and 206 smaller ones.

The average of the 436 large vessels was said by a maritime expert to-day to be about 4,000 ton; that of the smaller 800 tons. This would give the total tonnage of ships of more than 1,600 tons thus destroyed as 1,744,000 tons and that of the smaller ships 164,800—a grand total of 1,908,800 tons.

The figures do not include sinkings of French, Italian, American or other vessels than British.

The shipping output of the entire world in 1916 was two million tons.

$10,000,000 Evasion In Munitions Taxes

Inquiry, Taking Factories Unawares, Will Make the Returns at Least $26,000,000.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—Widespread attempts on the part of munitions makers to evade the payment of profits taxes imposed by Congress last September have been reported by Internal Revenue Agents, who have been working quietly for the last two months checking up the manufacturers' returns.

The extent of the attemped evasion thus far brought to the attention of the Treasury totals more than $10,000,000, or approximately 40 per cent. of the returns voluntarily made. Indications are that the figures will go as high as $12,000,000 or $13,000,000.

Scores of the manufacturers of munitions are said to have attempted to defeat the full operation of the law by making only partial returns of their profits. Some of the largest concerns in the industry failed to make complete returns of profits, it is charged.

Under the law, munitions makers are required to report to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue their profits each year and to pay the Government a tax of 12 1-2 per cent. Virutally all of the 600 to 700 manufacturers made their returns, apparently in conformance with the law, showng profits whch netted the Government approximately $26,500,000 in taxes.

It was assumed, apparently, that the bureau would check the returns leisurely as it had been checking the returns upon the income tax reports. But Commissioner Osborne, instead of waiting a year or more, set a field force of investigators to work almost immediately after the munitions returns had been received. They were thus enabled to check the figures given the Government before there had been any radical change in conditons at the plants.

Investgators reported profits largely in excess of those reported to the Government in many instances. Not all the manufacturers made incorrect returns, but the percentage of those who did is said to have been remarkably high. One of the methods frequently adopted to bring down the total profits was to charge off as expenses proportions of the cost of special munitions plants.

A number of plants charged off the entire cost of such plants, deducting he amount from the net profits. Justification of this was attempted by the plea that the plants would be worthless when the war ended, and that it was apparent the war would not last much longer. Investigators reported that, while the special establishments would be worthless at the end of the war so far as the manufacture of muntions was concerned, they could be utilized in other ways and by no means would be a total loss.

As a result of the investigation, returns to the Government have been revised in many instances and will be in others, so that the total which the Government will obtain in taxes will be at leas $36,500,000.

Acivity of the Government's agents became known at plants which were about to be investigated, and a number of requests were received by the bureau asking that the returns be sent back for revision. One firm, which reported originally that it had made no profits, altered its report on reconsideration, while the investigators were at work in other plants, and before its own had been reached, and sent the Government a check for approximately $150,000 in payment of taxes.

The penalty for making false returns is a fine or imprisonment, or both. Officials have not yet decided what course they will take. The investigation is proceeding, though nearing a close.

Kerensky To Review "Command of Death"

PETROGRAD, June 22.—The "Command of Death," which is the official title of the women's regiment raised by the twice-wounded girl officer, Vera Buitchkareff, will be reviewed by Minister of War Kerensky. The regiment will have its first public parade on Sunday and will leave in a fortnight for the front, probably for the Minsk sector.

The Associated Press correspondent, who visited the barracks in Forgvaya street, found posted at the gate a little blueeyed sentry in a soldiers' khaki blouse, short breeches, green forage cap, ordinary women's black stockings and neat shoes. The sentry was Marya Skrydloff, daughter of Admiral Skrydloff, former commander of the Baltic fleet and Minister of Marine. In the courtyard 300 girls were at drill, mostly between 18 and 25 years of age, of good physique and many of them pretty. They wore their hair short or had their heads entirely shaved. They were drilling under the instruction of a male sergeant of the Volynsky Regiment and marched to an exaggerated goose step.

Married Woman Accepted.

Commander Lieutenant Buitchkareff explained that most of the recruits were from the higher educational academies or secondary schools, with a few peasants, factory girls and servants. Some married women were accepted, but none who had children. The girl commander said:

"We apply the rigid system of discipline of the pre-revolutionary army, rejecting the new principle of soldier self-government. Having no time to inure the girls gradually to hardships we impose a spartan regime from the first. They sleep on boards without bedclothes, thus immediately eliminating the weak. The smallest breach of discipline is punished by expulsion in disgrace.

"The ordinary soldiers' food is furnished by the Guards Equipage Corps. We rise at four and drill daily from seven to eleven and again from 1 to 6. The girls carry the cavalry carbine which is five pounds lighter than the regular army rifle.

"We are fully official and are already entered on the list of regiments. Yesterday the commander of the Petrograd military district reviewed us and expressed his satisfaction. I am convinced that we will excel the male fighters."

Asked as to the attitude of the male army Commander Buitchkareff said that only the Voynsky Regiment which led the Petrograd revolution, was really favourable.

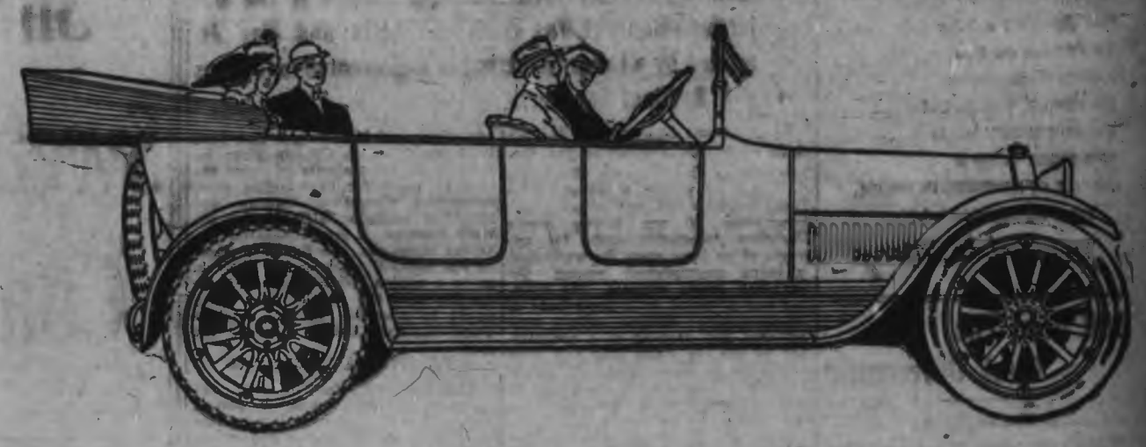
Studebaker



The Reasons for Studebaker's Leadership

STUDEBAKER is supreme in Canada because Studebaker Cars stand up and give the service.

The Series 18 Studebakers are even better than the Series 17.

They are maintaining the leadership the Series 17 established throughout the Dominion.

Because they embody ninety distinct improvements in mechanical construction, convenience and comfort over the Series 17.

Because they offer all the improvements, all the refinements suggested by four years' close study of the performance of 300,000 Studebaker Cars in actual service in every part of the world.

In them Studebaker gives you the QUALITY that stands up and gives service under the hardest tests on Canadian roads.

In them the many economies made possible by vast resources, the savings obtained through the development of steadily improved manufacturing methods and the installation of the latest and best labor saving machinery are turned to your advantage.

That is why Studebaker is able to offer you so good a car at so low a price.

That is why the Studebaker is a most economical car to buy.

It is economical to operate because Studebaker's "made-in-Canada" quality reduces "upkeep" to its lowest possible terms.

It is economical to drive because of great gasoline economy in ratio to power, because of great tire economy in ratio to weight and carrying capacity—Studebaker owners frequently get from 8,000 to 10,000 miles on a single set of tires.

It is economical to own, because it brings a very high second-hand value in case of re-sale or trade-in.

For these reasons you owe it to yourself to investigate the Canadian-built Studebaker before you buy a car.

Let us give you a Studebaker demonstration today.

POISONED SWEETS CAUSED DEATH OF ROUMANIAN PRINCE

The details of the death of little Prince Mircea, the youngest child of King Ferdinand, of Roumania, have just been made public here by Miss Loie Fuller, formerly a dancer, who arrived in New York recently from Bucharest, where she had been doing Red Cross work.

Notice of the death of the Prince, who was five years old, was published on November 4, 1916. A London cablegram announced at that time that the child had died of typhoid on November 2, but gave no details.

Miss Fuller, who is said to be an intimate friend of the Queen of Roumania, had left Bucharest shortly before Prince Mircea was taken sick, but, at Paris, several weeks afterward, she met the Roumanian Poetess, Helen Vacarescu, and was told by the latter that the Prince was the victim of poisoned candy dropped by German airmen into the streets of Bucharest and other cities in Roumania.

"Some of these candies fell into the garden of the royal palace," the poetess told Miss Fuller, "and the little prince, having just the same normal liking for candy that any other child has, ate as much of it as he could find. He fell sick almost immediately, and when he told about the candy he had found a search was instituted and more of the bonbons were found in the garden. An analysis showed that they were filled with typhoid germs."

T. Tilestone Wells, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Roumanian Relief Committee, No. 48 Cedar street, said that Miss Fuller before leaving New York for Buffalo and Cleveland had also told him about almost unbelievable atrocities committed by German and Bulgarian soldiers in the streets of Bucharest while she was there.

Miss Fuller has an autograph letter from one of the foremost British army officers in Roumania, describing conditions in that country as beyond all comparison worse than even in Belgium. Famine, disease and utter destitution exist even among those who were the wealthiest in that country, according to this letter. The wonder is, the writer says, that any are alive at all in some of the districts which he saw.

Profits For All

By the Practice of True Economy

Lend your money to the country where it can be used for national ends. The National Service Board is appealing to the country to invest in War Savings Certificates, to practise thrift, and to make every possible sacrifice that victory may be secured. It is a great campaign in the national interest. True economy is essential if the war is to be won. There should be individual examination of expenditures with resultant curtailment wherever possible. Money is being squandered every day that should be used to help the men in the firing line and that can be used, incidentally, to help yourself. True saving is only a better form of spending. To save money is to save capital, and capital means factories and mines and cultivated lands, the means of further production and the source of future wealth. It is true economy to put your money in War Savings Certificates where it can be used for war purposes while assuring you a safe and profitable return on your money. B-7.

FOUR THOUSAND DOLLARS HAVE BEEN SUBSCRIBED TO THE Y.M.C.A. FUND

Local Institution Will Open a Three-day Campaign Commencing Tuesday--Ten Thousand Dollars is the Objective---Banquet Was Held Last Night and Was Attended by a Large Gathering of Representative Citizens ---A Brilliant Speaker.

Eloquent and insistent was the address given last evening in the Empress Hotel when Captain (Rev.) W. A. Cameron, pastor of Bloor Street Baptist church and now overseas representative of the Young Men's Christian Association spoke for upwards of an hour upon the work that is being accomplished among the Canadian forces overseas. The meeting was attended by a large body of representative citizens who foregathered last evening as a preliminary to the big drive that will open on Tuesday when local Y.M.C.A. workers will conduct a campaign to raise a minimum of ten thousand dollars for the use of the local institution. Mr. W. R. Rundle, manager of the National Trust Company, Toronto preceded Captain Cameron in a lucid and forceful address. The meeting took the form of a banquet presided over by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P., president of the local branch of the Y.M.C.A. The oratorical part of the meeting opened with a toast to the King, proposed by His Worship Mayor Duffus who was introduced by Mr. Gillespie. The toast was responded to in the usual manner.

A FINANCIAL RESUME

Mr. J. J. Turner followed with a resume of the finances of the institution dating from the year 1913 when the Y.M.C.A., wound up the year with a clean sheet.

Subsequently it was decided to enlarge the building and thereby increase its earning power. The present year presents a need for money to wipe off the deficit carried over from 1915 and 1916 and provide for running expenses. The speaker explained that the Peterborough institution was only seeking about fifty per cent. of the amount that would be asked for a similar purpose in other cities of a comparative size. The objective of this campaign has been fixed at ten thousand dollars. "The institution is doing a great work," said the speaker. The boys of to-day are the men of to-morrow. This work is growing all the more important as a result of the present war."

A GOOD START.

Referring to the canvas Mr. Turner said that the preliminary campaign had netted about four thousand dollars including the following three subscriptions, Toronto Savings and Loan Company, $500; The Auburn Woollen Mills, $500, and Sir Joseph Flavelle, $500. Mr. Turner characterised the institution as an asset to the city. "The Y.M.C.A., is just as essential to the welfare of the city as any of the public utilities," said Mr. Turner in conclusion.

MR. W. E. RUNDLE.

The next speaker was Mr W. E. Rundle, President of the National Trust Company of Toronto. Mr. Rundle was introduced by Mr. Gillespie as an "enthusiastic Y.M.C.A. worker."

Mr. Rundle referred to the liberality of the people during the present struggle. No matter what the object was the result was invariably the same. Should the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. campaign achieve the objective it would be no exception to the rule. Mr. Rundle said that he supported the Y.M.C.A., as a business man because the Y.M.C.A., supported business men. As an institution it was responsible for the moral and mental development of men. Young men starting out in life cannot do better than form an immediate association with the Y.M.C.A.

THE AFTERMATH.

"Sometimes we consecrate our lives too much to business and neglect the development of our physical life," said the speaker. "Service was another phase of the Y.M.C.A. work, which young men could not afford to overlook. The institution should not be measured by the amount of money expended, but by the amount of service rendered to the community. The speaker spoke of the day of reconstruction, which will follow the termination of the war. Of the ultimate issue of the war there can be no doubt. Unless we can look back and know that we have suffered and have made sacrifices in this war we will not have accomplished very much."

Captain (Rev.) W. A. Cameron, pastor of Bloor Street Baptist Church, Toronto and special overseas representative of the Y.M.C.A., was the next speaker. "The one thing I want to emphasize here to-night, said the speaker, and that is the work overseas, is just the same as the work here. There is nothing like a great national trial to test the fibre of the people. You cannot judge the character of the people until they have been through the fire. No sooner had another Napoleon showed his head above the horizon in Europe, than there was a Wellington to meet him. Our Canadian boys rallied around the flag and heroes were born in an hour. The colonies answered—when the Mother Country is at war—we are at war too; at least nearly all parts of the colonies answered that way, added the speker. The fact of the matter is that those parts of the colonies which have not answered that way are soon going to be made answer that way. The Y.M.C.A. has simply found its soul in this great and glorious work overseas. When the war is over the institution will have had a new birth."

EXCEEDED OBJECTIVE.

Captain Cameron spoke of a number of successful campaigns that have been conducted in Canada since his return. In the majority of cases the amounts asked for were largely oversubscribed. Altogether, Canada was asked to subscribe $150,000 for the work overseas. A report received yesterday states that the fund has reached the $900,000 mark and is likely to go to a million. While in Quebec, the speaker told the people that they ought to subscribe to the fund as there was some things they did not give.

ON THE BATTLEFRONTS

The most powerful call to the Kingdom of the Highest is coming through the Y.M.C.A. It is true that on all the battlefronts as well as the prison camps in Germany. Whenever the soldier has gone the Y.M.C.A. has been on his tracks like a voice from Heaven. "Last year we spent thirty thousand dollars in writing paper alone, said Captain Cameron. It costs a thousand dollars a day to supply hot tea and coffee to the boys. We provide concerts for the boys. It is all very well to say to the boys, "you must not go into the wet canteen over there." We find it a better plan to provide counter attractions. Major Birks, of Montreal, gives his whole time, and that of his staff, free together with thousands of dollars, which he pours into the work. That is how the Canadian fund is administered so economically. Major Corbett was offered $20,000 a year to manage an Old Country estate. He refused saying "my services are at the disposal of the Y.M.C.A. Repeat your offer when the war is over and I may consider it." That is somewhat of a mirazle, said the speaker, when you consider that Corbett is a Scotchman."

A FALSE DISTINCTION.

One effect of the present war is the breaking down of that false distinction between the sacred and the secular.

"The Y.M.C.A. is rendering a national service in raising the spirit of the soldiers and maintaining the morale of the whole Canadian army. I have seen as many as two hundred and fifty men standing as close to a hut as it was possible to get listening to a gospel address inside. It is a wonderful ight. So far as the Canadian army in France is concerned they have kept their lives clean, despite reports to the contrary.

A WORD TO MINISTERS.

"If you don't get your audience in France in the first five minutes, the boys won't be there when the sixth minute comes around. That may interest my ministerial friends here," said the speaker. The boys do not go to sleep, they just walk out. I don't know why it should not be so. We do something more than try to get the boys make that great decision. We try to make them church soldiers. We are not trying to create a rival institution to the church or set up a new denomination. It is the church, united in various forms of work. If the church is not willing to relax and give up a little of that stiffness. If it does not show a little more practical Christianity, it deserves the failure which will surely come to it.

CRITICAL PERIOD.

Do you realise that the most critical period in your boy's life will begin the day peace is declared? It will mean the relaxation of discipline. The key to this situation is largely in the hands of the Young Men's Christian Association. If you do not strengthen their hands, we will be that much weaker to cope with the situation," said the speaker in conclusion.

A vote of thanks was tendered to the speakers of the evening on motion of Mr. R. J. Soden and Mr. R. Harstone. Both speakers referred to the good work accomplished by the Y.M.C.A.

Mr. Douglas Carlisle gave a solo during the course of the evening. He was accompanied on the piano by Mr. John Allan.

Many Liberals For The Bill

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 22. — The Star's (Liberal) Ottawa correspondent today says: The Liberal defection from the Laurier referendum amendment threatens to become a landslide. All the Liberals who spoke yesterday favoured the compulsion bill.

Mr. W. A. Buchanan has all along been known as a conscriptionist but Hon. Geo. P. Graham and Mr. W. E. Nesbitt have not been regarded as certainties by any means, especially as the former was on the committee which drew up the resolution upon which the Liberal caucus "get together." It looks as though Hon. Frank Oliver and probably J. G. Turriff and Levi Thompson will be almost the only westerners to uphold the referendum, while the anti-conscriptionist following of Manley German and Charles Murphy in Ontario may not be large. Quebec will be solid for the referendum and it will get quite a few quotes from the martime provinces."

ed, but no action resulted and the by-laws will doubtless be presented at a meeting of the Council, when all the members are present.

A STATEMENT.

The executive committee of the band has given out the following statement for publication to-day:

In discontinuing their weekly concerts in Victoria Park, the members of the 57th Regiment Band feel that their many friends and the public generally are entitled to an explanation of the circumstances which compelled their action. For many years this organization has been financed, in part, by the 57th Regiment and the City Council. A few years ago our city politicians commenced cutting, this grant down year by year, until the other night, the low water mark of $300.00 was reached. The amount appears to have fluctuated just in proportion to the need of some of the aldermen for the votes of a certain element, and the grant of Wednesday night is of the same proportions as that received by the ordinary country village band. On the other hand the Great War has not only taken nearly half of our membership to the front, but has deprived us of all military monies previously available and as the individual citizen is not asked to contribute one cent to our support, the nett result is that we are expected to "carry on" with a revenue of $300.00. This is an utter impossibility, and as a consequence, so far as concerts in the park are concerned, we are simply out of business.

The Band of the 57th Regiment has been giving park concerts continuously for almost half a century, and it is with feelings of deepest regret that we are compelled to make this announcement to our friends in the Council and the thousands who patronized our concerts.

Victory For Martin Is A Certainty

Special to The Examiner:

REGINA, June 23.— With election day only four days away, Saskatchewan Provincial elections are only now beginnin gto warm up. Reports which have been received in the Provincial committee rooms in this city from every part of the province go to show that the Martin Liberal government will achieve a sweeping victory next Tuesday. In the city itself there is no question that Premier Martin will be elected with a handsome majority. Indications are that new voters, the women, will rally to the support of the government which gave them the vote and which wiped the liquor traffics out of existence in the province.

SELECTIVE CONSCRIPTION.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Looking at selective conscription from a working man's point of view— by the working man I mean the actual producer— selective conscription is all a farce, that has been proved again and again during this terrible war. If conscription is to be introduced in our great dominion, let it be conscription, irrespective of wealth, influence or qualification. If a man of military age has any special ability or qualification along a particular line, there will be plenty of scope for his ability in the army. Win the war should be the slogan undoubtedly; production will look after itself. By that I mean almost every person has surprised not only themself but everyone else, as to how humanity can adapt itself. The boys of 16 years have risen to their responsibility and done a man's work. The female element has taught us many things, and another thing we may as well learn, is that there is no man holding a position but that there is another able to take his place, fill that position with equal aptitude and success. When a man dies another takes his place. As an example of men and youth rising to their responsibility take the flying corps young men from 18 to 21 years of age proving themselves more than equal to the elder people whom before the war were thought their superiors. In all probability if some of the influential people's sons were taken from the management of various establishments to go and give their time for their country on the battlefields of France or elsewhere, it is likely to give opportunity to dormant genius which under our present system of existence is cramped and eventually suffocated. Let us awake and give free access to the law of understanding for which this war is sent upon us. Let mind and genius have the opportunity to assert itself. The only way to do this is when the various drafts are called up, let there be no exemptions unless positively physically unfit for military service.

Not One Day Fit To Oil Streets This Year Said Engineer

"It is one of the most travelled streets in the city," said Mayor Duffus at a meeting of the Committee of the Whole, last night, when he asked City Engineer Parsons why McDonnel street had not been oiled this year. "A lot of cars and vehicles go out to Chemong that way, and the residents have been kicking about the dust."

Residents of other sections of the city would probably disagree with the Mayor's conviction regarding the main arteries of traffic that have not yet been oiled. However Mr. Parsons stated that the present supply was exhausted and an expected car had not yet arrived. McDonnel street had not been oiled for the reason that the preliminary preparation had not been completed in time. To which the Mayor replied that it should have been one of the first to be put into condition by the road labourers.

Ald. Stratton remarked that there were streets in the west end that appeared to have received a double dose. He mentioned Simcoe street west, Walton and other neighbouring streets.

Mr. Parsons attributed that condition to the temperature. The weather had been too cold to permit the oil to spray freely, and the steam used caused a greater quantity to flow.

"There hasn't been one day this year fit to use oil," he added.

MECHANICAL MILKERS

Increased Sales All Over the District Reported This Year

The sales of mechanical milkers are largely on the increase this year—an evidence of the satisfactory success attending this invention. Mr. F. J. Doughty, of this city, district representative for the Empire Mechanical Milker, reports that his sales have averaged four outfits per week since the beginning of the year—a result which should speak well for all concerned. Two Otonabee farmers, Mr. Andrew Evans and Mr. H. G. Fife, have both recently installed mechanical outfits. Last Thursday, Mr. Evans, of Otonabee, made a record for himself in milking 18 cows in 55 minutes, without any assistance. He is quite satisfied that he has overcome the laborious old hand system of milking. It is stated that the world champion cow, "Fanchar Farm Maxie," of New York State, has been milked by the Empire Mechanical Milker ever since she freshened.

HOME DEFENCE
The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.
What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?
Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?
You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfills that purpose as nothing else can.

The Germans Recruited Filipinos At $5.00 Each

But No "Insurrecto" Ever Did More Than Enroll and Take the Money—Said to Have Been the Centre of Plotting—1,500 Germans Are Under Close Watch.

CONSUL AT CEBU JAILED

MANILA, June 23.—The war has gripped Manila and the Philippines. Wherever one turns he sees on guard a soldier of the regular army, a sailor of the navy, or a Filipino guard taken from the Philippine Scouts. At the various military posts throughout the islands guards have been redoubled.

Already two Germans are under arrest as a "precautionary measure," so the Government explains. One of them apparently has been guilty of only the indiscretion of having talked too much. He had not concealed his intentions, in the tense days that preceded the declaration of war, of blowing up every piece of American Government property he could reach. So when war broke out, he was promptly clapped into jail.

The other arrest is a more serious matter. Conrad Andre, former German Consul at the important southern city of Cebu, for months has been the centre of rumors that connected him with a plot to stir up malcontents among the Filipinos to open revolt. These reports accused him of having kept lists of men who had figured in insurrections against the United States here. He was supposed to have offered $5 to each ex-insurrecto who would sign a document pledging his support to this revolt.

His agents worked in every part of the islands, and they attained considerable success—in getting signatures and finding men to accept the $5 bribe. But their success never went beyond that. There has never been a time in the Philippine Islands when the seeds of an insurrection were sown on more barren soil. Prosperity among the people, gratitude to the United States for concessions of autonomy, fear of an independent future at a time when the world was torn asunder by war, and loyalty to the present administration of the islands for a consistently pro-Filipino policy—all these facts have operated to keep every element of the population from joining in the Andre movement. Even the promise of German support and German money in a fight to gain independence seemingly had no weight. The most hardened enemies of American rule saw in the plan the project of a madman, and it never for a moment had a chance of success.

The authorities, however, are keeping a close watch on all Germans here. It is probable that there are nearly 1,500 Germans in the Philippines. Two-thirds of them are temporary guests, persons who sought refuge in the islands after they were driven from the neighboring British colonies, or members of the crews of the twenty-three interned German steamers which are now in the custody of the insular Government. The remainder are members of the permanent German colony of the country. Of the latter, there is little fear, but the war visitors are watched pretty carefully.

Every German in the Philippines has been compelled to register with the Manila police or the constabulary in the Provinces. Men in the Government service, of German birth, have been compelled to prove their citizenship.

For the present, at least, the military authorities are not interpreting too strictly that portion of the President's proclamation concerning enemy aliens which bars Germans from approaching within half a mile of any camp or fort. Strictly enforced, that regulation would close every German commercial house in the downtown district, would drive from certain residential districts Germans who made their homes there before American occupation, and would prevent Germans from crossing the two downtown bridges which span the Pasig River.

But the very day the proclamation was received, the constabulatory descended upon two of the biggest German houses in Manila and confiscated their entire stock of guns and ammunition. This was an easy task, as under the laws of the Philippines no one may even temporarily possess arms or ammunition without a permit.

The status of the German business man in the Philippines is of vital concern to the islands, and there was general rejoicing in business circles when Governor General Harrison announced that contracts between Americans and German subjects, not having a relation to the war, were not per se invalid. He further announced that the insular Government would pay all German claims for goods already delivered and would not cancel contracts to the military interests of the United States.

German capital is very heavily interested in Philippine industries. Much of it has helped to develop the islands, and it is feared that any drastic interpretation of the laws of war would mean a serious commercial setback to the country.

Planks Laid Down At The Recent Convention Of The National Council of Women

What has been called a genuine Woman's Parliament was in almost continuous session in the Old Law Courts in Winnipeg during the last ten days of May, when the National Council of Women, a body representing practically all the federated women's clubs in Canada, assembled in its 23rd annual conventoin.

A parliament composed of representative women from every part of the Dominion from Halifax in the east, to Victoria and Vancouver in the west, from Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Brantford, Peterboro, Port Arthur, Winnipeg, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat, Lethbridge, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton, of women of every age from eighty to eighteen; of every style of mind and body from Early Victorian to 20th Century or Futurist; of the most diverse beliefs on religious, educational, social, nay even on political questions, but with the solidarity of sex behind them, and each and all filled with the desire to measure up to the new standards of citizenship now within the grasp of Canadian women, and to do their share adequately in nation building.

The result of the deliberations was embodied in a series of planks laid down, and summarized below:

One of the most non-contentious planks of the future platform of the Council was that relating to Public Health. It was laid almost without a murmur. The constructive resolutions passed numbered among them the following:

Resolved, "That the National Council of Women of Canada, believing that the usefulness and happiness of a nation are largely conditioned by the physical condition of its citizens, and that it is the duty of the State to provide care and training for those who are either permanently or temporarily unfit for normal life, advocates the following measures:

"1. The establishment of a Federal Bureau of Health, to co-ordinate existing health authorities and introduce a Dominion-wide policy for safeguarding health and treating disease.

"2. The establishment of institutions—preferably on the farm colony plan—for the care and training of the blind, deaf and crippled, with the view of fitting men as far as possible for normal life.

"3. And more especially for the custodial care and training of the mentally defective, so that then our happiness and the safey of the community may be secured.

"4. The provision of free treatment for venereal disease and the adoption by the health authorities of immediate measures to arrest its spread, in cooperatin with the educational and religious authorities.

"5. The Council would impress upon all organizations of women the duty of safeguarding or securing pure food, pure water and healthy houses and public places, and of the need of cooperation among all those working for these ends."

The platform of the Council on Immigration was outlined in the appended resolutions, after much lively discussion of present immigration policies of our government and their results:

"Whereas the selection and assimilation of the new citizens is the most important task of Canada at the present time; and,

"Whereas, party and private interests should not be permitted to control or sway those employed in this task;

"Be it resolved, That the National Council of Women advocates that the control of immigration should be placed under a non-party commission appointed by the federal parliament, which should include a representation (both men and women) who have been studying the question, and working among foreign immigrants, and that the commission should deal with the following points, among others:

"(a) The methods of appointing and qualifications of immigration officials with the view of eliminating political consideration and securing the appointment of suitable persons;

"(b) The methods to be adopted to secure the admission of desirable immigrants only. (Medical inspection at residences; alienist at port and border, etc.)

"(c) The best method of absorbing the foreign immigrant into the national life, while preserving their national gifts. (Bureaus and Handbooks; Education.)

"(d) The openings in Canada for various classes of English-speaking immigrants — teachers, nurses soldiers; cares for the well being of the country;

"And further that women who have received the vote should register in order to better record their votes, and should encourage others to do so, and should also do all in their power to encourage the candidature of persons of high character (of whatever party) for public positions;

"And further, that the principle of proportional representation, as provided for the representation of minorities, should be carefully studied and discussed."

A third related to Education and Recreation, and the policy of the Council, was thus laid down:

"Whereas, a well-balanced system of education is among the greatest safeguards of a democracy; and

"Whereas, character is trained not only in places of learning but also in places of education;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the National Council of Women hereby affirms it belief that the teaching profession is of supreme importance in the community and that every means should be adopted by adequate remuneration and consideration to attract into its ranks men and women of the highest mental and moral calibre, and that no considerations should weigh in making appointments except the capacity and fitness of the candidate.

"2. That the aim of the school system should be to train the children as good citizens of the Dominion and the Empire, and that therefore the education throughout the Dominion should be standardized and revised in the ligth of new conditions brought about by the war.

"3. That the educational system must be broad enough to care for the foreign immigrant—child and adult—so as to weld the nation into a homogeneous whole.

"4. That true education should train the taste and senses as well as the mind and body, and should therefore include music (especially choral singing), the principles of art, as well as physical training and technical education.

"5. That the health of the children should be protected by medical inspection of the pupils and of the school premises.

"6. That it is the duty of every community to provide supervised playgrounds for its children, to encourage places of amusement and recreation which are not a menace to young people through evil suggestion and temptation. As one means of securing this, all Boards of Censors should include women in their membership."

Another plank which went down without much disagreement was that relating to Employments and Professions for Women. The policy of the Council was laid down as follows:

"Whereas the war has brought to many women new economic conditions, and whereas training is necessary for efficiency, be it resolved that the National Council of Women affirm the necessity of adequate technical training for girls as well as boys, and that vocational training be afforded in the senior classes. Further, that there should be Bureaus of Employment under Government; Government Registration of Nurses and Teachers; and Training of Domestic Help.

The plank on Conservation and Thrift was not laid so easily as there developed a broad diversity of opinion among the delegates as to how much of the present high cost of living was due to the actual working out of the laws of supply and demand and how much was due directly to speculation and high piracy among the manipulators of supplies and cold storage plants, etc. One resolution went through without contention, that relating to the need of having all canned goods marked with the weight and such weights standardized. It read:

Resolved: "That in view of the great variety of sizes of cans and of the weight and value of the contents, the government be asked to have standardization of all canned goods, that is, that tomatoes, vegetables, jam, etc., have regulation size tins, and that canned goods have the net weight on the tin."

One of the briskest discussions of the sessions of the Council developed when the question of compulsory military training for school boys came up in the following resolution, which was introduced from Victoria Local Council:

Resolved: "That the National Council of Women do urge upon the Federal Government the necessity for giving a naval or military training to every boy in Canada capable of receiving it, in order to fit him for the defence of his country."

Two proposed amendments were lost along with this, the original motion, but after a whole morning's threshing out of the question a recommendation brought in by Professor Caroline Derrick of Montreal, was unanimously endorsed. This asked for physical training of both boys and girls up to the age of 18, in all schools by educationalists, not military trainers, with compulsory military training from 18 to 20 of all young men, but also asked that decisive action be delayed until after the war as neither pacifists nor militists were at this moment in any fit state of mind to get together on any such desired action.

In the section on Conservation and Thrift the following resolutions dealing with Child Welfare were unanimously endorsed:

"Whereas the children are the greatest asset of the nation, be it resolved, that the National Council of Women record its belief that the conservation of child and infant life should be a first care of the State, and that all voluntary organizations of women should cooperate in this work, and that they should use their influence as voters to emphasize the need of proper care of the children;

"And to this end the National Council of Women recommends that a Department of the Federal Bureau should be devoted to the study and care of childd life;

"And also that pensions be granted to mothers in cases in which it becomes necessary for the mother of young children to become a wage-earner.

"And whereas the shadow of famine lies upon the world, be it resolved, the National Council urges upon the Federal Government the necessity of regulating the consumption of food supplies, and of using the registration for National Service in order to supply as far as possible the need of farm labour;

"And that the Council urges all women to do their utmost by spending wisely, as well as by producing and preserving fruit and vegetables, to assist the government to secure an adequate food supply for the nation and also for exportation."

HYDRO COMMISSION AND LOCAL STREET RAILWAY

Ready to Proceed on Monaghan Road —Moving to Improve Jackson Park Service.

A letter from the Hydro Electric Power Commission to the Council last night announced their readiness to proceed with their share of the extension of the Charlotte street line of the street railway as soon as the city begins the grading of Monaghan road.

The Commission also acknowledged the receipt of the petition of west-end residents for an improved service on the Jackson Park run. An investigation of the service had previously been made by the Commission, who added that the travelling public of Peterborough was not being lost sight of. The only obstacle preventing the present improvement of that line was the impossibility of securing switches and other material. An effort was being made to buy second hand equipment and when this was obtained the service would be improved.

RESOLUTION TO GOV'T FOR TRANSPORTATION OF COAL

Purchase of Railway Equipment and Transfers from U.S. Urged.

A resolution from the Kitchener Board of Trade was endorsed by the City Council last night urging the Government: (1) that the recommendation of the Royal Commission regarding the purchase of railway equipment be acted on at the earliest possible date; (2) that the transfer of coal and freight between Canadian and United States points, in Ontario, be immediately carried on under the direction of the Dominion Railway Board.

The resolution which the Council passed was prefaced by a reminder of the precarious condition of the fuel situation in most Ontario communities last winter. The danger of a repetition of that danger was becoming apparent now in the scarcity of railway equipment, the scarcity of labour, the demand for coal and other concomitant influences.

SUFFERING CATS! GIVE THIS MAN THE GOLD MEDAL

Let folks step on your feet here after; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out. This drug is a sticky ether compound but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue.

It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Cut this out, especially if you are a woman reader who wears high heels.

Soldiers' Wives Appeal for the Young Men's Christian Association

Upwards of 1,000 fathers from Peterboro have gone to the front. Hundreds of mothers have been left at home with lads hard to control. They need the good help which our "Y" provides. Our "Y" fills the gap in very large measure and in very many cases---the gap caused by the fathers absence, or by his death.

Mr. F. H. DOBBIN states that there are now 654 families on Peterboro's Patriotic Fund list, and that 1082 families have received assistance from this Fund since the war started. Many officers are not on the list of those receiving help, and this is also true of many fathers who have enlisted elsewhere. There are therefore probably 600 or 700 Peterboro fathers who have enlisted.

Said One Peterboro Mother—"The boy (aged 13) has no father, so he will not mind me, he often leaves home at 11 o'clock at night, even though I tell him to stay in. I can't do anything with him."

Said Another Mother—"The boy's father is at the front, and the boy is in mischief all the time. I will pay for a "Y" ticket, for I will feel safe he is with you."

Several boys were arrested for breaking windows in the old Murray St. Baptist Church. One mother protested against the fine imposed by the magistrate as her husband was at the front—implying that this circumstance was responsible for her boy's waywardness.

Numerous other instances could be given of wrong-doing punishable by law by boys whose fathers are away fighting or dead.

These boys need the Y.M.C.A. at this critical time of their lives. So we are again reminded of the fact that there is no limit to the possibilities of the Y.M.C.A. work, although the scope of the "Y" work will be limited if funds are not immediately provided.

The "Y" in Peterboro does save—is saving—our boys. A "Y" boy is under the best influence. His associations are helpful and stimulating. "Y" boys work off harmlessly—even beneficially—their animal spirits in the "gym" and educational classes employ them profitably.

Let's keep the Y.M.C.A on its job by providing the necessary $10,000

$10,000—Why One Boy is worth more than that.

Yours for the Fatherless Boy

Government said Mr. Graham, in view of the statement made recently by Sir Sam Hughes.

Larger Problems of Conscription.

Mr. Graham devoted a considerable portion of his speech to consideration of the larger problems of conscription as outlined in the resolution which he drafted last week. He declared for the compulsory enlistment of wealth by means of an income tax on the rich man, for the raising of more money by taxation, so that a war-prosperous Canada might not shift the whole burden of war debt to the shoulders of the people when the men came home from overseas and war orders were no more. He declared for Government action to compel industries in Canada now concerned only with the production of luxuries to turn their attention to the production of essentials. He asked that the women of Canada be organized as was now being done in the United States to prevent waste in the home. He urged measures for the distribution of labour to the farms. He pointed out that the public could scarcely be expected to have much confidence in a Government that appointed only Conservatives to such positions as Fuel Controller and Food Controller.

Election Will Clean Up Situation.

In regard to the referendum amendment he declared that the verdict of the people would be given soon in a general election, and that this method was the best to clear up the whole situation. The people could decide by their vote what they wanted their representatives to do, and to whom they would entrust the responsibility of complete national organization of war work.

Sir Thomas Gives General Promise.

Sir Thomas White, who followed Mr. Graham, urged the seriousness of the war situation, the final failure of the voluntary system and the immediate necessity of conscription for military service. As to the conscription of wealth, he gave ony general promises that "everything that was necessary" to raise funds would be done. But he gave no specific promise as to any further war taxation, for this year at any rate.

Council Objects To Millions Loan To The Railways

Mayor Duffus talked in terms of millions last night when he moved, seconded by Ald. McIntyre, that a protest be sent to the Government against the proposed loan of $14,000,000 to the C.P.R., and $7,000,000 to the C.N.R. and that other municipalities be requested to endorse this memorial. Recalling some parts of [illegible] W. H. Denham's speech at one of the banquets last winter, Mayor [illegible] stated that the Government had sanctioned a triple line of railway [illegible] the lake front. When the [illegible] make them pay [illegible] to the Government [illegible] the Government [illegible] million [illegible] said the [illegible] on a [illegible] crossing [illegible] the [illegible] Indians [illegible] of doling out millions to them.

Ald. Stratton replied that this question might well be left to the Government without municipalities attempting to interfere.

Ald. McIntyre thought that the time was ripe for some interference if anything could be accomplished.

Mayor Duffus stated that the Hydro-Electric Radial project would never be a success against competition of that kind.

"They're spoon fed," remarked Ald. Dobbin.

The motion carried.

APARTMENT STAIRWAY MUST COMPLY WITH THE CITY'S BUILDING BY-LAW

The wooden balconies and stairways on the south side of the apartments in Bennett & Goodwill's building on Water street are being constructed contrary to the building by-law respecting fire proof conditions, Engineer Parsons reported last night.

Ald. Dobbin moved, seconded by [illegible] that the [illegible] comply with the [illegible]

WEEK-END SERVICES OF SALVATION ARMY

By reason of the illness of the son of Mrs. Major Walton, it will be impossible for Mrs. Walton and Mr. Jennings to conduct the special week-end services. There will be no inside service to-night at the Temple but a great open-air meeting at the corner of Simcoe and George street. The services to-morrow will be conducted by Adjt. and Mrs. McElhiney as usual. The Temple Band will play the Oddfellows down to Little Lake Cemetery, to-morrow afternoon, at 2.30 and, if possible, will get back to play a tune in front of the Theatre for the Y.M.C.A. campaign. The Band will be excused from the open-air meeting at night, and the Gongsters will take heir place.

The Young People and the Band will have their open-air meeting at the corner of George and Charlotte street, at 6.15, as usual.

The open-air service to-morrow morning, at 10.15, will be at Park and Sherbrooke street.

THE NAME C.P.R. FOOT BRIDGE SURVIVES STILL

Ald. Dobbin Proposed to Denominate it the Burnham Bridge.

Of the members of the Council, Ald. Dobbin is unquestionably the most sentimental. Many of his suggestions and proposals bear evidence of that note in his character. A little example of it and his love of the Peterborough of yesterday was shown at last night's meeting of the Council when he suggested that the C. P. R. footbridge be called the Burnham bridge.

Ald. Langford replied that the people would call it the C. P. R. footbridge however the Council might designate it. And that rather obvious observation silenced finally of the effort to christen the new footbridge [illegible] which naturally attaches [illegible]

Forecasts More War Taxation

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 23.—Sir Thomas White, Finance Minister forecasts more war taxation.

93rd BAND INSTRUMENTS MAY SOON BE USED HERE

Hence the Council Did Not Accede to Gen. Hemming's Request.

With sufficient musicians to form a band at number three headquarters, Kingston, General Hemming asked the Council in a communication at last night's meeting for the loan of some of the instruments of the 93rd Battalion Band. They would be placed in the hands of none but competent players, he said, and would be well taken care of.

Ald. Stratton remarked that before long the instruments would probably be required for a new Peterborough battalion, when Col. Walker and the Mayor "started rustling around," and on that account a reply should be forwarded to Gen. Hemming that the Council hoped to have them used in Peterborough. And such will be the context of an answering letter from the City Clerk.

NO REDUCTION IN PRICE OF FORD CARS

Mr. Duffus, Ford dealer for this district, has received a letter from the Ford Motor Company, stating positively that there will be no reduction in the price of Ford Cars on August 1st as in former years.

This letter also states owing to the increased price of material and other conditions in connection with manufacturing, that instead of a reduction there will probably be an increase.

The Sergeant-At-Arms

(By H. F. GADSBY)

OTTAWA, June 14.—Most people think of the Sergeant-at-arms as the special custodian of the mace. He is that, but he has other duties, too. One of these is to keep track of the furniture of Parliament and to prevent the statesmen of the day taking away everything that isn't nailed down. Sometimes this keeps Colonel Smith pretty busy, as will be seen from his correspondence with the Hon. Albert Sevigny, ranging from February 1st, 1917, to May 1st.

Mr. Sevigny is the brilliant young Nationalist who recently carried the by-election in Dorchester and was rewarded by being made Minister of Inland Revenue—the reward being handed over before the election was pulled off. Before that Mr. Sevigny was speaker of the House of Commons and as such formed a profound attachment for the brio-a-brac in the Speaker's chambers. An affectionate disposition does form ties that way even when the surroundings are only temporary. The books, pictures, music, china, cutlery, victrolas and such, particularly if they are of any value, creep into one's heart and are relinquished with a pang.

The articles Colonel Smith has succeeded in getting back from Mr. Sevigny, with the assistance of the Auditor General, the Deputy Minister of Justice and a sharp interchange of letters, include one typewriter, one typewriter desk, one filing cabinet and a Victrola Style XVI. Style XVI is the largest style, but not larger than Mr. Sevigny's passion for music. It pleases one to think that, while Mr. Sevigny did not neglect the practical side as shown by his choice of typewriter and filing cabinet, he also catered to the aesthetic side of his nature by snatching the Victrola and the raw material of a great deal of melody in the shape of two record cases, nine albums, twenty-one twenty-five cent records, thirty-five dollar and quarter records, seven dollar and a half records, eleven two dollar records, one two dollar and a half record, eleven three dollar and a half records and one six dollar record. Anyone who has ever collected the euphonious disks know what a lot of music one can get for one hundred and thirty dollars.

But not too much for Mr. Sevigny's needs. Music, we know, hath charms to soothe the savage beast and the more savage the beast the more music it takes. The Victrola in question was saved from the parliament building's fire and, to save it from other fires, German measons and things of that sort, Mr. Sevigny sent it to his home in Quebec. In thus saving the Victrola from future dangers he merely carried into effect that policy of thrift which Sir Thomas White never tires of preaching. But he has another high national purpose in view in sending the Victrola to Quebec—he did it in the interest of harmony. We can imagine him inviting Henri Bourassa and Armand Lavergne to tea and then melting them to his will with a few records on the Victrola.

For statesmen of Bourassa's and Lavergne's calibre Mr. Sevigny would, of course, put on no record that cost less than a dollar and a quarter. Popular opinion of the humbler sort he would influence with the twenty-five cent records, including such gems as "Some Little Bug Will Find You Some Day," "Who Broke Ham on Mother's Forehead?" and so on. My own impression is that Mr. Sevigny is not to blame for those twenty-five cent records, for he has a cultured ear. They were probably a hang-over from Dr. Sproule's regime. The Doctor, as I remember, chose his music by the standards prevailing in his home village of Markdale. Mr. Sevigny has an educated taste. He has a pleasing light tenor voice of his own and frequently joins in with Carmo, John McCormick, and the other caged canaries.

While Mr. Sevigny was inviting his soul with this concourse of sweet sounds in Quebec, Colonel Smith down at Ottawa was keeping a sharp eye on the vagrant victrola. He was determined that it should not stay from its own fireside, even if there was a fire. So he started writing about it officially—about it and the record albums and the typewriters and the filing cabinets and certain other things he missed. Pictures—a Gainsborough—another picture called in the Parliamentary return asked for by Messrs. Gauvreau and Lanctot, "Sweet Cords of Love." It may be a mis-spelling, but I like that word Cords—there must be lots of love around when you can pile it up that way. The pictures go to show that Mr. Sevigny has as great a love for Art as he has for Music.

Colonel Smith, as I said before, began to write about the furniture on February 1st, drew the Auditor-General and the Deputy Minister of Justice into it somewhere in March, and brought the correspondence to a successful issue with all the strayed articles back in Ottawa on May 1st. About the time Colonel Smith was invoking the Auditor-General and the Deputy Minister of Justice to loosen Mr. Sevigny's clutch on the victrola, the correspondence lost its cold officialism and got real snappy. It was at that stage of the game that Mr. Sevigny wrote to Colonel Smith that he was too busy working for his country to send the goods back. He also intimated that his opinion of Colonel Smith wasn't fit to print. Of course, he didn't put it that way. What he said was, "I prefer to make no comment on your conduct in this matter." Colonel Smith was in the same box. He preferred to make no comment on Mr. Sevigny's conduct in the matter and simply wrote another letter stating that he would like the goods sent f.o.b. Ottawa, after which he would see that they were carefully stored until they were needed again.

The correspondence has a happy sequel. The victrola—and the rest of the outfit—is now back in Ottawa after being a year from home. It got here May 1, and Speaker Rhodes is now enjoying the victrola which but lately enchanted the ear of Mr. Sevigny. The first record Speaker Rhodes played on the restored Victrola was the six dollar one—the Sextette from Lucia. Speaker Rhodes is young, his blood is rich, and he likes the best of everything.

Mr. Sevigny, among other explanations, said that he had lost $1200.00 in the House of Commons fire. He seemed to hint that one victrola, style XVI, and one hundred and thirty dollars' worth of records was hardly an adequate solace.

Rumor has it that Mr. Sevigny similarly deported four bulls from the Experimental Farm for the benefit of his constituents in Dorchester, three of which he turned into a benevolent neutral and reduced to igoble toil, and the other of which he ate. Which prompted Jacques Bureau to remark, "It's a good thing that victrolas are not edible."

American Vessel Sinks Submarine

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Another submarine fired on and sunk by an American ship, was reported to-day by the ship's crew on reaching an Atlantic port. The American vessel was not damaged.

BATTLE STORIES FROM THE WEST FRONT

Very Plain Speech From An American-German Soldier

His shrapnel wounds in arm and shoulder, though not dangerous, were somewhat extensive, and he was newly back from the hottest kind of fighting; but it was not at all the fighting that this particular English officer was most concerned to talk about. That he dismissed very shortly.

"How are we getting on- Oh, there's nothing to worry about in that direction. The job just now is getting rid of Boches; and I can tell you it's going on at a great rate. I fancy it would startle even our people, let alone the people in Germany, if they knew the exact truth about the rate at which the Huns are being laid out. Of course, I know nothing about the figures, but I do know what I've seen with my own eyes; how thick their dead lie on the ground. If their people knew the truth of it, they'd revolt and call off the whole business. But instead of the truth—well, look at the official German casualty lists republished in our papers from their's. For the month of April: Prisoners 533! and we and the French took forty thousand of them during that month. Of course, I know the list does not say that it includes all the casualties that occurred in April; but only that it's the April list. But you can guess what the people in Germany are meant to think about it. 533 against 40,000. And the figures in killed and wounded would startle them a good deal more; especially the killed.

"But, look here! I can tell you something more interesting than all that. I've seen a Boche who really understands the whole business. Absolutely unlike any other Hun I've seen. I suppose you must call him a Boche, because he was born in Munich, he said, and serving in the German army. But I reckon most of his native Bochery must have been purged out of him by living among civilized people. Then again, he spoke English not a bit like a foreigner, and altogether it was difficult to realize that he was a Hun at all. For years he had been dealing in land and mines and things in America; doing pretty well, I should think. It happened he was on a visit to London when the war threatened. He'd never taken out papers as an American subject, you see, and he was afraid of being interned, or something; so he skipped out of England the day before the declaration and got into Germany. For a long time he was employed on special work in Germany, but when the Somme push was on last year he had to join up, and has served on different parts of the front. He was on the Russian front for a bit. I was wounded when we got this fellow. I was being helped back. I suppose there were fifteen or sixteen of us wounded, together, and we came on this bunch of Huns in the old cellars that had had some makeshift head cover fixed over them; twenty-three of them there were. Matter of fact the man I'm talking about carried me for a quarter of a mile, and I believe he could have carried two like me.

"He didn't look like a Boche, you know; more like a Norwegian sailor; a sort of a viking, you know; pointed yellow beard and light blue eyes; most wonderful eyes you ever saw, that chap had. A fine looking man, I must say, and how he talked! Well, I believe he'd draw crowds as a public speaker; I do really. The other Boches with him they looked dingy-looking, half-starved cattle, by the side of that man. You know the beefy kind of animal heads they have. Among such a gang this chap looked perfectly splendid. Look here! I've got it written down here, the sort of thing he said. I wrote it that evening in the Clearing Station. I wanted to remember all I could. But, of course, it doesn't give you the way the chap talked. And I'll say this for him, he was no coward. He paid no attention to shrap and that sort of thing, while we were going back, though the Boches with him were fairly grovelling. This was the kind of thing:

"This war is the greatest crime the world has ever seen. The crimes that made the French Revolution are nothing if you compare them with the crimes of the beasts who are running Germany to-day, and keeping this war going. They were only thieves and brigands when they began it, and thought they'd bring it off; but now they're the bloodiest murderers by wholesale that the world ever produced. There never was anything like it before. They know perfectly well they've lost the war; they've known for months that the last chances they ever had have gone. But they are frightened of their own miserable skins to admit it and call a halt; and because they are frightened of what the people might do when they learned the truth, they keep the thing going, and sacrifice many thousands of Germans every single day, and millions of money—what for? To shield the reputations of a handful of princes and politicians. It's the greatest crime the world has ever known. Here on this front our people are being killed like flies. Your artillery kills them in bunches. There isn't a minute of the day but legs and arms are being blown off. Our men would gladly give themselves up to end it, but you know they cannot. When there seems to be a chance, there is always an officer or N.C.O. about. It is not only your guns that kill. Many Germans fall every day with German bullets in them. They are driven like dogs to the fighting. And to what end? Because our cursed Kaiser and the creatures we call statesmen are afraid of their lives for what will happen to them when the people know it's all up.

"But plenty of them know it now. Many knew before even I was forced to join up. And perhaps I never should have been made to join if I had known less, and never said a word of what I did know. I talked a little of what I knew. And that is enough. In Germany to-day the man who tells the truth must be hustled out of the way. That is why I see no hope for Germany; because those left in the country seem so quickly are the nothing. All the strength of the country, such as it is, is in the fighting lines; helpless as slaves. The others, there in Germany, they are slaves; starving, starving quietly, never daring to say a word. The few who speak soon find themselves hustled into the front line; and no more is heard of them. They go on paying the price; thousands of lives every day; every single day. The Central Powers' casualties now must be a hundred thousand a week—all for what? The crazy dreams of a few bankers and mercenants, and the cowardly fears of a few politicians and of—of the Hohenzollerns. They say the Hapsburgs, too; but the Austrians would be thankful to make peace to-morrow, but they cannot. They are as much sacrificed by Berlin as we poor devils here on the front. All the bloody slaughter of this war, with its milliards of money and thousands of lives lost— every single day—what keeps it going long after it has been finally decided is not the will of nations. No, it is the murderous criminality and cowardice of a little handful of men in Berlin who never have been anything but a pest in Europe.

"Is not that the greatest crime the world has ever known? And is it not strictly true? Does any sane German suppose the appointed end can be altered, when the whole New World is ranged against Germany as well as the Old? They know all about the hundred million men in the States; and the millions of millions of money; the innumerable factories and ship-yards. They know that America can put hundreds of thousands of fresh troops on this front next spring; and that the exhaustion of Germany long before then will be frightful; is frightful now; has been frightful for a year and more. They know it all; and, brute devils that they are, they choose to keep the awful slaughter going; not because they hope it can alter the end, but for what you call, 'Wait and see!'; because they fear to face to-day what they can put off till to-morrow, at the cost of another few thousand decent lives; another few milliards of money. Never before since the world began has a twentieth part of such suffering been allowed to continue, day after day and month after month, to protect a handful of exalted criminals from general recognition of their crimes. The Russian people rose and smashed the bonds that bound them. Yes, But not our people. Our tyrants have been much cleverer. It was only the bodies of the Russian people that were fettered. Their minds were free. No German mind, in Germany, has been free since 1870. The Berlin criminals have seen too well to that. Our people think they have been well educated. So they have; very well; very carefully —for just what they are doing now; for the blindest and most damnable kind of slavery the world has ever seen; for a slavery in which the will of the masters must be paid for daily by steadily running streams of the blood of thir victims; victims taught to bare their own throats to the knife, on the word of command. If your armies could reach Germany itself, the slavery might end suddenly. But Germany to-day is one vast prison full of starving slaves who cannot life a hand to help themselves, and that it will remain while William the Murderer can go on buying a daily reprieve for his own miserable family, in return for the blood of ten thousand of his slaves. Thank God I am out of it!"

ENJOYABLE RECITAL HELD

The large number who attended the piano recital of the pupils of Miss Mary Lonergan, A.T.C.M. held in the Recital Hall of Greene's Music store were amazed and delighted by the splendid work of the little pupils all of whom reflected great credit on the training and efficiency of their teacher. Special mention is due the performance of the second-year pupils Margaret Baumer, Muriel Gosselin, Mildred Greene and Lucille Doris for the skill and talent they displayed. The work of the tiny tots in their first year was interesting and very pleasing. The following excellent programme was presented:

Duet—The Village King—Marion and Mary Timm.
Piano Solo—Old Folks at Home—Greta Welbourn.
Piano Solo—Zephys from Melodyland—Amy Fairbother.
Violin Solo— Mazurka — Baden Greene.
Piano Solo—Melody — Margaret Doris.
Piano Solo—Frolics—Clara Allen.
Duet—Marche Militaire—Margery Cox and Mildred Greene.
Piano Solo—Carnation — Mary Timm.
Piano Solo—Peasant Dance—Gerald Greene.
Vocal Solo—Sweet Vale of Avoca—Miss T. O'Donnell.
Piano Solo—Andantino and Capricietto—Lucille Doris.
Piano Solo—Joyous Moments—Muriel Gosselin.
Duet—Bugle Call, Military March—Martha Baumer and Lucille Doris.
Piano Solo—The Butterfly—Mildred Green.
Piano Solo—Tzraalette—Martha Baumer.
Duet—Loves Caprice—Violet Bennet and Muriel Gosselin.
God Save the King.

The splendid violin selections by Baden Greene a pupil of Miss Mirson Telgmann were greatly appreciated.

Cocchi Confesses To The Murder Of Miss Ruth Cruger

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 23.—Confession at Bologna, Italy, by Alfred Cocchi, that he murdered Ruth Cruger, was reported in the press despatches to the police heads today. According to their information, Cocchi made a clean breast of the murder when under interrogation by Italian police authorities at Bologna yesterday.

Arrested.

NEW YORK, June 22.— Cocchi has been under observation for several weeks; the Italian authorities moved promptly on receipt of advices through American Ambassador Page requesting that he be detained. He was arrested on Thursday in Bologna.

Digging Up Cellars.

Police to-day began digging in two new cellars for the bodies of other girls who may have met Ruth Cruger's fate at the hands of the Italian motor-cycle shopkeeper, Alfredo Cocchi. Cocchi, who formerly had shops above both these basements.

"Other developments in the probe of the Cruger murder mystery, including a letter from the Cruger girl's father to Mayor Mitchell demanding the removal of Woods and condemning the inefficiency of the police in his daughter's case, came fast in all the many ramifications of the case.

Attempts have been made to get to Consuelo la Rue, an informant of the woman detective, Mrs. Grace Humiston, who found the Cruger girl's body. Miss La Rue is in Polyclinic Hospital, recovering from a jump from a window to escape white slave pursuers. A double police guard has been placed at the door of the girl's room.

To Probe to the Bottom.

The District Attorney's office says this girl made a statement to show an organized white slave traffic existing between the United States and South American countries, in which Cocchi may have had a hand.

Meantime Police Commissioner Woods instructed Inspector Faurot to "get to the bottom of the entire Cruger and White slave situations and spare no one."

The Commissioner announced that he has found that between 700 and 800 girls have been reported missing in New York since Jan. 1.

Police Women Grab Suffragettes Outside White House Gates

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Escaping a line of police outside of suffrage headquarters to-day, two militant pickets bore a banner to the White House gates and were promptly arrested by two police women. The police characterized the affair as a "Surprise attack" but the police women were on hand within a few minutes after the pickets arrived.

Russia Rejects Idea Of Separate Peace Says Ambassador

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 23.—A storm of cheers that echoed and verberated throughout the capital greeted Prof. Boris Bakhmetieff, head of the Russian mission and new Ambassador to the United States, when he told the House to-day that "Russia rejects any idea of a separate peace."

LITTLE WORRIES IN THE HOME

These Bring the Wrinkles and Pallid Faces That Make Women Look Prematurely Old

Almost every woman at the head of a home meets daily many little worries in her household affairs. The care of her little ones, the work about the house all contribute to these worries. Most of them may be too small to notice an hour afterwards, but they constitute a constant strain that affects the blood and the nerves and make women look prematurely old. The effect of these little worries may be noticed in sick or nervous headaches, fickle appetite, tiredness after slight exertion, and the coming of wrinkles which every woman dreads. To those thus afflicted Dr. Williams' Pink Pills offer a speedy cure; a restoration of color to the cheeks, brightness to the eye, a hearty appetite and a sense of freedom from weariness. Among the many thousands of Canadian women who have found new health and strength through these pills is Mrs. G. Strasser, Aetna, West, Ont., who says: "I am the mother of three children and after each birth I became terribly run down; I had weak, thin, blood, always felt tired, and unable to do my household work. After the birth of my third child I seemed to be worse, and was very badly run down. I found the greatest benefit from the Pills and soon gained my old-time strength. Indeed after taking them I felt as well as in my girlhood, and could take pleasure in my work. I also used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones and have found them a splendid medicine for childhood ailments."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or you can procure them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PRESENTATION MADE TO FORMER LOCAL MINISTER

The Napanee Express says: Rev. C. F. Cragg, B.A., who has served Grace Church for the last three years as Pastor, farewelled on Sunday last. A large congregation was present to hear him on the occasion of his parting address, the Church being taxed to its utmost capacity, and many turned away. He spoke from the words: "Be Strong and of Good Courage."

After the service in the auditorium the friends of Mr. Cragg were asked to repair to the School Room for the purpose of bidding a good bye. Mr. and Mrs. Cragg were invited to the platform, when Thos. Symington, Esq., was called on to speak the good bye, which he did in a very happy way, after which he presented Mr. Cragg with a purse of gold, and Mrs. Cragg with a beautiful music cabinet.

Mr. Cragg replied for the purse presented, and Mrs. Cragg, in her most happy and prettiest manner for the cabinet, after which Mrs. Black presiding at the piano, all joined in the singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds," thus closing a very happy and successful three years pastorate.

The best wishes of the entire community follow him for a greater usefulness in his new field of labor in the far West as an Ambassador of Jesus Christ.

Mr. ...ng, who was formerly pastor of Mark Street Methodist Church, Peterborough, is leaving shortly to take charge of the Wesley Methodist Church, Lethbridge, Alta.

Council Finally Decides Upon The New Fire Apparatus

The Council rehearsed the fire apparatus arguments last night with all the earnestness and freshness that might have been expected of a preliminary discussion. This was something of a dress rehearsal and the members were letter perfect in their lines. They finally resolved to purchase the combination chemical engine and hose waggon, motor driven of course, but not before Ald. McIntyre had made a bid for the triple combination with the added pumper. Ald. Smith supported his motion that ignored the additional expense which it was stated would leave a deficit of $6,000 this year.

Ald Stratton proposed an amendment that only the chemical engine and hose waggon combination be bought this year. It was poor judgment and the height of folly, he stated, to create an overdraft such as the motion contemplated. Manufacturers and business men wouldn't go into an undertaking of that nature themselves. Besides the step was not entirely legal.

Ald. Taylor seconded the amendment. It carried, and immediately the Council chrystallized its six months of "serious consideration" by adopting a motion to proceed with the purchase of the double combination chemical engine and hose waggon, which is not likely to be delivered before October. It will be preceded by the Chief's runabout in a few days.

WEDDING BELLS

WHITE—WARREN.

An interesting wedding was solemnized this afternoon in All Saints' church, Rev. Mr. Grobb officiating, when Oliver, son of Mr. and and Mrs. Arthur White was united in matrimony to Elizabeth Ellen Warren. The bride, who entered the church on the arm of her brother, looked very lovely in a navy taffeta dress and large leghorn hat. She was attended by Miss Minnie and Doris Warren, whilst Mr. Frank White supported the groom. Little Miss Violet Warren and Lillian Farthing were flower girls.

Mr. White returned a few months ago from France, where he served with the 21st battalion, and where he was wounded. He is financial secretary of the Great War Veterans' Association.

Mr. and Mrs. White left on the 3.45 for a brief honeymoon at Niagara Falls.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM CHARLTON.

The death occurred last night of a well known and highly respected resident of Lakefield in the person of Mr. Wm. Charlton, who passed away at the age of 78 years. The late William Charlton was born in Ireland, but had lived nearly all his life in this district, having been a resident of Douro township for many years and for the past fifteen years having resided in Lakefield. His wife predeceased him three years ago. Four sons, Robert, William, Sam and David of Lakefield and two daughters, Mrs. Ingram and Mrs. Garbutt, of Douro survive.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock to Little Lake cemetery.

BRITON AND AMERICAN.

Edith M. Thomas, in The New York Times.

We fought you once—but that was long ago!
We fought you once, O Briton hearts of oak;
Away from you—from parent stock—we broke,
Be glad we did! Because, from every blow
We hurled in that old day a force did grow
That now shall stand you, level stroke by stroke—
So Heaven help us, who but late awoke,
The charge upon our common race to know!

And we will stand with you, the world to save—
To make it safe for Freedom (as we free have been).
Now shall you see our mutual banners wave
As one upon the wind—a sight most brave! . . .
We once did fight you—ev'n as next of kin
May cleave apart, at end to closer win!

Mrs. Manson Comstock is in Colbourne for a short visit.

Lt.-Col. Mills is in the city for the week-end.

Mrs. E. R. Tate, "Bendennis," Lakefield, is in the city to-day.

Perhaps the most delightful and successful of the numerous recitals which have been held lately, was that given last night by the pupils of Miss MacLaren and Miss White at the Conservatory of Music. A special feature amongst the other splendid numbers was the solo by Mrs. Fred Hall, a pupil of Miss MacLaren's Sing Sing Birds on the Wing. Twenty pupils took part in the recital.

Two Women And A Dog And Dripping

Here is a moving tale of a lady, a woman, a dog, and some goose dripping, quoted from the Berlin Zeitung am Mittag.

Frau Giselda Hemminghausen (the lady) had, in return for eleven shillings in hard cash, procured one pound of goose dripping, which she placed on the sideboard in an open tin. In passing, however, she knocked it down, and the greasy mess was spilt on the floor. Nevertheless, Frau Hemminghausen might have succeeded in saving a portion of it had not her servant (the woman in the case) possessed a dog which licked it up till nothing remained but the bare boards.

This was too much for Frau Hemminghausen to suffer, although, as the wife of a magistrate, she might, perhaps, have been expected to display a certain degree of dignity and philosophic resignation. Rushing into the kitchen, she flew at the maid (who knew nothing of the greasy tragedy), clutched her round the neck, and nearly strangled her. The frightened woman, freeing herself with the greatest difficulty, snatched from the fire a frying-pan in which some eggs were cooking, and flung the bubbling mess over her mistress' head. The lady, howling with pain, retaliated by hurling a bucket at the woman, who fell with a heavy thud to the ground. The knife-cleaning boy hurried to her aid, and at the same instant the dog with an angry growl set its teeth in the lady's leg. Finally, the field was cleared by some tenants of the flat overhead, who summoned the police.

Frau Hemminghausen was cited to appear before the Third District Penal Court to answer a charge of violently assaulting her maid, but as she was a magistrate's wife the summons was quashed. The woman, who was rather seriously injured, was discharged from her situation with the present of £5 as compensation.

IN MEMORIAM.

In memory of Miss Emma Reid, who died June 16, 1917:

A loved one from us is gone,
Her suffering and pain are past,
And all her work on earth is done;
She is numbered with the blest.

Dear one, she has gone to the rest,
We miss her from her home,
She's gone to dwell where angels dwell,
Where sickness ne'er can come.

Her relatives and friends may meet
To spend a social hour,
But her dear face will not be there,
To meet them any more.

But she has learned to trust a friend,
Who is ever a friend indeed;
And, leaning on His mighty arm
She trusted Him to lead.

And oft times, when tempted,
No doubt she heard Him say:
"Fear not, for I am with thee,
And will be all the way."

Calmly she sleeps in Jesus now,
The warfare it is past;
The battle fought, the victory won,
And she wears a crown at last.

Her lot was cast midst trouble,
Oft times her heart made sore,
As one by one her loved ones,
Passed to the other shore.

And now she's crossed the river,
Her face no more we'll see;
But in the bright forever,
A starry gem she'll be.

Heaven retaineth now our treasure,
Earth, the lovely casket keeps,
And the sunbeams long to linger,
Where our dear friend does sleep.

Peaceful be thy silent slumbers,
Peaceful in thy grave so low;
Thou no more can join our number,
And no more our sorrow know.

Yet again we hope to meet you,
When the day of life is fled;
With joy in heaven to greet thee,
Where no farewell tears are shed.

Oh the wish, the wish so sweet,
That you soon in heaven to meet;
There we all shall happy be,
Rest from pain and sorrow free.

—Mabel.

IN MEMORIAM.

In Memoriam of Miss Alice Waterman, who died June 17th, 1917.

We shall meet, but we shall miss thee,
There will be one vacant chair;
We shall never in this wide world,
Look upon thy face so fair.

At our fireside, sad and lonely,
Often will our bosom swell,
At remembrance of the story
How thee, dear friend, did leave.

How you strove to bear the burdens
Through the thickest of the fight,
And uphold our Saviour's honor
In the strength of mortal's might.

Angels called, thee, Alice, darling—
Called thee to their sunny home;
And we know that thou art waiting,
For the dear ones here to come.

Oh, we long to hear the singing
Of that bright immortal throng;
Hear the gold harps gladly ringing
In that happy land of song.

Angels called thee, Alice, darling,
Called thee in thy early bloom;
Now thy form it is lying
In thy cold and silent tomb.

They have called you, Alice, darling,
From all care and pain away,
To the realms of joy eternal—
To that land of purest day.

We will miss thee, oh, so sadly,
Quiet now thy hands and feet;
Brightest eyes are closed forever,
Gone the smiles that were so sweet

True they tell us wreaths of glory,
Evermore will deck thy brow;
But it soothes our anguish illy,
Sweeping o'er our heartstrings now

Sleep, to-day, oh, early fallen,
In thy green and narrow bed;
Dirge from the pine and cypress,
Mingle with the tears we shed.

—Mabel E. Huggins.

THE SILVER WEDDING OF MR. AND MRS. W. J. QUIBELL

Occasion of a Happy Reunion at Their Home Last Night.

A very enjoyable event was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Quibell, 216 Dublin street, last evening, the 25th anniversary of their wedding. Progressive euchre was the amusement for the first part of the evening, the winners being Miss R. Seymour and Mr. W. J. Quibell, after which a dainty luncheon was served followed by a dance. About 40 guests were present, the out-of-town visitors being Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Chadwick, Miss Marian Chadwick and Mrs. M. Alexander, of Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Quibell were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents, showing the esteem in which they are held. All join in wishing them many more years of happy wedded life.

A MASTER FOOD Grape-Nuts

Enemy To Hold Lens At All Costs

Germans Offering Furious Resistance in Any Further Advance in Souchez Valley--Lens the Only Remaining Outpost Protecting Lille.

By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent in France.

Canadian Army Headquarters, June 23.—The furious resistance offered by the enemy to any further advance along the Souches Valley in the direction of Lens indicates his intention to hold that city at all costs as a sole remaining outpost protecting Lille, and the great industrial region of which Lille is the centre.

A little over two months ago the enemy's hold appeared to be as secure as at any time since the beginning of the war. The two ridges, Messines, about 10 miles northwest, and Vimy, about eighteen miles southwest of Lille, were held in such strength that their impregnability was subject to frequent boasting. Now both Vimy and Messines ridge are firmly in our possession, and to the northeast of Lille the advance has been pushed almost to the bank of the Lys, which is a poor defensive substitute for the commanding heights surrendered to the impetuous assault of Haig's army.

The progress in the south has been less spectacular, but nevertheless important. The enemy's defences are unquestionable crumbling beneath the unending shelling. In the picturesque phrase of an officer, "we have been throwing foundries and munition plants at the Boeche."

The capture early in the week of a small triangle of German trenches west of Reservoir Hill has been followed by most persistent efforts on the part of the enemy to recover the lost ground. On the front south of the Souches stream the enemy has been equally unquiet. Gas shells have been entirely used by both sides. This involves the frequent use of gas masks. The gas shells are more often discharged by night than in the daytime.

On other parts of the line prisoners have been captured who were recently serving in Eastern Europe. There is a marked increase in the number of young lads in the enemy's trenches. Recently a few boys have been captured of the 1919 class—that is immature lads of 18.

TRADES AND LABOUR NOTES

By The Official Scribe

There was only a fair attendance at last Wednesday's meeting, but the subjects were very interesting and ably debated. G. L. Myland, of the Typographical Union, was the presiding officer.

Empire Theatre on Fair List.

Delegates from the I.A.T.S.E. and M.P.O. reported the signing of a contract with Dr. Robinson, which makes this city a 100 per cent. union for playhouses. Thanks were also given the Musicians for assistance rendered.

Independent Labour Party.

This was again brought up, as so many other Ontario towns are busy along organisation lines. It is remarkable the strides that the Independent Labour Party are making, and even the doubters can see that Labour is more and more asserting itself, and will eventually be heard in our Legislative Halls. Peterborough will keep on hammering away till it has got as good as any other Ontario city for a Greater Peterborough without Labour representatives would be incomplete.

Sir Sam's Rash Statement.

Sir Sam's accusation that Labour men opposed to conscription ranked as German spies came up for keen criticism. It was decided to write and ask the Secretary of the Dominion Trades Congress to take issue with the non-extinguishable late Minister of Militia.

Conscription and Socialism.

These two subjects were more or less topics of interest, the former being preferred to be exercised over wealth as soon as it was with health. The volunteer, medically examined and pronounced fit, in nine cases out of ten gives all his capital when he goes to the trenches and risks his life to save the lives and property of those who can continue to roll around in luxurious cars and enjoy all the comforts that wealth provides.

Conscription of both health and wealth is the only satisfactory solution, but it was offered that the voluntary system would not be so dead if the pay of $1.10 per day was raised to a more liberal rate to suit the H. C. L.

Next meeting July 4th.

Women Barbers Take Places of Male Shavers

SYDNEY, N. S. W.—On different occasions, in past years, attempts have been made to employ women as barbers in Sydney and Melbourne hairdressing saloons, but the attempts have always failed.

But war conditions have brought women into many trades where their presence, three years ago, would not have been tolerated. The army has levied its toll on the barber's profession, and women assistants are appearing in the Sydney saloons as a necessity, rather than a novelty. One large company, which control establishments all over the city, announces that it has added a number of young women to its staff. They are all daughters of a barber at Bulli and in the shop there they learned their father's trade. They have been received gloomily by the male assistants, but there are few of the customers who object to the novelty of being shaved by a woman.

The hairdressers' union held a meeting and decided that women had an equal right with men to earn their living as barbers, provided they were paid the same rate of wages and submitted to the same labour conditions. The union considers that, so long as there are male hairdressers available, the attempt to employ women is bound to fail.

United States To Take Action

Will Protest Against Chile's Detention of British Steamer

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 25.—It is expected the United States government will immediately take issue with the government of Chile for detaining the British freighter Montifond on the ground that she carried a gun which was for defensive purposes only. All other South American neutrals have agreed that this does not constitute a reason for detaining a vessel, but Chile insists on being somewhat pro-German.

SUBSTANTIAL INCOMES FROM A DAIRY HERD

What did your best cow earn for last year? A seven-year-old grade in a herd near Oxford Mills, Ont., that milked from March 30, 1916, to Jan. 30, 1917, gave 363.9 lb. fat, which at 46 cents per pound equals the substantial sum of $163.76. Perhaps you got more.

Fortunately, the owner of this herd is keeping records of each cow that he owns and has the satisfaction of knowing that six out of his fifteen cows earned over $150.00 each.

With milk weighed every tenth day, and a composite sample tested once a month, the actual yield of each cow for her full period of lactation can be found with but little trouble.

Milk and feed record forms are free on application to the Dairy Division, Ottawa. A study of records should mean an increase in your cow's earning capacity by at least fifty per cent. in three years.

Are Allies To Withdraw In East

Suggestion That the Macedonian Campaign May Be Abandoned---Cannot Accomplish Much There Without An Army of a Million and a Half.

(By Herbert Corey)

WASHINGTON, June 23.—Constantine was hurriedly bounced from the throne of Greece. Now the allies are considering the abandonment of the Macedonian campaign.

The two things may be related to a greater fact. It may be that after three years of dissension and difference and the sort of diplomacy that the diplomats should be arrested for, the Allies are finally going to get together and figh out the rest of this war on common sense plans.

These things may mean that the east is to be abandoned. Russia may be left in that orgy of talk in which the Russians are plunged. Roumania may be left "to paddle her own canoe."

It is of no present consequence if Germany establishes a strangle hold upon that Bagdad corridor she has wanted so long. That corridor will belong to the side that wins the war.

Two months ago I stated that the allies were then seriously considering the abandonment of Macedonia. Now a confirmatory story comes from Paris. Great Britain wants to let go, it seems. The French are willing, but do not see how it can be done. The Allies have caught a bear by the tail out there. The catching was easy, but the letting go is apt to swell the casualty column. Here is the situation:

It is difficult to provision the allied expedition in Macedonia. Malaria took one-half the strength last summer.

Approximately 450,000 allied troops are with great difficulty containing 350,000 inferior troops of the Central Powers.

BIG ARMY NEEDED.

The allies cannot accomplish anything unless they put in an army of a million and a half men and try to cut the Constantinople railroad line.

There is not a million and a half men to spare anywhere. There is not the shipping with which to provision them. The sensible thing to do is to withdraw from a campaign in which the Allies have but two chances—and both to lose.

But it is difficul to withdraw. Saloniki, the one allied base, would be a valuable submarine base if turned over to the Germans. It would be almost impossible to get enough ships to handle 450,000 men in the snappy time that operation would demand.

To get back to Saloniki for a withdrawl by water would involve a very difficult military operation. The front is from 50 to 100 miles from Saloniki. Most of the route of withdrawal would be across an open plain. The pursuing enemy would be continually on the high ground, for the plain slopes to the sea.

Withdrawal might be accomplished through Greece. Look at the map.

Saloniki might be abandoned. The allies could fight their way back through Greece. The greatly needed harvest could be taken on the way. Athens could be held as long as the allies have a gunboat on the sea. All this could easily be done, if the Allies were in no danger of military action by the Greeks.

THIS THE EXPLANATION?

In this may be the explanation of Constantine's fall. He was adored by his people. His army was devoted to him; therewas a league of reservists 60,000 or 70,00 strong, that was supposed to be well armed, and once war began his forces would be strengthened. It must not be forgotten that, conceding that the allies were better liked by the Greeks at the beginning of the war, blundering diplomacy has left little love for them in the Greek heart.

So that the allies have fired Constantine, have arranged to deport the strong men who made up his entourage, have seized the heads of the Greek army, have disbanded the army and disarmed the reservists, and have taken military possession of Greece. It is the first firm, common, sensible, straightforward action they have taken in Greece during the war. A potential menace to the rear of their Macedonian army has been destroyed and a retreat through Greece becomes not only feasible but a rather obvious course to take.

RUSSIA AND HER ALLIES

(By Sanborn Gove Tenney)

Around the seething Russian caldron are gathered the enemies of freedom and civilization, each seeking to cast in a subtle poison that may spoil the brew. Fanatic, visionary, theorist, the self-seeking, the ignorant—are all there, and guiding them is the Teuton playing on the passions and prejudices of the motley group. The flames of the faggots illumine the scene, but outside is a realm of darkness which the gaze of these conjurers of chance seems unable to penetrate. So intent are they on their plans that they have not yet realized what lurks beyond that wall of black, but hidden there is a fate as potent, unrelenting, and irresistible as the fate of the old Greek tragedy. It is personified in this issue by a nation relentless and pitiless in the event of treason to the Allies. It is Japan. In this conflict against imperialism and despotism she is on the side of freedom; she destroyed the Gibraltar of Germany in the East, and to-day stands strong in finance, with a superb army and navy and unscathed by war. Men have wondered that Japan has taken no greater part in the war, and the reasons assigned for her failure to do so have been far from convincing. The writer predicts that it will be found that Japan is holding herself in reserve for the situation that may arise in Russia. England, whatever may have been her shortcomings in this conflict, has not failed in any respect through ignorance. Her knowledge of every transaction of importance has been well nigh complete, as many in this country can attest. To the slightest detail she has recorded in her archives every salient fact that relates to foreign relations or international commerce. England knew that Russia might break down through the treachery of the Czar and the pro-German court, and it is probable that the hazard of the Gallipoli campaign was risked in order to gain the Dardanelles and bring pressure to bear upon Russia to remain loyal, or, in the event of her defection, to oppose her intrigues. Kitchener set out for Russia to stem the pro-German tide, and would doubtless have succeeded in the task. The Germans foresaw his success and took his life. There is but one safe path for Russia. Should she deviate therefrom a dark future stretches out before her through a weary waste of years. In loyal league with the Entente she will develop to an extent that will astonish the world. If, on the other hand, she shall now desert her friends, Japan will impose the penalty that belongs to the deserter. Cut off from her supplies, with no outlet for her exports, plunged in strife, financially ruined, she is at the mercy of the people of the Mikado, and they are keen and they are strong.

Every friend of the Russian people should exert his influence to obviate a delapsion in this crisis, for the storm cloud lowers, and only internal harmonyy can avert a catastrophe. Let the Russian factions beware. An attempt on the part of Russia to make a separate peace is to invite another war, for Japan stands guard and is ready and able to carry out the plans of the western powers.

GERMANS IN UNITED STATES.

Of "enemy aliens"—that is of persons born in Germany and the three countries controlled by Germany — there are in the United States, according to computations just made by the Director of the Census Bureau, approximately 4,662,000, or about 4 1-2 per cent. of our total population. As a very considerable number of these are not "alien enemies," in the proper sense of that term, and as the number of American-born descendants of Teutonic immigrants, who are now really hostile to us would hardly counterbalance that of the "enemy aliens" who are not hostile at all, it is not surprising that the Kaiser's expectations of effective influence to be exerted here by the people whom he counted as Germans, have been disappointed.

And before the war we were told in threatening tones that there were in the United States anywhere from 20,000,000 to 40,000,000 residents who constituted an "empire within an empire," and would see to it that the other American residents were kept in order!

As a matter of fact, Germany's real allies in this country are the pacifists, not one of whom, of course is a German, for every German is by definition a militant, a believer in war, and willing to wage it for good cause given. It is not our Germans but our pacifists, especially those in Congress, who are doing their best to delay and make ineffectual our military preparations, and whatever thanks the Kaiser owes to anybody here he should direct to them. He can be sure of their gratitude for any expression of his affection.—New York Times.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"You are too kind-hearted, Siddle," he cried. "Wot's the use of talkin' rubbish. We all know where the body was found. We all know that Doris Martin an' Mr. Grant were a-sweetheartin' in the garden——"

"Look here, Hobbs, just keep Doris Martin's name out of it!" shouted Elkin, smiting the table with his fist till the glasses danced.

"Gentlemen!" protested Siddle gently.

"It's all dashed fine, but I'm not ——" blustered Elkin. He yielded to Ingerman's out-stretched hand.

"I seem to have brought discord into a friendly gathering," came the mournful comment. "Such was far from being my intent. Landlord, the round is on me, with cigars. Now, let us talk of anything but this horror. If I forget myself again, pull me up short, and fine me another round."

Siddle half rose, but thought better of it. Evidently, he meant to use his influence to stop foolish chatter.

CHAPTER V.
THE SEEDS OF MISCHIEF.

Ingerman was a shrewder judge of human nature than the village chemist. As well try to stem the flowing tide as stop tongues from wagging when such a theme offered.

Tomlin created a momentary diversion by clattering in the bar. After this professional interlude, Ingerman ignored his own compact.

"I'm sure you local residents will be interested at least in hearing something of my wife's career," he said. "There never was a more loyable and gracious woman, and no couple could be more united than she and I till some three years ago. Then came a break. She was independent of me, of course. She was a celebrity —I a mere nobody, best known, if at all, as 'Miss Melhuish's husband.' Nevertheless, we were devoted to each other until to her and my lasting misfortune, a certain author wrote a book, which when dramatised, contained a part for which my wife's stage presence and talents seemed to be peculiarly suited."

Siddle stirred uneasily, but the others were still as partridges in stubble. Ingerman did not intend to alarm the shy bird of the covey, however.

"I name no names," he said solemnly. "Nor am I telling you anything that will not be thoroughly exposed before the coroner and elsewhere. From that unhappy period dated our estrangement. My wife fell under a fatal influence which lasted, practically unchecked, until the day, if not the very hour of her death. Do—I blame her? No—a thousand times, no! You see me, a plain man, considerably her senior. I had not the gift of writing impassioned love passages in which she could display her artistic genius. When I came home from the city, tired after the day's work, she was was just beginning hers. You know what London fashionable life is —the theatre, a supper, a dance, some great lady's 'reception,' and the rest of it. Ah me! The stage and literature, and the arts generally, are not for poor fellows moiling in a city office. You gentleman, I take it, are all happily married——"

"I'm not," said Elkin, "but I'll lay you long odds I will be soon."

For some reason, this remark produced a certain uneasiness among his friends. Tomlin stared at the ash of one of the cigars "stood" by this talkative Londoner; Hobbs, whose glass had reached a low level again, examined the dregs almost fiercely; and Siddle seemed to be about to say something, but, with his usual restraint, kept silent. Then Ingerman made a very shrewd guess, and wondered who Doris Martin was, and what Hobbs's cryptic allusion had meant.

"Good luck to you, sir," he said, "but—take no offence—don't marry an actress. There's an old adage,—'Birds of a feather flock together.' I would go farther, and interpolate the word 'should.' If Adelaide Melhuish had never met me, but had married the man who could write her plays, this tragedy in real life would never have been."

"D——n him," muttered Elkin, fiercely. "He's done for now, anyhow. He'll turn no more girls' heads for a bit."

"An' fire minutes since you yapped at me like a vicious fox-terrier for 'intin' much the same thing," chortled Hobbs.

Siddle stood up.

"You ain't a-goin', Mr. Siddle?" went on the butcher. "It's 'ardly 'arf past nine."

"I have some accounts to get out. It's near the half year, you know," and Siddle vanished unobtrusively.

Hobbs shook his head, and gazed at Elkin as though the latter was a refractory bullock.

"Siddle's a fair-minded chap," he said. "He can't stand 'earin' any of us 'angin' a man without a fair trial."

Ingerman had marked the chemist for more subtle treatment when an opportunity arose or could be made. At present he was not sorry such a restraining influence was removed. The next half hour should prove a golden one if well utilized. He was right. Before the inn was cleared, what between Elgin's savage comments and the other men's thinly-veiled allusions, he knew all that Steynholme could tell with regard to Grant and Doris Martin.

Grant's first thought next morning was of the girl who had been thrust so prominently into his life by the death of another woman. That was, perhaps, the strangest outcome of the tragedy. Doris was easily the prettiest and the most intelligent girl in the village, a rare combination in itself, even among young ladies of much higher social position than a postmaster's daughter. But her father was a self educated man, whose life had been given to books, whose only hobby was the culture and study of bees. He had often refused promotion, solely because his duties at Steynholme were light, and permitted of many free hours. In his only child he found a quick pupil and a sympathetic helper. On her own accord she took to poetry and music. In effect, had Doris Martin attended the best of boarding schools and training colleges, she would have received a smattering of French and a fair knowledge of the piano or violin, whereas after more humble tuition, it might fairly be said of her that few girls of her age had read so many books and assimilated their contents so thoroughly. From her mother she inherited her good looks and a small yearly income, just sufficient to maintain a better wardrobe than her father's salary would permit.

Grant, newly settled in Steynholme, found the postmaster and his daughter intellectually on a par with himself, and this claim could certainly not be made on behalf of the local "society" element. The three became excellent friends. Naturally, the young people spent a good deal of time together. But there had been love making—not a hint or a whisper of it!

And now, by cruel chance their names were linked by scandal in its most menacing form, since there was no gainsaying the fact that Doris's star-gazing on that fatal Monday night was indissolubly bound up with the death of Adelaide Melhuish.

For the first time then, the notion peeped up in Grant's mind that the whirligig of existence might see Doris his wife. But the conceit resembled the Gorgon's teeth, which when sown ing the ground sprang froth as armed men. The very accident which revealed a not unpleasing possibility had established a grave obstacle in the way of its ultimate realization. Already there was a cloud between him and the Martins, father and daughter. To what a tempest might not that cloud develop when the questionings and the innuendoes of the inquest established an aura of suspicion and intrigue around a perfectly innocent meeting in the garden of The Hollies!

Grant ate his breakfast in wrath. In wrath, too, he glanced through the morning newspapers, and saw his own name figuring large in the "story" of the "alleged" murder. The reporters had missed nothing. They had even got hold of the "peculiar coincidence" of his (Grant's) glimpse of a face at the window. His play was recalled, and Adelaide Melhuish's success in the title role. Then Mr. Isidor G. Ingerman was introduced. He was described as a man fairly well known in the city." That was all The press could say nothing as yet of marital disagreements, nor was any hint concerning Doris Martin allowed to appear. But these journalistic fire works were only held in reserve. "Dramatic and sensational developments" were promised, and police activity in "an unexpected direction" fore-shadowed.

All of which of course was mere journalistic paraphrasing of circumstances already known to the writers, and none the less galling to Mr. Grant on that account.

And there was no answer from the Commissioner of Police at Scotland Yard. True, the over night telegram might have reached the department after office hours. Grant like most members of the general public held the vague belief that government officials do very little work. Still, one might reasonably expect better things from an institution which was supposed to safeguard law-abiding citizens.

Calm analysis of Ingerman's nebulous threats had revealed a hostile force not to be despised. Possibly the man was already in league with that narrow minded village constable, so every passing hour made more urgent the need of a trained intelligence being brought to bear on the mystery of Adelaide Melhuish's killing. Grant racked his brain to discover who could possibly have a motive for committing the crime. Naturally his thoughts flew to Ingerman. Surely that sinister looking person should be forced to give an account of himself instead of, as was probable, being allowed to instill further nonsense into the suspicious mind of P. C. Robinson.

There were two morning deliveries of London letters in Steynholme, one at eight and another at half past ten. Grant waited until the postman had left a publisher's circular (the only letter for The Hollies by the second mail.) Then in a fever of impatience, he jammed on a hat and went out. He would wait no longer. He would telegraph Scotland Yard again and, incidentally, demand an audience at the post office.

No sooner had he entered the high road than he saw P. C. Robinson on guard. That important person was standing on the bridge, apparently taking the air. He was nibbling the chin-strap of his helmet; both thumbs were locked in his belt. From that strategic position three roads came under observation.

It was a fine morning, and Grant's sense of humor was not proof against this open espionage. He smiled and determined to take a rise out of "Sherlock" as Bates had christened the policeman.

The bridge lay a hundred yards to the left. The road was straight until it curved around the house and its shrubberies, so the view was blocked on that side. Grant filled and lighted a pipe with a deliberateness meant to be provoking, glancing several times doubtfully at P. C. Robinson, who of course was grandly unaware of his presence. Then he strolled off to the right, and when hidden, took to his heels for a hundred yard sprint. Turning into a winding bridle path, tucked between hedges of thorn and hazels, he walked to a point where it crossed a patch of furze. At a little distance a hand bridge spanned the river and gave access to the eastern end of the village by a steep climb of the wooded cliff. The path in fact was a short cut to that part of Steynholme.

He sat on a hump of rock and waited. It was a boyish trick, but very successful. Within three minutes at the utmost, P. C. Robinson hurried past, using a stalking, stealthy stride which was distinctly ludicrous.

The eyes of the two men met but Grant alone was prepared.

"Hello, Robinson," he cried cheerfully. "What's the rush? Surely our rural peace has not been disturbed again?"

Robinson knew that he had been "sold," but rose to the occasion.

"Excuse me, Mr. Grant," he puffed. "Can't wait now. Have an appointment. I'll see you later."

Honor demanded that he should not relax that swift pace. Unhappily the path up the cliff was visible throughout from Grant's rock, so on reaching the summit, Robinson was a-boil in more ways than one. Moreover, peeping through the first screen of trees that offered, he had the mortification of seeing the man who had befooled him go back the way he came.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

Suffered From Severe Headaches
FOR TWO YEARS

Headaches are many and varying; but when the head starts to ache you may be sure there is some chief cause. The stomach may go wrong, the bowels become constipated, the blood may not circulate properly, but the presence of the headache clearly shows that unless the cause is removed some other baneful disease is liable to assert itself.

Burdock Blood Bitters has, for the past forty years, been curing all kinds of headaches and has proved itself to be a remedy that cures where others fail.

Mr. I. N. Petershen, Dnieper, Man. writes: "I am only too glad to be able to state that I derived wonderful benefit from Burdock Blood Bitters. I suffered from severe headaches for two years. I was treated by several doctors but received no benefit until by chance I heard of B.B.B., and I at once procured two bottles and in a short time I was completely cured. I am and always will be grateful for what Burdock Blood Bitters has done for me. I am glad to recommend it to all who suffer from headaches.'

B. B.B. is the oldest and the best known blood medicine on the market to-day, having been manufactured for the past forty years by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HAMBURG SEES THE LIGHT.

Realizes Its Shipping is Gone and Paves Way for Other Industries.

How hard Hamburg has been hit in its economic life by the stagnation of the German shipping trade is again emphasized by reports in the German press of the speech made by the President of the Hamburg House of Burgesses preceding the passing of a motion by that body the first week in May providing for the organisation of a committee of ten members of the House of Burgesses and five members of the Senate "for the preparation of the State measures which are necessary in order, after the war, to obtain for Hamburg's trade, shipping and industry the necessary bases for reconstruction and fresh expansion." In his speech the President, as quoted by The London Times, said:

"Even our hardly tried Eastern Provinces are, as regards their losses —apart from the loss of life—in an advantageous position as compared with Hamburg, because it will be easier to repair their losses with money. Houses which have been destroyed or burned out can be rebuilt, losses of cattle can be made good, and the fields can be sown again, if the necessary money is there. But what has been destroyed in Hamburg cannot simply be restored with money.

"Hamburg's prosperity depends upon trade and shipping; both have been almost completely destroyed. Simple restoration is impossible, because all the threads have been severed which united Hamburg with the whole world. The resumption of these communications will be infinitely difficult, in view of the hostility of the whole world, and in view of the pitiless competition of our enemies."

It appears that Hamburg intends to agitate for the annexation or acquisition of certain Prussian territory and also for railway concessions, development of waterways, and other special objects. But the main feature of the new policy is an attempt to restore Hamburg by making it an important industrial centre, so that it can make a living out of the home market. In an article on "Hamburg's Reconstruction" the Hamburger Nachrichten shows how similar ideas are developing in different parts of Germany. It says:

"In the near future all Germany will have to rely more than hitherto upon the inner European market. Hitherto Hamburg had only a comparatively small share of this. If things are to be changed, Hamburg needs efficient industry. We need new territory, and our new territory must, above all, be industrial territory on the broad stream of the Elbe. How will the German Empire, and how will the Kingdom of Prussia in particular, be disposed toward our hopes?

"Germany needs many economic districts each of them efficient in itself. Bavaria's clever and active King has recognized that, as is shown by his waterways policy and by his efforts to promote Bavaria's agriculture and industry. The Bavaria Government showed great skill in getting the firm of Krupp to establish a great industrial centre in Bavaria. Other German States are working in the same spirit. What Saxony is doing for her industry is well known. In Oldenburg the Grand Duke is vigilantly promoting the prosperity of the industrial forces of his country. Even before the war Bremen was looking to the Lower Weser, Lubeck before the war had established important iron foundries, and during the war has had an extremely favorable economic development."

A San Francisco woman is the inventor of a metal wardrobe for which sanitary advantages are claimed and which also can be enlarged by attaching additional units.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

PARALYSIS AFTER INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

A GOOD DEAL has been learned about infantile paralysis in recent years, though we are still far from knowing how to prevent the spread of the disease. One fact learned is that the mortality of the disease is not high. In most epidemics nine-tenths of the patients escape with their lives. Of those who escape with their lives about one-half have no permanent paralysis or wasting.

The degree of paralysis is worse soon after its onset than at any later time. There is always some gain in muscular power after the onset of the disease. Formerly it was held that improvement was not possible after two years. Whatever improvement there was to be would come in the first two years. Efforts to improve the condition of paralysed muscles would be ineffective unless they were begun within two years of the onset of the disease. The teaching now is that there is no time limit beyond which improvement is impossible.

The dread of infantile paralysis is based more upon the paralysis and wasting of muscles than upon the death rate of the disease. In the great majority of cases of shrinking of muscles the condition exists because of neglect of after treatment. However, there is a considerable minority of cases in which there is too much after treatment.

After infantile paralysis the muscles are weak and easily fatigued. If an over-fatigued muscle is worked further it is liable to give out completely and permanently. Some signs of muscle weakness which should be looked for in mild cases of infantile paralysis are given by Thomas as follows:—

1. Weakness of the back muscles when the child is sitting. A tendency of the spine to curve, the back to bow, or a shoulder to droop is often noticeable.
2. Drop foot. A tendency of the toes to drop and to turn in or out when sitting or lying.
3. Bending of the knee backward when standing.
4. Outward rotation of the thighs when lying down. A tendency of the toes and the knees to turn outward.
5. Weakness or dragging of the leg after play, or a long walk.

In a certain case of recovered infantile paralysis about the only sign left is a tendency to drag a foot and wear out the toe of the shoe, noticeable only after play.

Exercise and passive motion both of the paralysed and the weakened muscles must be very carefully given. If the muscles are over used they are harmed more than they are helped. The authorities are agreed that electricity is of no service.

HOW TO CLEAN FLOORS.

A correspondent wants to know the best method of cleaning floors, and especially hospital floors. As the correspondent indicates in his inquiry, the answer depends on the floor and in some measure upon some other circumstances to be noted presently.

An unvarnished wooden floor should be swept as often as required and washed with soap and water at longer intervals. Scrubbing roughens the surface and splinters the wood, especially if strong lye soaps are used. Tepid water, light soap, and a rag will clean well enough for ordinary scrubbings, while lye soap and a brush at long intervals will not roughen the wood enough to make it difficult to keep clean.

Putnam, in her book on school sanitation, advises sweeping with a hair broom covered with a piece of cloth from an ingrain carpet. This cloth should be moistened with a mixture of linseed oil, turpentine, and a little paraffin. She tells of a janitor who swept satisfactorily with a hair broom in the wooden cross piece of which there was a small receptacle which held a spoonful of kerosene, this dripping on the hairs of the broom.

The objection to sweeping after dusting a floor with wet sawdust is that fine splinters float up in the dust. Sawdust evenly impregnated with oil in which there is a little turpentine is better.

A varnished wooden floor should not be scrubbed. Hornsby of the Modern Hospital says "scrubbing kills varnish. Tepid water, light soapsuds, and a rag will clean and not attack the surface."

Vacuum cleaners are not satisfactory for bare floors. Linoleum should not be cleaned with a moist cloth or with a hair broom moistened with oil. The cracks in linoleum should be filled with a "hard filler" as often as is necessary. Cement, stone, and mosaic flooring should be cleaned with tepid water and light soapsuds. From time to time they should be scrubbed.

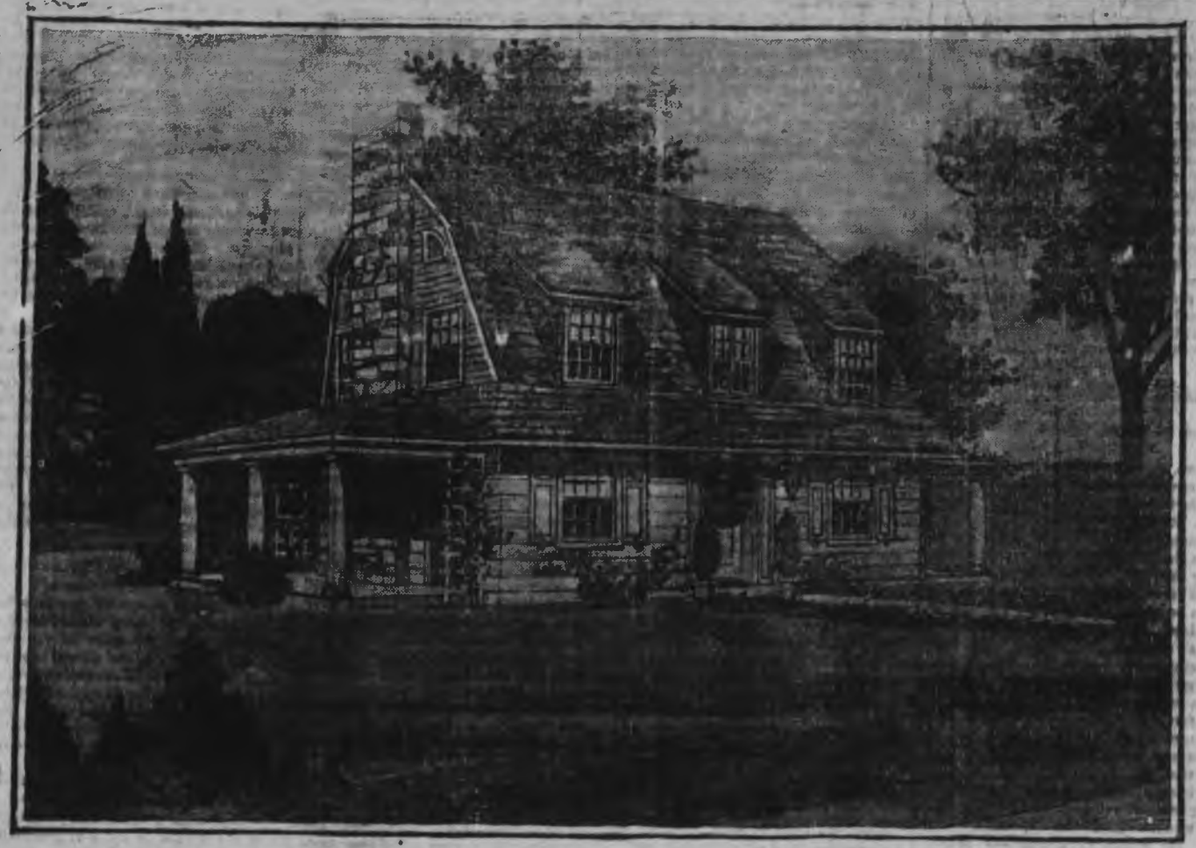
THE HOUSE AND GROUNDS

Convenience Considered in the Arrangement of This House



The house, follows the characteristics of the Dutch Colonial house—that is, in its gambrel roof which, though architecturally difficult to handle properly, when skilfully designed, is a mere charm not only in its proportions but in the economy of space afforded by its roof lines.

The Dutch Colonial house should always be of interest, as it is particularly appropriate to the United States and is a type of design which never seems to grow old.

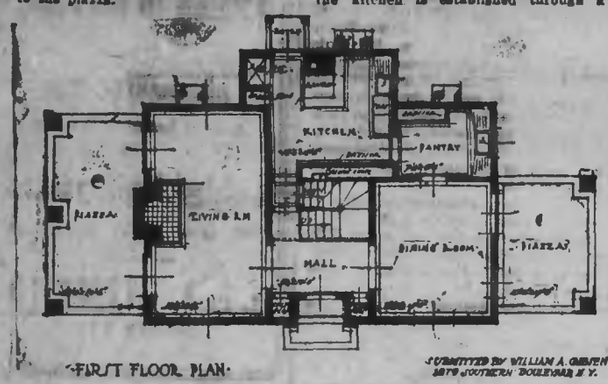
The roofing of the dormers is worthy of notice, inasmuch as the contrivance of the upper slopes of the main roof forms the roof surface for the dormers, giving, as it were, graceful support to the upper surface.

The building has nice, roomy piazzas on both sides of the building, access to the same being through double ten-light casement doors in the living room, and dining rooms which are situated at either end of the building. The piazza floors are of cement finish, with brick edging. This gives a surface unequalled for wear and when properly executed is impervious to the ravages of inclement weather. The living room piazza has a shingle roof, supported by Doric columns, affording protection in stormy weather. The dining room porch is of pergola type, admitting light and lending an air of cheerfulness. The windows are all large, with sash divided into small lights, giving a sufficiency of light and air.

The front door, of the Dutch type, with antique knocker of wrought brass, contains four lights and is flanked on either side by pilasters of wood.

Upon entering the hall an attractive vista is presented. To the left is the living room, extending the entire depth of the house. This room contains a large open fireplace, with facing of tapestry brick laid up in an appropriate design, with clock shelf. Flanking the fireplace are the casement doors leading to the piazza.

To the right is the dining room. Communication between the dining room and the kitchen is established through a well equipped pantry. The front door may be reached directly from the kitchen by means of the main hall. This planning enables any one to pass from the kitchen to the entrance door without going through another room. The kitchen is equipped with liberal dresser space, broom and other closets. Ice brought through the rear door can be placed in the refrigerator without entering the kitchen. The sink of the kitchen and pantry will be thirty-six inches high instead of the usual thirty inches, thus preventing many backaches. The sink and tube are located directly in front of a window in the rear extension.



FIRST FLOOR PLAN. SUBMITTED BY WILLIAM A. GREEN 3070 SOUTHERN BOULEVARD N. Y.

The second floor has three bedrooms and a bathroom. The bedrooms are amply supplied with closet space. The doors are located at minimum distances from the bathroom. The master's bedroom, to the right, is the full depth of the house and has a door giving direct access to the bathroom.

The bedrooms are all well lighted, with sufficient cross circulation to assure coolness in summer. The main feature of the bathroom is a clothing chute, into which linen can be placed to be discharged into a clothes bin in the cellar. The bin will be ventilated by outer air.

The rear chimney shall be of rough repressed brick laid in Portland cement with flush joints, with brick pattern cap covered with copper.

The framing timbers shall be of spruce: the sills, girders, posts and wall plates, 4x6 inches. The floor joists shall be 2x10, placed twelve and sixteen inches by centres, all to be properly bridged by 2x8 bridging. Studs shall be 2x4 inches, set twelve and sixteen inches in centres. Roof rafters will be 2x6, set sixteen inches on centres.

Cellar girders shall be 10x8 inches, of yellow pine. Headers and trimmers shall be doubled, all openings over four inches trimmed.

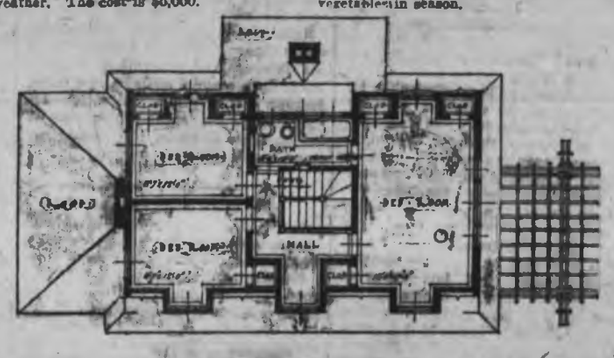
Wall and roof sheathing shall be of ⅞ inch spruce, laid diagonally for walls and lengthwise for roofs. Building paper shall be placed on all wall sheathing, which will receive the exterior covering of cypress siding, exposed ten inches to the weather and, given three coats of white lead and linseed oil, as will all exterior trim.

The roofs and dormers shall be covered with creosote dipped shingles, stained dark brown. The gutters shall be of tin plate and the leaders of copper.

The exterior trim shall be of white pine, covered porch and eaves of roof ceiled with ⅜x2½ inch tongue and groove North Carolina pine. The porch columns and pergola beams shall be of white pine, the columns to have Doric caps and bases. All doors are white pine, with oak saddles and sills; the interior doors are of the two panel type and are 1⅜ inches thick. French and double hung windows are of white pine. The walls throughout shall be plastered, three coat work, to a hard white finish; the lath shall be of spruce. The main stairs shall have ⅞ inch risers of white wood, 1⅛ inch treads and shall be plastered, three coat work, to a hard white finish; the lath shall be of spruce. The main stairs shall have ⅞ diagonally over the flooring felt, which shall receive ⅜x2¼ inch tongue and groove, edge grained blind, nailed, except that in the hall, living and dining rooms straight grained white oak shall be laid. Finished floors shall be given a coat of wood filler, one coat of white shellac and finished with one coat of English floor wax.

The floor of the bathroom shall be of ceramic tile, with six inch sanitary base and wainscot 4 feet 6 inches high.

The building is to be lighted by electricity and heated by hot water plant located in the cellar, the plant guaranteed to heat rooms to seventy degrees in zero weather. The cost is $5,000.



SECOND FLOOR PLAN.

Problems of the Suburbanite

"THE suburbanite is the recipient of much advice. He is constantly urged in large and easy phrase to beautify his grounds; for him in horticultural papers appear plan after plan, wherein numbered circles stand for shrubs and scallops for herbaceous borders. It all sounds simple until he tries to apply it to his own place," says Miss Frances Duncan in what she calls first aid to the beginning gardener in her little book, "The Joyous Art of Gardening" (Charles Scribners' Sons).

It is intended to be of especial comfort and benefit to that large class of persons whose time and means are both limited. Included are only those flowers which the author believes will grow almost anywhere with a reasonable amount of care. Suburban gardening, she points out, is not nearly as easy as it sounds. It is something like how to dress well on next to nothing a year and how to entertain on a slender purse.

"It may be a suburb where the street presents a uniformly 'parked' appearance," Miss Duncan suggests. "Village improvement societies have bereft the suburbanite of his fences, and dogs may work havoc at will among the flowers. * * * A suburbanite who, if he lived in the country, might boldly experiment and perhaps achieve something wholly charming feels a bit shamefaced about following his heart's desire under his neighbor's scrutiny. * * * and how can a peacefully inclined suburbanite plant crimson rambler roses on a trellis while within three feet are grandiflorum rhododendrons, the magenta blossoms of which will fight the roses? If he plants to harmonize with his neighbor and the street, where is the fun of planting, gardening? The simplest way of meeting most of the difficulty is to divide the grounds into street side and garden side, and on the street side to plant to promote the general welfare, while at the back of the house one may cheerfully engage in the pursuit of individual happiness.

"When the space is small the arbor or lattice with screening vines will serve; when the planting in front is irregular, an irregular group of shrubs will make a barrier in fact, while in appearance there is none.

"The first task to which the suburbanite addresses himself is the matter of making his house at home in its environment, of 'tying it to the site,' as gardeners say. When he begins literally from the ground up he seeks out a landscape gardener or an architect of gardening proclivities and lays out house and grounds to make a harmonious whole. But if he buys, rents or inherits his house there are uncharted rocks that may wreck his enterprise. Houses differ. One may no more prescribe a treatment applicable to all expressions of the builder's art than he can prepare a medicine that will cure every human ill, although there may be principles of wide application and decalogues of gardening sins to avoid.

"Of the difficulties which beset the Colonial house in the suburbs the chief is probably a lot too small for the house. A square Colonial house does not nestle or play at hide-and-seek among concealing shrubberies like a little bungalow.

"If the house fronts the street squarely and is blessed with a beautiful doorway, have a broad straight path from that to the gate, as wide as is becoming to the door and the porch. This path may have a low edging of box or be bordered by privet or lilac bushes. On each side of the path have a little garden, so devised that it fits exactly into the space. Its paths may be grass or gravel; the geometrical beds may be outlined in box or anything one chooses, but the design should be symmetrical. Here the formality stops and within the beds one may plant what he likes.

"Sometimes the house stands above the street level. Instead of a gradual slope it is better to have a terrace of a sufficient depth to be becoming to the house, guarded by a balustrade, which, like the fence, should be in keeping with the house. Such a terrace lends itself to decorative gardening, and clipped evergreens or pots of bay trees on each side of the short flight of steps will give the house a finished appearance.

"A cottage is of a feminine disposition. It craves accessories; it should be vine embowered and rose wreathed. The porches should have vines; the foundations should be masked in shrubbery and there should be shrubs and low growing trees for the paths to curve about. If the arrangement of the street permits, a hedge and a little gate will be the gardener's first move, with a few tall shrubs or low growing flowering trees behind it.

LEISURE THAT TAKES PLEASURE IN TRIM GARDENS

FORMAL gardens have their charm as well as the more popular natural ones. In a rectangular lawn secluded by boundary plantings of shrubbery and vines one may have regular borders proportioned to the size of the plot which will be centres of interest and appropriately decorative. "And add to these retired Leisure, that in trim gardens takes his pleasure," as Milton puts it. The use of dwarf evergreens, especially those of a pointed character, not only gives pleasing accent but, by contrast, brings out the bright coloring of the flowers.

In many parts of the United States trees of this kind grow wild, and while it is so difficult to transplant them that it it better to buy them from a nursery, yet the fact of their being there proves that they will thrive in that locality. They should be kept trimmed to the proper height and form.

FLOWERS THAT PAY

"I CANNOT afford to have a flower garden," said one woman to another.

"Let me tell you how I had one of the most beautiful gardens I ever saw at a small initial cost and a net gain," replied her friend. "I had a very unlovely back yard, about 50x70 feet. It was so shaded that not even grass would grow. As soon as we became the owners of the house we cut down most of the trees, leaving a free space exposed to the sun. I ran a path through the centre and one at right angles and also had paths by the fences, which, by the way, I covered with vines.

"I bought seeds and a few plants, the latter mostly roses, of which I have always been tremendously fond.

"Of course I had spaded up the land, giving it only a light fertilising, as it was virgin soil. In an out of the way corner I started my compost pile, letting plants and vines grow over it in the summer to hide it from view.

"Whenever any one gave me cut flowers I would plant the stems. When they were changing the flowers in the public parks the superintendent usually gave me some that were being thrown away. Now and then I would buy something that I wanted very much, and at the right times I would make slips of and propagate plants that would grow in that way. When seed time came I always let some of the seeds mature and planted them for the next year.

"The first year or two my garden looked a little bare, and then it began to close over the bare spots and became a thing of beauty. Soon I had plants, roots and seeds to sell to those who had less 'luck,' and after awhile I began to have a demand for cut flowers. I even supplied a florist with a part of his cut roses one year.

"Being so fond of roses, I kept adding to my collection until I had two hundred varieties, many of them tea roses, that bloomed throughout the season. I would get a plant well started, and when it was two or three years old I would sell it and get a new one that I wanted and could not have afforded to buy unless I had sold something.

"I also made money out of my herb bed. I had no vegetable garden proper, but I slipped in enough here and there to provide our small family with fresh vegetables in season.

"Out of my experience I contend that it is entirely possible not only to have a beautiful flower garden with little money but to make it pay its own way—and something more."

Importance of Good Seed.

Considering that one ounce of celery seed should produce 3,000 plants and one ounce of cauliflower produce 1,400 plants, and that the crops from these if properly grown would each be worth $75, the importance of securing the best seed of a good strain cannot be overestimated. If one has to pay $3 to $4 an ounce for cauliflower seed he knows to be good it is better to do so than run the risk of losing a part of the crop from the purchase of cheap seed. What is true of these crops is equally true of all vegetable crops, and expense in the purchase of seed is a small consideration as compared with the value of resultant crops.

Successional Sowing.

In order to continue a supply of certain vegetables, successional sowings of the same kind of seed may be made every ten days until the middle of June with cool season crops such as peas, radish and lettuce, and later with beans. In this way often a supply usually confined to a week or ten days may be spread over several weeks.

Hand Wheel Hoe.

One of the tools advisable where hand work is necessary in maintenance tillage operations is the double wheel hoe. With this the surface soil can be worked close up to the plants and left in a fine condition, thus doing away with much of the costly hand hoeing and weeding. It cannot be used to advantage in soils which have become hard, nor where weeds have grown large. It is indispensable in small gardens and in onion growing, where a large amount of the work must be done by hand.

Fertilizers

ACCUSATIONS of wastefulness against Americans are being brought home in many directions. We have been slackers in the matter of gardening and we have been wasters in respect of taking care of what has been raised and in the elements essential to plant production. Now that we have begun to realize to some extent the importance of cultivating more land and doing it better, there are a hundred details claiming consideration of those who would garden successfully.

Fertility of the soil is of prime importance, and fortunately all soils may be made fertile. It need not be done either by the always costly and to-day almost prohibitive method of using commercial fertilisers. Nitrates and phosphates are excellent, but only the wealthy may have them in any considerable quantities. Where it is possible, a green cover crop of clover, alfalfa, peas or beans may be ploughed under with beneficial results. This is especially valuable for heavy clay soils that need the addition of humus. Never burn your leaves, or anything for that matter, if you have a garden. All of it, unless it is bones, which may be burned, may be utilized more effectively as compost than as ashes, which are difficult to handle and a large portion of which is likely to escape. Of course, if you have wood ashes from the fireplace, save them carefully and use them where they will do the most good.

In some part of your ground start a compost heap, or, better, a pit. Into it put everything that will decay and form vegetable food. All the trimmings and clippings from garden and lawn, leaves, even garbage, may be brought together, and by use of lime kept from being an offence while it is undergoing the change that will make it available for the garden.

One of the very best of all materials for use in the garden is sod. Whenever you have a little time, dig up a few sods in out of the way corners and put them away. They have stored up in them the food of other years and as they mellow and mix with the soil they will be of the utmost value. They are placed in alternate layers with barnyard manure, and will, when turned from time to time and thoroughly mixed so as to form one substance, be ideal for use in the flower or vegetable borders.

In well ordered old gardens there is always a compost heap, hidden away behind evergreens or in some out of the way place, yet convenient of access. If you are beginning your garden this year begin your compost heap and keep it going as long as you have a garden. You will be surprised to find how many things can go into it with advantage.

Some persons keep their various fertilizers separate, instead of mixing them all in one heap or pit. If it is desired to keep the leaves separate they can be put into a well soaked pit in the autumn, tramped down and wet again and left for the following spring; when they can be used for mountain laurel, rhododendrons and other shrubs and plants that do not like manure.

Start your compost heap now by conserving all vegetable and animal refuse and keep it moist, turn it over frequently, and you will soon get a rich, mellow soil that will rejoice your gardening heart. Lime will keep it from becoming offensive.

Meanwhile, whenever you walk in the woods keep an eye out for the rotted trees, the corners where nature has prepared rich leaf mould, and bring home a treat for your plants as you would a few sweets for the children, only in this case it cannot be overdone and no harm can come from the luxury.

Suggested Varieties for Backyard Vegetables.

Beans: Davis White Wax, Refugee. Beets: Crosby's Egyptian, Detroit Dark Red. Cabbage: Copenhagen Market, Danish Ball Head. Carrots: Chantenay, Cauliflower: Erfurt. Corn: Golden Bantam, Stowell's Evergreen. Cucumber: White Spine, Chicago Pickling. Endive: Green Curled. Lettuce: Grand Rapids, Non Pareil. Onions: Southport, Yellow Globe. Parsnip: Hollow Crown. Pea: Little Marvel, Gradus.

CORN.—In planting corn make a hole about two or three inches deep with a hoe. Scatter in this about five or six kernels of corn, draw in the earth and tramp on the hill. When the shoots appear sturdy pull out all but the three strongest. Keep down the weeds by cultivating with a hoe and gradually draw the earth up around the stalks to serve as a support. When the kernels on the cob appear full of milk they are ready for use.

CUCUMBER.—Sow in drills 6 feet apart, placing seed 1 1-2 inches deep, and thin plants to 8 to 12 inches apart with a hoe. Thorough cultivation is necessary to success. Hoe up some soil around young stems to induce root growth. Cucumbers should be cut from the vine regularly, leaving one-quarter of an inch of stem. They may also be sown in hills 3 feet apart in the row. Make a shallow hole and drop in 4 or 5 seeds and cover lightly with soil. Thin out to leave only 2 vines in a hill.

IF YOU WANT EVIDENCE

That Hemorrhoids, or Piles, Can be Completely Cured Read These Letters—Both are Sworn Statements.

TORONTO, Ont., June 25. — Next to personal experience the sworn statements of reliable people is the strongest evidence obtainable. If you have any doubt that Dr. Chase's Ointment will positively and completely cure piles, these letters should convince you.

Mr. Samuel Parker, fruit grower, Grimsby, Ont., has made the following declaration before M. W. W. Kidd, Notary Public of the same place: "I do solemnly declare that I was troubled with bleeding piles and was advised to go to the hospital to have an operation performed. My wife said 'No, get a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment.' I did so and have used it according to directions while living in Manitoba and obtained a complete cure, for I have never been troubled with piles since. I am now seventy years of age and want to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all sufferers from piles. My wife has used it for itching skin and obtained complete cure."

Mr. Donald M. Campbell, Campbell's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment with great success for hemorrhoids or piles of fifteen years' standing. After trying all kinds of so-called pile cures, three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment gave me a complete cure. I have also used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and there are no others so good. You may use this letter, if you wish, for the benefit of others who may suffer as I did."

Sworn before me, Murdoch Gordon Campbell, J.P., in the County and for Inverness County.

If you would like to try Dr. Chase's Ointment at our expense, send a two cent stamp to pay postage and we shall mail you a sample box free. Full size box 60 cents, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME.

With compliments of Mr. W. J. Sisson, Peterborough, to The Examiner:

The dames of France are fond and free,
And Flemish lips are willing,
And soft the maids of Italy
And Spanish eyes are thrilling;
Still, though I bask beneath their smile,
Their charms fail to bind me,
And my heart falls back to Canada
To the girl I left behind me.

For she is as fair as Shannon's side,
And purer than its water;
But she refused to be my bride,
Though many a year I sought her,
Yet since to France I sailed away
Her letters oft remind me
That I promised never to gainsay
The girl I left behind me.

She says, "my own dear love, come home,
My friends are rich and many,
Or else abroad with you I'll roam,
A soldier stout as any;
If you'll not come, nor let me go,
I'll think you have resigned me."
My heart near broke when I answered "No"
To the girl I left behind me.

For never shall my true love brave
A life of war and toiling,
And never as a skulking slave
I'll tread my native soil on,
But were I free, or to be freed,
The battle's close would find me
To Canada bound, nor message need
From the girl I left behind me.

I'm lonesome since I crossed the hills
And o'er the moorland sedgy,
Such heaviness my bosom fills
Since parting with my lassie,
I seek for one as fair and gay
But found none to remind me,
How blest the hours passed away
With the girl I left behind me.

The hour I remember well,
When she first owned she loved me,
A pain within my heart doth tell
How constant I have proved me.
But now I'm bound for Brigton camp,
Kind heaven then pray guide me,
And send me home safe back again
To the girl I left behind me.

My mind her image must retain,
Asleep or sadly waking;
I long to see my love again,
For her my heart is breaking,
Still faithful shall she find me
And never more again I'll stray
Whene'er my steps return that way.

Raising Cabbage

Cabbage and cauliflower being closely related require much the same kind of soil for their growth as well as similar attention. Indeed there is a group of vegetables, the Brussels sprouts, Broccoli, Collard, Rohl-rabi and kale all belonging to the cabbage family and what has been said of cabbage culture applies largely to them.

Given good seed and a soil rich in vegetable matter almost anybody can raise cabbage. Cauliflowers require careful watching from the time they are started in the hotbed or the open seed bed until they are headed up. The young plants are subject to the trouble known as "damping off," a hard frost stunt the growth or dry weather may prevent heading. All these dangers are to be guarded against if this most delicate, but delicious vegetable is to be brought to maturity. The reward of a good crop is however worth striving for.

Rich heavy loams are most suitable though splendid crops are often produced in lighter soils. There must be a constant supply of moisture with drainage enough to get rid of all surplus water. Along the Atlantic coast there are many localities where the climatic conditions are highly favored. In almost any situation near the Great Lakes or in the St. Lawrence Valley there is sufficient dampness to permit fairly good results.

The crop is in good demand on the market and prices are high enough to warrant some extra care in production. For early cauliflower the plan has been tried with some success of enclosing the plants in a cheese cloth frame. This kept the air moist and gave protection from the root-maggot and other insect enemies. As the expense is not great the method is quite capable of adoption in the home garden. In large gardening operations irrigation by overhead pipes has given satisfactory results.

The varieties grown in Canada are usually the early ones, whether for late or early cropping. Only where the autumn is long and frosts hold off can the later varieties be brought to full development. The early Dwarf Erfurt is the best known and will be found listed in all the seed catalogues. Early snowball does not differ much from the early Erfurt. Of the late varieties Large Algiers and Walchern are two of the best.

Owing to tenderness it is customary to sow cauliflower seed later than cabbage the middle of March being time enough for hot beds. Do not leave the plants too long before transplanting, as they are likely to be checked in their growth. Move when quite small and before the first rough leaf appears. Early cauliflowers may be planted about the same distance apart as early cabbage, namely, 30 by 18 inches, and the later plantings 30 by 30 inches apart. Nitrate of soda may be used to advantage during the earlier growth of the plant, but not after it begins to head up.

Cultivate frequently and after the first few cultivations draw the earth up around the stem slightly. Newly set plants must be guarded against cutworms by paper or wire collars about the stems.

Pure white heads so desirable for table use can be obtained only by protecting against rain and sunshine. This is accomplished by fastening the leaves over the heads in such a manner as to shed rain and prevent the sun's rays from reaching the delicate heads. The operation should be attended to when the heads are small. Several leaves are brought together and tied or they are broken over the heads and fastened with tooth picks. Before enclosing the heads in this way sprinkle pyrethrum powder to kill any of the green cabbage worms that may be present.

With cauliflower as with other vegetables it is highly important to get the best seed as some strains give only a small proportion of heads. When one has got a good strain take the precaution to use the same seed the next year if it germinates well.

MUST GIVE MAIL FOR FIST.

Great stress was laid upon the necessity of keeping the German fist well covered with mail by Major General Groener, organizer and head of the new National Civilian Service, in an address delivered in Dusseldorf early in March, as was briefly mentioned in the despatches from Berlin at the time. General Groener, who was speaking to the delegates to the annual meeting of the German steel and iron manufacturers, is quoted by the London Times, as saying:

"All in all it must be said that the enmity of England is attributable to your achievements in time of peace because England found that she was beaten in the sphere of the iron industry. That was why England began the war. The spiritual authors of the war sit in London.

"What now is the position of the iron and steel industry? It is on your achievements that we have to build everything that we need in the way of weapons and technical resources for the whole people. You have to provide the whole people with weapons, and the means of defence. As I said once before all production for the purpose of the war is like a pyramid, and the base of the pyramid is coal and iron. The milions of men who go out to fight could no longer do so as of old with a club, a spear and a horse. The German army is put on wheels of iron and rolls rapidly from one theatre of war to another to meet the enemy. You are providing the fist with its mail of steel. May it be granted you and the whole German industry, not only now and until the end of the war, but until the most distant future to provide the German people with what it needs in order that it may be able to defend itself. Give the German fist it mail, so that the mailed fist can always strike hard."

BUILDING A BOOK.

Cases Where the Ending Was Written Before the Beginning.

There has been more than one instance in the history of literature of a book being written upside down—that is, its end becoming its beginning or its beginning becoming its end.

Probably the most outstanding instance of the topsy turvydom is "The Idylls of the King." Tennyson's great masterpiece. As every poetry lover knows, this great series of poems ends with "The Passing of Arthur," and there can be no doubt that this is the proper and inevitable close of the wonderful pageant of the king's life. But Tennyson wrote that closing passage when he was a youth of twenty, and it was not until, forty years later, the whole series was finished and published in one book that the old poem of his boyhood was found to fit into its place as naturally as the broken arm or foot of a classical statue fits the place from which it has been removed. Thus the first became last.

A case of double change is presented by the novel "David Harum." The first part of that book to be written by the author constitutes now chapters 13 to 24—that is, almost the last chapters in the book. Then, when the author had practically finished his book he found that two of his main characters were not introduced to the reader at all until he was halfway through the work. He therefore wrote last of all the two opening chapters for the express purpose of introducing these two essential personages to the reader. This is probably a record case of topsy turvy authorship.—Pearson's Weekly.

MAKE QUICK DECISIONS.

Wrong to Waste Valuable Time Over Trifling Problems.

There are some folks in this world who never appear to be able to come to a decision on any issue, either big or little. They are constantly harassed by doubt and the fear that they will make the mistake of picking up something by the wrong handle. They spend their lives sitting astride the fence because they lack the courage to get down on either side of it. They strive to propitiate everybody and please nobody.

What more pathetic spectacle than to see a strapping big man chasing back and forth between the flat counter and the mirror on the wall in the agony of doubt and despair over the momentous question as to whether he ought to purchase a straw lid with a red band on it or blue!

Sympathy goes out to the woman who for weeks perplexes her pretty head over the problems as to whether she will have her new gown cut obliquely or on the bias. In the end she has it cut scalloped, and every time she wears it her regret is that she didn't have it made severely plain.

If your processes of decision are going to halt and buck and stall over the color of a hatband or the cut of a gown how can you hope to decide the really serious problems of life? Blessed is he who can marshal his wits in calm judgment, then decide whether he will stay on this side or cross over and burn the bridge behind him.

Rather than dilly-dally and shilly-shally through life, you had better, in the interests of strengthening your moral fiber, make a mistake by a quick decision now and then. Focus the best judgment of which you are capable on the question at issue, then take your stand and hold your ground.

Odd Coronation Ceremony.

In the old time ceremony of coronation in Abyssinia there was one most picturesque incident. Noble maids held a crimson cord in front of the church door, and the king, approaching on horseback, cried successively: "I am your king, the king of Ethiopia!" "I am your king, the king of Israel!" But the girls repudiated him. Then he cried, "I am your king, the king of Zion!" and cut the string with his sword, while the damsels cried, "It is a truth; you are our king!" and acclaimed him with hallelujahs.—London Chronicle.

WHY CLOTHES WEAR OUT.

Little Balls of Fluff Found Around the House Give the Answer.

The microscope has answered that long puzzling question of why clothes wear out. By the aid of this instrument that uncovers mysteries of the world hidden to the unaided human eye, it is revealed that when cloth is handled some fibers are rubbed off, which in time become visible and objectionable. The formation of this fluff is not unlike the growth of snowballs that boys roll. Under the microscope, especially with reflected light, these balls of fluff are wonderfully beautiful, gleaming with a brilliancy that cannot be captured by a photograph.

"We speak, and speak correctly, of 'wearing a suit of clothes' when we have in mind only the use of the clothes," a scientific writer explains, "but the garments are literally worn away. We might also speak of 'wearing' bedclothes, because the fibers of the bed linen are worn away in much the same manner as a carpenter wears away the surface of wood when he sandpapers it.

"Drafts and other air currents waft these fibers to and fro until they collect in small clusters of fluff. The 'bits and cantles' that have begun to attract others to them gather more and more until a large proportion of the aerial flotsam has been transformed into what the housekeeper calls 'little rolls of dust' that she finds under the bed and in the corners. These are fibers that friction has removed from the bed linen and from one's clothing."

SAVED HIS OWN FACE.

Why He Balked at Being a Witness on the Side of Truth.

Colonel E. M. House—"Silent" House, as he is often called—told at a dinner in Washington a significant parable:

"They who expect the men in authority to do a great deal for them—they who expect the impossible—should remember the grizzly bear story.

"A famous grizzly bear hunter gave a dinner, and one of the guests told of a bear hunt that he had once shared in with his host. It had been a remarkable hunt. The bear had been killed under almost incredible difficulties. Although his auditors looked skeptical, the narrator did not spare them any of those difficulties. He counted on the host, you see, for corroboration.

"Then, when he had finished his strange but perfectly true tale, he said:

"'There, that's the story, and, gentlemen, our host will corroborate every word I say.'

"'No, George,' he said, 'I don't remember anything of the sort at all.'

"Tableau!

"Maddened by this tableau, the guest at the end of the dinner took his host aside and hissed:

"'Why didn't you back me up in that bear story? You know every word of it was true.'

"'Yes,' said the famous hunter—'yes, it was all true, but I saw that everybody round the table thought you were lying. If, then, I had supported you the only result would have been that they would have set me down for a liar too.'"—Washington Star.

Looming Mirages.

In what are called "looming mirages" distant objects show an apparent extravagant increase in height without alteration of breadth. Distant pinnacles of ice are thus magnified into immense towers or tall, jagged mountains, and a ship thus reflected from far out at sea may appear to be twelve or fifteen times as tall as it is long. Rocks and trees are also shown in abnormal shapes and positions, while houses, animal and human beings appear in like exaggerated shapes. Before the sandy plains of our southwestern states and territories were converted into verdant fields by the ingenuity and tireless energy of man mirages were very common in those regions, the Indians regarding the phenomenon as being the work of evil spirits.

A Russian National Dish.

One of the national dishes of Russia is known as the pashka. It is a sort of cake that stands one and a half feet high and is always put on a tall base. It is usually surmounted by a sugar cross and is placed in the center of the table when the Russians hold their great feast at Easter when the fast is broken. It takes about sixty eggs to make the pashka, but none but natives can succeed in producing the rare taste.

Comprehensive.

THE STRAIT OF MESSINA.

And the Ancient Legends of Scylla and Charybdis.

The Sicilian and Italian banks which border the strait of Messina for nearly twenty-five miles to the east and west are among the most luxuriant to be found in a cruise of the Mediterranean. Magnificent golden groves of lemon and orange and orchards of pomegranate, with their brilliant red fruit, contrast wonderfully with the flowers of the almond trees which perfume the whole region.

The strait is entered from the Tyrrhenian sea, on the north, at the narrowest point, the distance between Punta del Faro, on the Sicilian shore, and the mainland lighthouse on Punta Pezzo being not more than two miles. The whole of the Calabrian coast is thickly sown with villages, some clinging to the beach, while others clamber up the sides of well wooded hills which culminate in the towering Montalto, rising to an elevation of more than a mile above the sea. Beyond the strait to the southwest looms ever threatening Etna, the highest volcano in Europe.

The most important city situated on the strait is the once magnificent seaport of Messina, which boasted a population of 150,000 inhabitants before "the world's most cruel earthquake" of Dec. 28, 1908, tossed nearly 100,000 lives away.

The harbor of Messina is the largest and safest in the kingdom of Italy, with a depth of more than thirty fathoms. Before the great calamity it was visited annually by more than 5,000 vessels, which brought cargoes of wheat, cotton, wool and hardware and took away in exchange lemons, oranges, almonds, wines, olive oil and silks. Much of its commerce was and still is carried on with the mainland of the kingdom by means of a ferry line to Villa San Giovanni, only four and a half miles away, while Reggio, the chief seaport on the Italian side of the strait and also the chief earthquake sufferer next to Messina, is ten miles to the southeast. Ferryboats ply between these points too. Scilla, Fare, Catona, Pellaro, Scaliita and Galati are minor towns on the shores of the strait.

Homer did not accord a definite habitation for his terrible sea creatures, Scylla and Charybdis, but mariners familiar with the perils of the rocks on the Italian side of the strait and with the strong eddies near the harbor of Messina saw in the mythical monsters an explanation of such dangers. Scylla was supposed to be a horrible creature with six heads and a dozen feet, who barked like a dog. She dwelt in a lofty cave, from which she rushed whenever a ship tried to pass beneath, and she would snatch the unlucky seamen from the rigging or as they stood at the helm endeavoring to guide their vessels through the perilous passage. Charybdis dwelt under a rock only a bowshot away, on the opposite shore. The second creature sucked in and blew out sea water three times a day, and woe to the ship caught in the maelstrom of its mouth!

Poets who came after the great Greek bard embroidered the legend to suit their fancy. Ovid, for example, described Scylla as the beautiful daughter of a sea god who incurred the jealousy of one of the immortals and who was changed into a sea monster. A second transformation made her a rock perilous to navigators. Some poets described Charybdis as an old woman who seised and devoured the cattle of Hercules, and in punishment for this act the demigod's father, all powerful Zeus, cast her into the sea, where her appetite persisted, but her tastes changed from cattle to ships and seamen.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

A Mummy's Doll.

Among the ancient objects exhibited in the British museum is a doll more than 3,000 years old. When some archaeologists were exploring an ancient Egyptian royal tomb they came upon a sarcophagus containing the mummy of a little princess seven years old. She was dressed and interred in a manner befitting her rank, and in her arms was found a little wooden doll.

The inscription gave the name, rank and age of the little girl and the date of her death, but it said nothing about the quaint little wooden Egyptian doll. This, however, told its own story. It was so tightly clasped in the arms of the mummy that it was evident that the child had died with her beloved doll in her arms.

Remarkable.

"One of the astronomers claims that he has charted 60,000 new worlds."

"By George, it's remarkable!"

"Not so very when you consider the fact that he has the use of the largest telescope in the world."

"I wasn't thinking of that. What I consider strange is that with so many other worlds in existence the lady who is acting as stepmother for my children had to light on this one."—Chicago Herald.

Weeding Out Process.

"How are you getting along with your new efficiency expert?"

"Remarkably well," answered the head of a large business firm. "In fact, we are still quite friendly, although he has discharged several members of my family."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Food of the Screech Owl.

The little screech owl, well known in most parts of the country, is indefatigable in its work of destroying mice and insects. It may often be seen at dusk hovering about barns and outbuildings, watching for mice or skimming along the fields and along hedgerows in search of grasshoppers, crickets and beetles. Many birds of this species have taken up a residence in the cities, having learned to feed upon that most destructive nuisance the English sparrow. In winter rural residents often notice the tracks of mice, which form networks in the snow, crossing and recrossing, passing in and out of walls and stacks, tending to show how active these small rodents are when most of the world sleeps.

Occasionally such a track stops abruptly, and while the observer is trying to read more of the history written in the snow his eyes catch the faint impression of a pair of wing tips near where the trail ends, and instantly he is made aware that a tragedy has been enacted. Screech owls also feed on chipmunks, shrews, moles and occasionally bats. During warm spells in winter they forage extensively and store up in their homes quantities of food as a provision against inclement weather.

Getting Rich in Mining.

Two brothers, Chuck and Ferdinand, started out to get rich in the mining business. Chuck went to the mountains and tried to find gold. He prospected for years, leading a life of hardships and privations. He never discovered any gold and was finally killed in a snowslide. Ferdinand organized stock companies to develop "sure thing" mines, in which there was no gold. He was superintendent of the Sunday school and induced way up church people to indorse his schemes. The sale of stocks in gold mining companies made him a very rich man, and he presented the city with a water fountain and was voted a public benefactor. It is not always necessary to mine gold in order to get it.—Atchison Globe.

After an Electric Shock.

An effective means of resuscitation after an electric shock is said to be a sharp blow on the soles of the feet without removing the shoes. In all cases, however, it is necessary to pull the tongue from the throat, as the action of the current is to cause a contraction of the muscles, and the tongue is drawn back into the throat, completely sealing the air passage. Part of many first aid equipments consist of a device which will grasp the tongue and hold it in a distended position so that the throat is open to permit of artificial respiration.

Rhode Island and Textiles.

The first cotton mill in the United States was built in Pawtucket in Washington's first administration. The making of textiles has become Rhode Island's first industry. Some 60,000 persons work in it, and its output is about 50 per cent of the manufactured products of the state, which, little as it is, is fourth in the making of cotton goods and third in the making of woolens and worsteds.

Ready to Believe It.

A person who had got some little smattering of zoological lore said one day to a novice that crocodiles were often seen in tears.

"Oh, that's nothing!" rejoined the novice. "I've often myself seen whales' blubber!"

Patronizing.

"Flubdub has such a patronizing manner."

THE BRITISH SCORE AT MANY POINTS

BITE DEEPER INTO THE GERMAN LINES

SUCCESSFUL ATTACKS AT MANY POINTS ON THE LINE

British Score in Enterprises Near Epehy, Bullecourt, Loos, Hooge and Other Points---Raid Near Vermelles Was a Complete Success--Ground Gained in Minor Operations Southwest of Lens and Northwest of Warneton.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, June 25.—In a score of "minor operations," such as raids and patrol advances, mixed with local attacks, British forces bit still deeper into the German lines on the west front to-day. "There were successful enterprises at night at a number of points in the neighbourhood of Spehy, Bullecourt, Roeux, Loos and Hooge, where we raided enemy trenches killing many and taking several prisoners," Field Marshal Haig reported. "East of Vermelles in a raid we captured fifteen prisoners and two trench mortars, remaining in the enemy trenches over two hours, blowing up a dugout and inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy. Southwest of Lens and northwest of Warneton successful minor operations brought us prisoners and added to the ground gained in both localities."

BERLIN, via London, June 25.—More lively fighting than during the past few days was reported from LaBassee Canal, as far south as the Scarpe River, in to-day's official statement. Around Vauxhillon, the War Office said, the French twice attacked the line recently won by the Germans, but both attempts were futile, said the statement.

LONDON, Eng., June 25.—Stewart Lyon, Special Correspondent of Canadian Press in Flanders, cables to-day that valuable front line German trench works near Lens were captured by the Canadians last night and firmly held. The capture was made in a difficult advance towards Lens amid tangled masses of wrecked mines and partially destroyed houses.

LONDON, June 25.—Significant indication of even greater democratization of the British Governmental system was contained in an announcement by Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law in the House of Commons to-day that the Government had decided to summon a conference to deal with the future composition of the House of Lords. The confreres will also discuss the relation of the two Houses of Parliament.

MORE SHIP CONTRACTS LET.

WASHINGTON, June 26.—Contracts for ten more steel ships and four wooden cargo vessels were let last week by Gen. George W. Gothals, Manager of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, he announced to-day. Twenty-four additional wooden hulls were contracted for.

PARIS, June 25.—Germany's counter-offensive in the region of Chemin Des Dames slowed down last night to a mere artillery duel. The French official statement to-day did not mention any infantry assaults of the kind that for three days have been fruitlessly thrown against French positions, but specified in the sector of Royierre and Froidmont Farms near Hurtebise and east of Checreux there was sharp cannonading.

The enemy troops were unsuccessful in a raid attempted in the region of Checreux, the Woevre and St. Mihiel, all being driven back with losses to the Germans.

LONDON, June 25. — Irish despatches to-day indicate that British troops with machine guns stationed at various points to-day have full control in Cork where Sin Feiners yesterday made serious demonstrations. The casualties so far include one killed and three injured among the rioters.

MONTREAL, P.Q., June 25.—A thrilling story of a German submarine attack is told by the crew of the S.S. Ortholand, which was torpedoed off Falmouth on June 14. Three members of the crew were lost and the survivors, thirty-one in number, together with one passenger, after twenty-one hours in open boats, were picked up by the steamer Camito of the Hilders and Fyfers Line.

It is believed the same submarine which sunk the Ortholand the day following attacked the Camito which put up a gallant fight, assisted by an American merchant ship which was about four miles away at the time of the attack and opened fire at the submarine. The combined efforts of the two ships either disabled the submarine or drove it off.

FOR OUR YOUNG MEN

All the world is ringing with the fame of the Canadian Y.M.C.A. work at our training camps in England and at the front in France. Yet that work is but an extension of the quiet methodical work which is going on day after day and year after year in every Canadian city, for the benefit of that most promising and valuable element of its population, its young men. It takes into account every part of adolescent human nature: physical, mental and spiritual. For each it provides means of proper development. The biggest and brainiest men in every community sustain and guide it. Identified with its activities in the United States have been such men as John Wanamaker, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., William E. Dodge, John C. Converse, and others innumerable, while in Canada the leading statesmen, military officials, business and professional men, are most hearty in their approval and financial support of it.

The merits of such an organization need no demonstration. Sometimes they need advocacy, because, amid so much else, we are apt to forget. The sum of $10,000, which is the present destration of the Directors of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A., ought to come readily and no doubt will. That this may be accomplished a campaign is to be conducted on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week under the auspices of the Association. Of course the objective will be reached for "Peterborough can and Peterborough will," and this will be no exception.

MRS. PEEVER IS HONOURED

Last week Mrs. Peever, wife of Revc. R. G. Peever of Gerge Street Methdist Church, was the recipient of several presentations that indicated the esteem in which she was held. At the annual tea of the Tennis Club Mrs. Peever was presented with a beautiful bouquet of roses, while the ladies of the congregation also presented Mrs. Peever with a purse of gold.

HARVEST HELP IS NEEDED BY FARMERS APPLYING ALREADY

Greater Production Committee Promised That the City Would Provide Labour For the Season's Harvest

IS NEEDED NOW

The Greater Production campaign is about to emerge upon the harvest phase for which farmers in the Peterborough district have already begun to apply for help. Several months ago the local committee gave the producers the assurance that when the crops were ready to be gathered the city would not fail to lend the assistance that would be needed to reap the full benefits of this year's work. And now the farmers announce that they are ready to engage men for the summer months. In other words they are asking the citizens to stand and deliver, to put their promises into effect.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie has received a number of applications, and is anxious that they be filled as soon as possible. The problem is admittedly a serious one, and deserves the co operation of every person who can lend effective aid. Haying will commence shortly, and the grain crops are filling out rapidly. Hence, it is essential that the response should be an early one. Mr. Gillespie pointed out that school teachers and men who get even two or three weeks' holidays should consider this appeal, and be prepared to give their fullest assistance in the season's work.

Early in the Spring the manufacturers promise to co-operate as generously as they could, and the Greater Production committee promised to do all in their power to help the farmers. That assistance will be needed within the next few weeks, and it is hoped the farmers will not be disappointed in their appeal.

HANNA IS BACK

Canada's Food Controller Returns From Washington

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 25. —Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canada's food controller, returned to-day from Washington after a conference there with Food Controller Hoover of the United States. Hanna declined to discuss the results of his trip, and leaves for Ottawa immediately to consult with Premier Borden.

"Know how to wash cars?" asked the garage boss. "Sure, I know," said the seedy-looking applicant for work. "You clean everything but the ticense plates."

A BATH PARADE AT A Y. M. C. A.
Every Association Building in Canada is thrown open to the Boys in Khaki. Free membership privileges have been granted to all enlisted men by the Peterborough Y.M.C.A., for over two years, and over 25,000 visits were made to the building by them in 1916. The number of baths given to the soldiers in the two years aggregate fully 15,000.

Early Reinforcements Are Urgently Needed Says General Currie

In Cable to Premier New Canadian Commander Says It Is Imperative and Urgent That More Drafts Be Sent --Sergt.-Major Hughes Forming a Band--To-day's General Military News.

OTTAWA, June 24.—The Prime Minister has received the following cable from General Sir Arthur Currie, in response to his message of congratulation sent last week on General Currie's assumption of the command of the Canadian Army Corps:—

"I sincerely appreciate and am deeply grateful for the kind message of congratulation from yourself and colleagues. My pride in commanding the Canadian Corps is surpassed only by my determination to serve it in such a manner as will ensure its splendid reputation being maintained, and as will merit the approval of my countrymen. I note with special gratification your assurance that the troops in the field can rely upon Canada giving them all necessary support. They have given their blood freely to maintain their nation's honour, and now confidently expect that the full fruits of their sacrifice will not be prejudiced. It is an imperative and urgent necessity that steps be immediately taken to ensure that sufficient drafts of officers and men are sent from Canada to keep the crips at its full strength.

Pte. G. B. Seaborn, a Coe Hill member of the 93rd Battalion, who was reported wounded a few days ago, is now reported ill.

The Kingston Standard Says:

Sergt.-Maj. Hughes, of the Queen's Field Ambulance, who was formerly bandmaster of the 93rd Battalion, expects to have a full band in camp within the next two weeks, along with the bugle band. The bugle band was started yesterday and is assuming a real military aspect.

21ST DRAFT RECRUITING

The officers of the 21st Battalion reinforcing draft have opened a recruiting office at 187 Princess street, and owing to the splendid record of the famous 21st at the front, Kingston people will certainly be glad to give this draft their support. Although the office has only been opened three days the draft has already nine recruits and prospects for the success of the draft are very bright.

Lieut. Skidmore Home.

COBOURG, June 24.— Among the Canadian officers who reached Halifax Friday was Lieut. Paul Skidmore, son of Mr. J. E. Skidmore, manager of the Hydro-Electric here. Lieut. Skidmore went overseas with the first Canadian expeditionary Force. He was wounded and after recovering returned on furlough, and went overseas again with the Northumberland County Battalion. Later he was transferred to his old brigade. His mother passed away here a few weeks ago.

Will Command Battalion.

SARNIA, June 24.—Word has been received in Sarnia stating that Major L. E. Jones, formerly drill instructor in the Collegiate Institute, has been promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel and will command the 18th Battalion in France. He enlisted with that battalion at the outbreak of war in London. Capt. Jones of Guelph Collegiate formerly of St. Thomas, is his father.

NEW YORK, June 24.—More than 2,000 British and Canadian subjects in the United States had volunteered for enlistment at the British Recruiting Station here up to last night according to Brig.-Gen. W. A. White, who is in command. While all these men have not been accepted, enough have qualified to form a battalion and a half, and they have been sent to Canada for training.

The recruiting machinery of the United States is actively assisting General White, he said, and encouraging reports have been received from Atlanta, Savannah, Boston, Baltimore, Indianapolis, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Denver, New Orleans, Milwaukee, Bangor, Maine, Jacksonville, and Jackson, Mississippi.

Driver Percy Hamlin, 33rd Battery, sends the following verses home:

A SOLDIER'S REVERIE.

I stand on guard by the guns to-night
In the midnight silent gloom,
Away in the distance a star shell bursts,
'Mid the sound of a gun's deep boom.

It is Sunday night, and my thoughts go back
To my own dear home once more,
Altho' far away, I can see it now,
On Canada's distant shore.

In fancy I hear the church bells chime
('Tis the time for service, I know)
And I see again our dear old church,
Into which the people go.
I thrill as I think I hear them sing,
The hymn I love so well,
'Tis "Jesu, Lover of My Soul."
I can hear the music swell.

I can hear again our pastor's voice,
In his beautiful evening prayer;
He prays for us boys, who are far away—
Each one doing his share.

The hush of the church seems to fall on me,
And I join with him as he pleads,
Our Father in Heaven, to guard us all,
And give the strength each needs.

Again they sing, 'tis "Sun of my Soul,"
And the music thrills and swells,
And I feel that tho' darkness is round me here,
There's night where Jesus dwells.

They sing, "God Save our Splendid Men,"
And while they sing they pray—
That war may cease and the men come back,
At no far distant day.

They are filing out now, I can see them all,
The friends that I love so dear;
They are talking about us with those around,
They seem quite close to me here.

"God Bless them," I breathe, as I guard the guns
And do my bit with the rest,
But my Sunday thoughts are hallowed thoughts,
And help me to do my best.

THE FIRST CANADIAN STRAWBERRIES ARRIVE

The first Canadian strawberries reached the Peterborough market this morning from Grimsby. Only a few crates were received as forerunners of the crop that is expected to enter its full offers by the end of the week. The last imported berries were from Maryland.

Y. M. C. A. Day In Peterboro' Yesterday

Speakers in Many Churches Brought the Claims of the Association Before the Congregations --- Capt. T. F. Best's Address at Empire Theatre a Feature.

THE WORK IN FRANCE

Yesterday was Y.M.C.A. day in Peterborough and in many of the city churches there were addresses on the work of the Association, particularly of the efforts of the men of the Red Triangle overseas. Notable in this respect was the magnificent speech of Capt. T. F. Best who has been a Y.M.C.A. representative at the front in the present war for over two years and who held his audience spell-bound in yesterday afternoon's meeting in the Empire Theatre.

Capt. Best is a magnetic speaker, with a splendid descriptive power and an earnestness and sincerity that drive his points deep into the hearts of his hearers. His graphic description of the conditions in France as they were for the first couple of years of the war brought home to his audience a better realisation of what the heroic British and Canadian troops have gone through and also a more intelligent and sincere appreciation of the self-sacrificing work of the Y.M.C.A. among our boys at the front. His all-too brief address covered many points and was punctuated by rounds of applause that left no doubts as to how the feelings of his audience had been stirred. It was indeed no wonder that his hearers were moved, for through his eloquent words shone the earnest spirit of a man and a patriot.

In commencing his address Capt. Best made an earnest appeal for support for the local Y.M.C.A. He had, he said, heard men say that they were willing to help support the Y. M. C. A's military work but they had no money to give for the local work. The speaker pointed out that without the Associations at home there would be no military branches and it was necessary to see that the home institutions were supported. The Y. M. C. A's military work but they had good in a community if there was the proper co-operation among the business men and young men of the city. He often thought that people did not realise the significance of the letters Y.M.C.A. For instance, they stood for Youth, Manhood, Christ, Associated. They also meant, 'You May Call Around," or "You May Call Again," Sometimes they might mean, "You Must Come Across," or "You Merchants Come Across." To mothers they stood for "You Mothers Can Assist," and to the girls they gave the message, "You Maidens Can Assist." To others the letters said, "You Misers Can Ante."

Passing on to the conditions at the front Capt. Best deeply stirred his hearers as he pictured the hardships with which the British and Canadians had to contend with in the earlier stages of the war. His description of the Ypres salient with the Germans holding every dominating point, was a graphic one. For many months the Germans not only had the advantage of position, but held an enormous advantage in artillery, ammunition, in machine guns, trench mortars and other war making machinery to say nothing of the numer-

Vocal and Piano Recital To-night

A most interesting Recital will be given this evening in the Hall of St. Paul's church by twenty-one of Mr. John Allan's pupils. The programme will commence at 8 o'clock prompt. Some splendid voices not yet known to the public will be heard, as well as many both piano and vocal already favourably known. Admission free. Collection for St. Paul's "Honour Roll" Fund.

MAY NOT BE A DIVISION THIS WEEK ON BILL

Opposition to Referendum Proposal Continues to Increase and the Effect Will Probably Be a Longer Debate Than Was Anticipated

LOGGIE FOR BILL

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 25.—The increased opposition against the referendum on military service continues. The effect will probably be a longer debate than was anticipated some days ago and doubt is now expressed whether there will be a division this week unless some special arrangement is made. One Liberal westerner to-day announced that he will speak against the plebiscite, namely, Thomas MacNutt, of Salt Coat, Sask. He favours the referendum as a general principle, but doubts the practicability of taking a soldiers' vote. W. S. Loggie, a New Brunswick Liberal, will oppose the referendum.

Sir Edward Kemp, Minister of Militia, will probably speak this afternoon.

A FAMINE IN POTATOES

One Local Restaurant Had None to Offer Its Customers To-day

Potatoes were off the bill-of-fare entirely at one of the local cafes to-day. "No potatoes" was the announcement of all the waiters, and inquiry revealed the fact that the famine in 'spuds' is at its worst right now, with none on sale in the city at the present moment. A restaurant meal without the invariable "French fried" or "mashed" is a novelty for Peterborough. Stewed corn took the place of the missing potatoes. One dealer stated that he was entirely out of the tubers, but expected a supply of new ones on Thursday. They will retail at about 10 cents a pound or perhaps a little higher. It looks like a case of "Boy, page Hon Mr. Hanna."

Coalition Again Rumoured Says Ottawa Report

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 25.—This afternoon as the Commons assembles for another week of talk on the conscription issue, there is a considerable revival of rumours of a union being the outcome of the present situation. Sir Robert Borden still holds the resignations of all his ministers, and it is felt that in the present situation he practically plays alone hand, and can at any time re-open negotiations with prominent Liberals to enter the Cabinet. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, of course, is no longer a Cabinet possibility, with his referendum resolution on the tapis and conscription almost sure of a majority of all parties in the House. Graham, Pardee and Dr. Michael Clarke are possibilities most mentioned now for a coalition Cabinet.

MEASURING UP TO THE MOMENT.

Though late in entering the war, the United States is "in it with both feet"—making up for lost time. In addition to showing the honest spirit of cooperation, our neighbours are injecting the solvent of energetic coordination into every facet of the war problem. They launched a Liberty Loan of 2,000 million dollars, and this was oversubscribed more than a 1,000 millions. That the loan taking was popular in character, is shown by the fact that there were over four million individual subscribers. The people are in the fight as well as the authorities. Uncle Sam is also handling the recruiting problem without gloves; and the registration of ten million men is being rapidly drawn upon. The work of equipment, looking to the effective organization of recruits, is keeping step. And the food situation, the vital element of success, is being given prompt and effective attention. In the latter respect our neighbours are giving us "pointers." Food control and organization was one of the first steps taken. The Canadian government is only tackling the food situation with some show of earnestness in the thirty-fourth month of the war. The United States is dealing with it in the third month of their entry into the war. Necessarily it will be some time before the United States can bring troops into action in the battle front in any considerable force; but there is reason to hope that when Uncle Sam gets going there will be "doings." Already United States ships are doing excellent work in helping handle the submarine menace. Germany may affect to despise the effectiveness of United States intervention and participation in military matters; but they expressed a scorn of the "contemptible little British army." that has been found to be ill-timed. The "contemptible little army" served to bring the Huns to bay, and now it is a mighty factor in driving them back step by step—too slowly to meet our desires—but so surely that when the United States forces, in men and munitions and air craft are added, the Hun will be the hunted and the British, French and United States will be in at the death.

Quebec has done one good thing: Its legislature passed a law last session, making it a crime to serve soldiers in khaki with strong drink. A recruited soldier is too valuable to be debauched and demoralised by strong drink.

SUGARCOATING CONSCRIPTION.

At this time of crises in Canada, there is little warrant for controversial side issues that can well wait. In the Maritime Provinces there is an untimely agitation for the union of the provinces, and the Ottawa Journal-Press is wasting much space and gray-matter to try to show that Sir Wilfrid Laurier is responsible for the present Nationalist situation, with all its harmful possibilities. It even follows him back to Confederation to connect him with the beginnings of anti-British Nationalism of the Bourassa type. This is simply recrimination and tu quoque fatuity. What we are concerned in is the present Nationalist situation that has developed into the present national muddle.

Assuming what is not a fact—suppose Sir Wilfred Laurier at some time in his callow political youth, before he entered public life, said something, and did something, that did not exactly square with pinchbeck jingoism; something that in the abstract could be regarded as a provoking cause, does that justify the party and the partizans of the government, in making "Nationalism" a concrete thing—in giving it vogue and vitality; in officially adopting it; in making it an element in party advantage; in giving it a place in the Cabinet of a British country; in petting, encouraging and fostering the anti-British principles that are its essence; in giving official head and leading to the malignant spirit that has killed recruiting in Quebec, and by reflex action has affected it injuriously all over the Dominion—and made the present drastic action necessary; and has created the present situation.

It profits nothing at present to go back to inconsequent history to stir up strife. Our duty is to retrieve, as best we may, the situation created by present and recently past pandering to anti-British and anti-imperial sentiment, organically created, and become an organized element by the adoption, fostering, encouragement and official recognition of the party represented by the present government, added to its official absence of interest in recruiting, its official "slowing down of recruiting," to the consequent paralysis of popular interest, till in sheer panic the expedient of conscription was exploded. The present government is indirectly, and none too indirectly, responsible for the necessity of conscription. That is what we have to face, and in the pass to which the country has been brought, it behooves every patriotic Canadian to make the best of it; make it most effective, give it the best aspect possible, and make it the most easily workable, the least objectionable, as little irritating, as may be.

One of the ways of doing this is to make it fair, to place its burden not only on the broad shoulders of our Canadian manhood, but upon the broad shoulders of wealth. A soldier is to war waging what a rifle is to a soldier—a mere unit in military operation; useless as a rifle without ammunition, without associated compulsion upon all the resources and elements that enter into warfare.

To conscript the soldier and leave to the enjoyment of exemption, the wealth and other resources of the country, is only finding the flour for the bread; it is not making the bread—it is only creating personally effective fighting material.

Our work is now to make conscription palatable and workable, not to open old sores, but to deal with present conditions. Conscription will be more workable and only workable and just if it is made fair and is fairly and justly applied. There is less promise of this when in the very conception and inception, conscription is presented as a one-sided and incomplete measure. We boast in our moments of effusive enthusiasm that Canada is in this war with "its last man and its last dollar." We seize the man, but let the dollar escape in our conscription proposal. The man with the muscle is grabbed; the man with the money is left alone.

If the present principle of the conscription bill is unfair and incomplete, have we any warrant that it will be fairly applied even to manhood? The spirit of partizanship has been the moving spirit of the present government. Even some of the most prominent advocates of conscription in parliament, demand that conscription of manhood be joined simultaneously with conscription of money resources—of the money of the thousands of men who have waxed rich out of the profits due to our preparations for war. If this provision were made a part of the bill, and not a nebulous after thought, a misty promise, the objection to conscription by those it is specifically intended to hit, would be modified.

Liberals who have declared for conscription, are far from including the record and government policy of the government in their departure.

ical advantage they possessed. The Canadians had only one machine gun at that time when the Germans had ten and the artillery was so deficient in heavy guns and shells that the slightest activity on their part caused a terrific bombardment in retaliation by the enemy. "Our troops had nothing but their rifles and bayonets but they had the spirit that made them hold on and hold on they did."

Capt. Best told of the work of the Y.M.C.A. under these conditions, and there were fifty-three huts altogether in France conducted by the Red Triangle and from these millions of letters had been written to the folks at home. There were tables at which to write, paper, ink, and pens always ready and little signs hung up reminding the boys about writing home. The Y.M.C.A. helped the Tommies when they were out of the trenches with concerts, entertainments and athletic events and in other ways helped to keep up the spirit and the morale of the army. Their huts were used for church purposes as well by all denominations, the Chaplains of the different units working with the utmost harmony with the representatives of the Y.M.C.A. Many young men had come to an understanding with God as the result of this work.

Capt. Best remarked that things had been said about the conduct of the Canadian soldiers overseas that were untruthful and unfair. The men who were in France were the cream of Canada's manhood and the great majority of them were living splendid lives. He was not one of those who believed that every man who died fighting for his country would go to Heaven. He did, however, believe that sacrifice was the essence of Christianity and the men who had donned the khaki and fought for the cause of liberty and freedom were showing a magnificent spirit of self-sacrifice. "A khaki uniform is not a passport to Heaven," remarked the speaker earnestly. "But the sacrifice that those boys are making over there will have its influence at the portals of Heaven if the Man of Nazareth is on the job."

The speaker contrasted the spirit of sacrifice among the boys at the front with the conditions at home. "I am afraid we in Canada are living in a fool's paradise. The first illuminated city I saw for two years was in Canada. I find people with more money than they ever had before driving their cars—nearly every one has a car now—buying pianos, building larger homes, spending their money here, there and everywhere. You can go into a hotel here and start in at top and eat everything on the bill-of-fare and then work back again from the bottom, if your stomach can stand it, or your purse holds out long enough. You can't do that in England. There you are only allowed two courses, and you can hardly get any sugar, while white bread is a thing of the past."

Capt. Best closed his address with a plea for a united effort to win the war and remarked that helping the local Y.M.C.A. was one way of doing this.

Mr. J. J. Turner was chairman for the afternoon. Before Capt. Best's address the Olympic Quartette, Messrs. E. Jones, H. Jones, A. Huycke and Tom Ward contributed a number that was greatly enjoyed. The Temple Band provided music.

IN THE CHURCHES.

AN AIR PROPOSAL TO PUT THE "YANKEE-PUNCH" INTO THE WAR

President Wilson's approval of the Defence Council's Aircraft Bill, calling for a $600,000,000 appropriation for building up an aerial army of 10,000 aeroplanes and 20,000 aviators marks, in its ultimate motive, an idea so vast that it would read like the dream of an old-fashioned fiction writer. This six hundred million dollar appropriation is admittedly only an initial instalment the purpose of which is "to put the Yankee punch into the war." What is the "Yankee punch?" Brigadier-General Squier, Chief Signal Officer of the United States Army, who laid the plan before Congress, said that by "the Yankee punch" he meant "a characteristically American way of working to get big results. We have a reputation of looking at old things from a new angle, and there is no reason why the American Army, when it takes the field, should not live up to what they stand for. The field of glory for us will be in the air, sending our myriads of aeroplanes over the German lines to teach Germany that we have come to win." General Squier said that while America was willing to send hundreds of thousands of men to the front "to dig holes and burrow in the soil for interminable months," the country did not enthuse over that idea. America wanted action that would accomplish resuts quickly.

There can be no doubt whatever that General Squier is right. Nothing would stir up the enthusiasm of the American manhood as a big idea for attacking the war problem from a new angle, and administering the coup de grace to Germany. As he says, with the wealth that the United States can devote and their facilities for manufacturing, there is no reason why they should not be able to produce in a comparatively short space of time an absolutely overwhelming aerial fleet—an army, in the air, regiments and brigades of winged cavalry, mounted on gas-driven flying horses, that would sweep the Germans from the sky, blind the Prussian cannons, raid and destroy military camps, ammunition depots, military establishments of all kinds, and maintain a constant raiding patrol over the territory for fifty miles back of the fighting lines. Indeed, an over-whelming aerial army could do more than that. It could, as is now being suggested, order the evacuation of German manufacturing centres by the civilian population, and bombard them from the air until they are destroyed.

Six hundred million dollars seems like a gigantic atart for a gigantic scheme, but it is a mere nothing compared to what is being spent on the war by other nations. Great Britain, for instance, is spending $39,000,000 a day for her share in the war. At this rate it would take something like a fortnight to more than pay for the air fleet which the United States proposes to build, and only about a month to cover the eventual appropriation that is being asked for this purpose of $1,000,000,000. The great advantages gained by the British in the recent battles through British superiority in he air show that this vast scheme of the United States is on the right lines. American manufacturing capabilities, and American genius are well able to put it into effect, and, in combination with the British and French air fleets, set a pace in aerial warfare which it would be absolutely impossible for the Central Powers even to attempt to approximate.—Montreal Herald.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HE HUNTED FOR BUSINESS

A Story With a Moral

By F. A. MITCHEL

I was born in the country, the son of a farmer who supposed that I would follow in his footsteps behind the plow. But I had other tastes. I insisted on going to college and while there was obliged to hustle to make most of the money to put me through. On being graduated from college I desired to study law. That meant several years more of self support while studying for admission to the bar. But if a young man has the energy to make his way while getting his education it is pretty likely that he will have the will power to make his way in the world when he gets his profession. If I was not a hard student of the law it was because I was obliged to spend so much time in making the wherewithal to exist.

When I had been graduated from the law school I hung out my shingle and waited for clients. By waiting for clients I don't mean that I did nothing to secure business. I read the newspapers carefully, especially legal news with regard to estates, wills, transfers of real estate—indeed, anything that might give me a tip to where I could get myself a case, for I don't believe in young men who strike out for themselves professionally hiding their light under a bushel.

One day I saw in a newspaper a notice of the death of Edward Girard, a wealthy man. It stated that the deceased left no family. A niece had lived with him for several years and had taken care of him during his last illness. Not long after this I saw a statement that the personal effects of Edward Girard, the deceased, would be sold at auction from his late residence.

I desired to obtain a desk for my office and thought at this sale I might secure a bargain, so I went to the house for the purpose. There was but one desk put up, and that was one that had been made in colonial times. I was obliged to pay a good price for it, but I was bound to get it, and I outbid every one else. A young lady was present who I was told was the niece of Mr. Girard mentioned in the newspaper item. She seemed very much depressed. My informant said it had been supposed that she would inherit her uncle's property, but he had died very suddenly and had no time to make a will, therefore his estate would be divided among nearly a hundred relatives who were heirs-at-law.

There was something very attractive to me in this young lady's appearance, and I felt much pity for her in her disappointment. It occurred to me that she should at least be reimbursed for her services in taking care of her uncle, and I believed the court would allow her something therefor. I went to her, and, having told her that I knew how she was situated with regard to the property, I asked her if she intended to put in a claim for services in nursing her uncle. She replied that she had not thought of doing so. Besides, she would be obliged to employ a lawyer to draw the papers and she had no money to pay for counsel.

I told her that I was a lawyer and would draw the papers, agreeing to charge no fee unless her claims were allowed, and even in that case I would make my charge very little. She took my address and said that she would think the matter over.

I took my desk to my office and was very much pleased at possessing so fine an antique piece of furniture. I never looked at it without being reminded of Colonial times. There were a great many little drawers and pigeonholes in it, and I felt happy at the prospect of filling them with documents when I should have clients. My first client was Miss Girard, who employed me to put in a claim for her for services in nursing her uncle. I named a large amount; but, since her uncle had been ill only a few days, the court would not allow more than a hundred dollars, and even this she was obliged to wait a long time for. I made no charge; but, since she insisted on paying me a fee, I named $5, which I at once returned to her in such a gift as would be appropriate for a young man to give a young lady.

I was energetic in looking for clients and soon got together a sufficient business to feel that I might marry and make a home for myself. I kept up my acquaintance with Miss Girard, and it was not long before I made up my mind that when I felt able to support a wife I would ask her to marry me.

Meanwhile the division of her uncle's estate hung fire. The number of legal heirs multiplied, a new one or a new family being discovered every few weeks. It was impossible to tell what Miss Girard's share would be, but at most it could not be over a few hundred dollars. We gradually became acknowledged lovers, and, since she needed some one to support her, I concluded not to wait any longer for clients, but be married at once.

We returned from a short honeymoon to a little house I rented, and in order to add to our meager stock of furniture I removed my desk to my home. My wife was pleased to have an article that had been in use by her uncle at her former home where she could always see it. It was placed in our library and used for the keeping of our private papers, one pigeonhole being for pencils, pens and certain little odds and ends, such as paper clips, nail scissors and other such articles.

Hard times came on, and my law business became much reduced. My wife was a good manager, and we lived economically. The few hundred dollars she expected to get for her share in her uncle's estate would have been welcome, but month after month passed and we heard nothing of a division. Either a new relative had turned up or a piece of property must be sold before the estate could be closed.

I have always been a sportsman, and in the season I often went duck shooting. While on the water I needed a pocket compass and usually took one with me on my outings. One day when I returned from a hunt I threw my compass into the pigeonhole where I kept odds and ends. When I took it out again I noticed a vibration of the needle. Being curious as to the cause, I put it back into the pigeonhole, and, bringing a light to bear on it, I saw that it was deflected from the pole.

Every one knows that metal is required to deflect the magnetic needle. But I was sure that my desk had been mortised together and that there was not a nail in it. I removed every article from the pigeonhole and put back the compass. The needle was still deflected.

Now, I take very little interest in what I know, but a great deal of interest in what I don't know. I didn't know what deflected that needle, and I was bound to find out if I had to pull the desk to pieces in order to do so. I moved the compass about as near as possible to the desk, and the needle always pointed in the same direction—that is, to the upper left hand corner. A careful examination of this part of the desk told me there was a space there that had been left unused by a drawer or pigeonhole. I rapped on it, and the sound given out indicated that it was hollow. Nevertheless my compass told me that there was metal there.

Resolved to get into that space, though I regretted to injure my desk, I began to take off the woodwork at the fore part. This revealed a circular steel plate about half an inch in diameter. I pressed my thumb upon it, and out popped a steel drawer. There was but one article in the drawer—a paper.

Something told me that my wife was the person to examine that paper. I called her, and she came into the room. On seeing that I had mutilated the desk we both prized so highly she uttered an exclamation of rebuke. I showed her that I had discovered a secret drawer and there was a paper in it. It was for her, as the nearest person to her late uncle, to see what that paper contained. She took it out, opened it and read words written in her uncle's handwriting and signed by him and two witnesses:

I give and bequeath all my property, real and personal, to my beloved niece Margaret Girard.

I could not resist the temptation to look over my wife's shoulder and knew what she read as soon as herself. She turned and threw her arms around my neck, and we remained locked together without speaking. I don't know which of the two was the happier. I doubt if either surpassed the other.

That was a joyful evening both for my wife and myself. Not the least source of pleasure to me was that the will had not been discovered sooner. I had married my wife when she was poor and partly that I might take care of her. A long while had elapsed before a fortune came to her like a summer shower in the midst of a drought. But we could not dismiss from our minds the one chance out of thousands of finding the will. Had I not been a sportsman I would not have needed a pocket compass. Had the secret drawer containing it been made of wood still would the important bit of paper have been hidden. It was the unerring finger of science that pointed to the key to wealth.

"Well," said my wife when our first transports had passed, "you began by being my attorney when I put in a claim for nursing my uncle; you may as well continue in my service and present the will to the proper authorities."

"And there will be no need for me to return the fee in fruits or flowers," was my reply.

Great was the astonishment of both officials and heirs expectant when more than two years after Mr. Girard's death a will was produced giving his property to the person it was presumed he intended to give it and cutting off a host of distant relatives. Some of these, who would not have received more than a few hundred dollars had there been no will, had been long counting on a rich legacy.

The inheritance turned out to be much larger than had been expected. Some investments Mr. Girard had made shortly before his death during the long period that the chancery authorities were hunting up his relatives had increased tenfold in value. Considering the disappointment suffered by so many persons, my wife called for a list of those who would have been benefited except for the will and set aside a fund for the relief of all that were needful. That fund is in existence today and many are being benefited by it.

There is an important moral to my story. It shows plainly that persons who hope to prosper should not sit down and wait, like Mr. Micawber, for something to turn up. A stone in the bottom of a river may lie there for centuries. That which is endowed with life—motion under another name—seeks opportunities.

An Odd Globe.

A great globe ornamented with the map of the earth carved in stone decorates the estate of an eccentric Englishman at Swanage. It stands overlooking the sea and is visible for quite a distance. One may walk about it and study it in detail. The plane surfaces, such as the oceans, lakes and deserts, are decorated with scriptural texts which are supposed to apply especially to the locality they occupy.

Carlyle and His Pipe.

Carlyle smoked often and complained much of dyspepsia. A friend once ventured to suggest that his smoking might perhaps injure and depress him. "Yes," Carlyle said, "and the doctors told me the same thing. I left off smoking and was very meeserable, so I took to it again and was very meeserable still, but I thought it better to smoke and be meeserable than to go without."

Connubial Contempt.

"Can your husband drive an car?" asked one feminine suburbanite of another.

"Drive a car!" repeated the better half, with fine scorn. "Why, that man can't even drive a nail."—Baltimore American.

WOMEN'S AILMENTS

Come From Heart and Nerves

Young girls budding into womanhood, who suffer from pains and headaches, and whose face is pale and blood watery, will find Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills build them up.

Women, between the ages of 40 and 50, who are nervous, subject to hot flushes, feeling of pins and needles, smothering feeling, shortness of the breath, palpitation of the heart, etc., are tided over this trying time of their lives by the use of this remedy.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have a wonderful effect on a woman's system, making pains and aches vanish, bringing color to the pale cheek, and sparkle to the eye.

The old, worn out, tired out, languid feelings give place to strength and vitality, and life again seems like living.

Mrs. Alfred Winter, Castor, Alta., writes: "I should like every woman who is suffering from nerves or heart trouble to know how much Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have helped me. For two years I kept a hired girl and was doctoring all the time. After having taken four boxes of your pills I am able to do all my own work. I would especially recommend them to women between 40 and 50, as at that time they are more liable to be far from well. One of my neighbors knows how they helped me, and she is now using them."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c., or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The Best Habit In The World is the habit of health. The way to get it is to train your bowels, through the liver, to act naturally, at a fixed time, every day.

Take one pill regularly (more only if necessary) until you succeed. Then you can stop taking them, without trouble or annoyance.

This has been the good-health-rule for 50 years.

THOUSANDS OF SICK WOMEN

Helped Every Year by Common Sense Suggestions Given a Free by The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co.

For forty years women suffering from all kinds of female ills have been writing the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. of Lynn, Mass., for advice.

Thus they receive common sense suggestions drawn from a vast volume of experience, and thousands of sick women have been saved from untold suffering, as letters like the following will clearly show:—

Newark, Ohio.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman. Your Senative Wash is just the thing to overcome female weakness. I have told young mothers as well as old ones about your remedies, and what they have done for me. I think Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved my life, as my health was very bad when I wrote you, but now I can do my own work and have not had a sick day since I began taking your remedies. I keep the Compound and Liver Pills on hand all the time."—Mrs. GEO. THOMPSON, 24 Sherwood Court, Newark, Ohio.

Presentation To Mr. Crane

Receives Handsome Travelling Clock From Trinity Church Choir

After the morning service in Trinity Methodist church yesterday the members of the choir showed their appreciation of the services of Mr. John Crane, who has been temporarily filling the position of organist and choirmaster, with a very handsome gold travelling clock in a mahogany case. Mr. Crane severed his connection with the choir yesterday, and the presentation indicates the esteem and affection in which he is held by the choristers.

SUFFERING CATS! GIVE THIS MAN THE GOLD MEDAL

Let folks step on your feet hereafter; wear shoes a size smaller if you like, for corns will never again send electric sparks of pain through you, according to this Cincinnati authority.

He says that a few drops of a drug called freezone, applied directly upon a tender, aching corn, instantly relieves soreness, and soon the entire corn, root and all, lifts right out.

This drug is a sticky ether compound but dries at once and simply shrivels up the corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue.

It is claimed that a quarter of an ounce of freezone obtained at any drug store will cost very little but is sufficient to remove every hard or soft corn or callus from one's feet. Cut this out, especially if you are a woman reader who wears high heels.

A BIRTHDAY GREETING.

My friend, on this your natal day,
To you my warmest wishes stray
And from my heart ascends the prayer,
That Christ may keep you in his care,
Defend thee from satanic wiles,
And bless, with fortune's favoring smiles.

Grant earth's most treasured joys combine,
With every gracious gift divine,
The brightest smiles of heaven still bless
Thy heart with cloudless happiness;
Nor better can I wish you here,
Than love returned, and friends sincere.

But if should pain and sickness be
Thy lot, by His all-wise decree,
Christ's radiant presence round thy bed,
Sweet peace, beyond all knowledge, shed,
Or clouds of gloomy sorrow lower,
Christ comfort thee with soothing power.

Kind heaven prolong, full many a year,
The life of sunny, hope and cheer,
And, calm, serene, life's ebbing tide,
To the great silent sea, may glide,
Bearing thee when the voyage's past
To heaven's eternal port at last.

—Mrs. A. F. CALDER.

MOTOR HINTS.

Changing the tires from one wheel to the other will be found beneficial.

Run easy over bumpy roads. The jolting of the car causes undue strain on the tires. Avoid sharp obstructions.

Examine your rims periodically, and keep them true; also keep them free of rust by sand-papering and painting.

The greatest care should be taken to avoid pinching the tube when inserting. Always inflate slightly before fitting.

Maintain a correct wheel alignment. See that the wheels do not wobble and that nothing on the machine scrapes the tire when in motion.

A TALK ABOUT VEGETABLES

At the Chicago Woman's Club unit of patriotic service, a helpful talk was given recently by Mrs. H. Von Holtz, vice-president of the Chicago Housewives League, on the cooking of vegetables. "I am a lover of the soil," said Mrs. Von Holtz. "To get the best results from a garden, it is necessary for the gardener to be in sympathy with the plants. For vegetables, like people, flourish best in a kindly, sympathetic atmosphere. Things grow for some people, and they do not for others. With so many people panting gardens this year, we can begin by getting acquainted with more vegetables this summer.

"It is difficult to cook vegetables just right until you learn how. Potatoes, for instance, are much better cooked in their jackets. When they are done, they should be pricked, so that they will dry well. It is really wasteful to peel potatoes before cooking, as so much of the best is thrown away. Much of the value of vegetables goes down the sink with the water. We do not honour the vegetable as do the French. They give the vegetable as a special course. They use fresh vegetables, and are careful in their selection. If, as happens with some, one must use wilted vegetables, then plenty of cold water should be applied before they are cooked. If cooked while wilted, the taste never will be the same.

"Of course the ideal way is to gather the vegetable fresh from your own garden. For all vegetables, those revived by cold water or the freshly picked, the blanching in boiling water is necessary. A few moments is probably enough; then plunge them into cold water. These vegetables should be cooked only long enough to make them tender, in very little waer. Spinach that is young, does not need to be blanched, but, if it is old, it requires blanching carefully.

"A planted dandelion is a delightful vegetable—much more so than the wild. There is a much mistaken notion about the onion. It should not be fried in fat for it has enough fat of its own to cook it. Put it on in a pan, with enough water to cover it; it will not burn down, and will be delicious cooked that way. So it is with cabbage. Slice it, and let it simmer till tender. Salt it, add butter and salt after; then put it in sweet or sour cream.

"Corn can be dried best in an oven. I find that dried fruit and vegetables keep better than canned, and they take up less space. Spread them on bread tins in a slow oven. When thoroughly dry, put into muslin bags. When you use dried vegetables, soak in cold water. Fresh vegetables in cold water. Fresh vegetables should be started in hot water, with the exception of spinach.

"I have an herb garden which I greatly enjoy. You can raise so much better rosemary, sage, parsley, bay leaf, etc., than you can buy. Get a good seed catalogue and select them. I dry them, put hem in glass jars, and place near my kitchen stove for use. Dry your fruit in the oven, also, but let nature dry your peas and beans in the pod.

"I have found that it is unnecessary to waste pea pods. They can be cut up and boiled; and they make excellent pea soup, if the pods are in good condition.

"The warning I would give to all housewives is: Do not cook your vegetables too much. This is the usual fault with cooks. They will really cook in a surprisingly short time and with very little water."

Mrs. John C. Bley, president of the Housewives' League, and chairman of the Section of Housewifely Thrift of the Chicago Woman's Club, showed some specimens of common weeds which make good greens and salads. Among them she spoke of the narrow-leaved dock, which grows so commonly and which is good with dandelions, cooked for greens. The wild mustard and horseradish tops are also good for greens. "Wild lettuce grows abundantly, belonging to the dandelion family, and is always good as greens. The lambs' quarters is just in its prime at present. The pigweed, with the red stem, is excellent for greens. One of the best weeds for salad is the common little pusley, which farmers have such trouble with. It used to be pulled for the pigs, yet is very good for man. The red dog flour makes excellent biscuit, can be got at most groceries, and costs less than half the other flour.

"Chicory is another good edible weed, and is sometimes called Blue Sailor from its blue blossom. The common milkweed is excellent, for the stalk can be cooked and used like asparagus. The common nettle is wholesome when cooked. It should be cooked for a few moments, then the water should be changed. All of the cresses and pepper grass are good eating. The common plantain is excellent for greens. All these weeds can be put together and are then savory.

"There is the mallow, called 'cheeses' by the children, which is good for salad. So also are the tender leaves of red clover. The ground cherry is excellent for jelly. The thistle root tastes like vegetable oysters, and there are many others. These weeds are good substitutes when garden stuff is high or is slow in coming, or when you have a garden."

CUCUMBER SAUCE FOR SALMON

A delicious sauce for salmon, or other fish, is made of cucumbers. Peel two large cucumbers, remove the seeds and cut into small pieces. Put these in a saucepan with two tablespoons of butter and 1-2 teaspoon of salt, and cook, well covered, until the cucumber is soft. Then uncover and add one cup of hot Bechmel sauce and one teaspoonful of lemon juice. Colour the mixture with a little spinach juice, just enough to give it a delicate green.

"So you have sent your boy to college?" "Yes." "You used to say that a college education didn't teach anything. Have you changed your mind?" "Yes." "Since when?" "Since he went to college." "Well, what does a college education teach that is really practical?" "It teaches a boy's father how to take care of his money."

THE FUEL SITUATION

Present Difficulties Attributed to a Number of Causes—An Important Statement

THE following statement is sent out by Mr. A. D. Maginer, General Manager of the C. P. R.:

It is realized in most quarters, some more than others, that this country is like to face with a coal shortage of very alarming proportions, and that by next winter, if conditions under which fuel may be obtained do not alter in the meantime, a great many industrial concerns and householders will be unable to supply themselves with sufficient coal to carry them through the severe weather.

The present and prospective difficulties in the way of bringing coal into Western Canada may be attributed to a number of causes, principal amongst which are dearth of mining labor and shortage of coal carrying equipment at the mines. The situation in some of the mining territories at the present time, is that even with the labor shortage, mine operators are able to turn out coal at a greater rate than they can obtain cars to carry it away. It, therefore, naturally follows, that more coal can be brought into Canada if the car supply is increased.

Unfortunately, it is out of the question to obtain any number of new cars at this time, and the situation can be met only by obtaining more service from the present rolling stock. To do this cars must be moved promptly between the mines and destination, and must be unloaded as soon as they reach consignees.

Railways must have coal in order to discharge their obligations to the country, and for their own preservation, as well as for the behalf of their patrons, they are putting forth their utmost efforts to minimize delay to cars while on route to and from the mines.

All efforts in this direction, however, will be of little avail without the whole-hearted co-operation of the man who unloads the coal and releases the car after it gets to its destination. Some consignees, who thoroughly appreciate the situation, have almost a hundred per cent. record in the prompt unloading of coal cars, but there are others who are helping to create the prospective shortage of coal by keeping the equipment out of active service. To-day there are in one town of comparatively small size [illegible] coal cars awaiting unloading. The arrival of these cars was spread over a period of thirty-one days, an average of [illegible] received per day of 1.26. They are consigned to three organizations who have the facilities for unloading a large number of cars each day. These fifty-two cars have been out of service a total of [illegible] days. Coal cars that are not held for storage purposes as these cars are, average at least fifty miles per day. Had the fifty-two cars been unloaded promptly they would have, by this time, travelled 51,480 miles. The distance from the point where they are now located to the coal mining territory is approximately four hundred miles. It follows, therefore, that

Rev. R. G. Peever's Farewell Sermon At George St. Church

Large Congregation Last Night An Evidence of His Influence and a Tribute to His Work and to Himself --The Guide of Life

Rev. R. G. Peever said farewell to the congregation of the George Street Methodist church last evening. His final message in its earnestness, sincerity, optimism, breadth, and with its true Christian conviction, was characteristic of the departing pastor and his work and life as it has affected the George Street church. The church was crowded, not only with members of its congregation, but visitors from the ranks of other churches of the city were present to listen to the farewell address of a man, who, both as a pastor and as a citizen has contributed so greatly to the welfare of the church and the city during the time he has been in charge of the work of the George Street church. Mr. Peever leaves Wednesday for London.

"I take this large audience," said Mr. Peever, "as a tribute to the work I have been trying to do in connection with this church. I am glad to see many from other churches here at this service this evening, for while I am denominational, I am a Christian first, and I am looking forward longingly to the day when there will be a larger union of the Christian forces now at work. That is my heart's desire."

The pastor had pondered over what he should say in his last service with the congregation and church, and what he should say as a citizen and a member of this community. It had occurred to him "that he might review" some of the work that had engaged him as pastor of the church during the past few years, to relate some of the incidents in connection with his pastorate which would serve to illustrate to what extent he had been useful to the members of the congregation. But he had decided not to recall these things. "I will leave them with the Great Master," he said.

A COMPLETE GOSPEL.

"I will speak to you to-night of Our Master," said Mr. Peever, indicating that he had considered Him the most appropriate topic for the final sermon. "The text is 'I am the way and the truth and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me'." This is the complete Gospel in doctrine. If this congregation as a church and as the representative of other churches would accept that as their doctrine and their ideal, there would be no mistake about their doctrine or their lives or their citizenship in this community.

Max Meuller had rightly said that Christianity was different from any other religion. He had pointed out that you could study any other religion and isolate it from its founder and lose nothing of its value by so doing. You could study and live the Mohammedan religion and forget Mohammedan. But no one could think of Christianity apart from the life and spirit of Jesus Christ. No one could be a disciple of the Christian church without being a disciple of the life and spirit of Our Lord. Its circumference is wrapped up in the personality of the character of Jesus.

The early disciples were referred to in their own time and for years afterwards as the "people of the way." The Christians were people of a certain way—people of the way of Jesus.

"I am the truth." A distinguished scholar had once defined truth as "That divine essence within knowledge which has a power under the Holy Ghost to regenerate character." That was why we translate the Bible into many languages. There is a strange essence within the Gospel that opens the mind so that the spirit of Christ can be received.

The three words which the pastor wished to leave with the congregation were "Knowledge, Service, Enthusiasm." I have no fear of your future if you will study God's word. If you want depth of Christian character; if you want horizon given to your faith, study the Gospel By enthusiasm the speaker did not mean recklessness or fanaticism, but the best Christian method behind a definite policy in the Christian church.

Concluding Mr. Peever said, "I give you to-night the Guide of Life. Will you take Him Mr. Peever also expressed the regret of Mrs. Peever and the other members of the family at leaving the city.

A PEN SKETCH OF CAPT. TOM F. BEST

Those who enjoyed Capt. T. F. Best's speech at the Empire Theatre yesterday will appreciate the following article about him which appeared recently in the Gloucester, N.B., Northern Light:

Picture fans who felt aggrieved on Friday evening last that Charlie Chaplin had been displaced at the Opera House by a gentleman in khaki quickly forgot their disappointment listening to the moving and vivid words of Captain Best as he told of the work being done at the front by the Y. M. C. A. He explained how that organization had won for its distinguishing symbol, the Red Triangle, a place of honour equal to that held by the Red Cross, and the speaker's word pictures of our boys in camp and at the Front, at play and under fire, had a realism that the most carefully produced screen-picture could not hope to equal.

Captain Best is a veteran. He saw service during the South African war. It was at Bloemfontein that he gained from Lord Roberts official recognition of the Y.M.C.A., and from that day the institution became no longer a camp-follower existing on sufferance, but an honoured and essential unit of the Imperial forces. To-day the Y. M.C.A. officials are called in to consult with the General Staff in France on matters relating to the physical and social welfare of the boys at the front.

A popular fallacy exploded by Captain Best was that soldiers are men of action only, whose weapon is the bayonet and not the tongue. The gallant officer is both a fighter and an orator. His talk is at once a bludgeon and rapier. It smites the spendthrift and the slacker into a shamed silence. Although a typical Canadian, Captain Best's speech is radiated by constant flashes of an irresistible Hibernian Humor. He is wise and witty, grave and humorsome, tear-compelling and laughter-provoking. He can tell a story about a Scotchman found dead beside a slot machine that refused to return his penny, until the house rocks with laughter; and he can describe a boy on the eve of battle writing home to his mother, until men sit tense and rigid and women weep unfeignedly. His story against the canny Scot was followed by the remark, "Well, I could tell a few about the Irishman!" whereupon a son of Erin, not at the back of the hall, who had been hilarious, was smitten with a sudden and apprehensive solemnity.

But Captain Best did not depend upon stories to lend "punch" to his talk. He told of giants at herculean tasks, and he looked the part himself. Tall, erect, garbed in cavalary uniform, he spoke with out rhetorical verbage or flourish. As he pictured the airplanes passing overhead he stretched out long arms with sweeping gesture. With one hand in his pocket he flung tales at his audience with the other. Hunching up his broad shoulders, he would pause for a moment, and then slowly, impressively, reiterate telling points one by one on outspread finger tips. A witticism, a home thrust, a story, would be heralded by a stroke of the chin. The blue eyes danced with merriment as the speaker described a Tommy seated in a comfortable Y. M. C. A. but writing home, and describing his surroundings as a shell-swept, rat-infested horror; and they blazed with holy wrath as he denounced the cowardly slanderers who have been spreading lying reports about the morals of our boys at the Front and in England.

"I would like to strangle them!" he said, slowly, in tones that would cut steel, and closing the fingers of his hand until the knuckle-bones shone white.

Captain Best is a master of graphic speech. Whatever he describes, lives. Whether it is a scene on the South Coast of England, a camp in France, or the front trench itself, the picture is vivid and pulsing beings his hearers.

One-piece dresses always have a smart air, which is one of the reasons for their popularity.

Miss Mignon Telgmann Triumphs in Toronto

Her Great Artistic Success at the Recital of the Students of Luigi Von Kunits

The following, which will be read with keen interest and great pleasure by many in Peterborough, is taken from the musical page of the Toronto Sunday World, recording the details of a violin recital given by the pupils of Luigi von Kunits of Toronto:.

Mignon W. Telgmann, a young lady from Peterborough, gave an entire programme by herself, playing concertos by Viotti, Spohr and Godard, and as a finale, the Fantasia Appassionata by Vieuxtemps. Such a formidable selection seemed rather a severe test for both artist and audience. Only one conversant with he technical and interpretive difficulties of the works which she played wih such evident mastery could grasp the significance of Miss Telgmann's accomplishment. From what she has achieved, it may be safely predicted that she will soon be an important addition to the already notable list of Canadian artists who have won great distinction at home and abroad.

Such emphatic commendation is no surprise to those who know Miss Telgmann's innate artistic nature, and her industry and enthusiasm as a violin devotee. Several persons went up from Peterborough to hear Miss Telgmann, and were delighted witnesses of the artistic triumph she achieved. Those who heard her programme were especially struck with her treatment of the Godard concerto, an heroic composition bristling with immense difficulties, both technical and interpretative, the five movements demanding for their successful execution, excursions into all the fields of violin art; and the manner in which Miss Telgmann conquered the difficulties and revealed the spirit of the concerto were very highly creditable to her executive possession, and to her interpretative intuition. She won a like success in Vieutemps' well-named Fantasia Appassionata, her progressive success in performance culminating in the headlong and tempestuous finale. Miss Telgmann deserves the congratulations she won so completely and so completely justified confidence of her friends and admirers in her attainment of the ambition to rank as a foremost Canadian artist, and as a violin virtuosa of outstanding ability.

Fatal Happening To A Peterborough Girl

Mabel Smedmore, a sister of Mr. Peter A. Smedmore, 238 Stewart street met death in a painful accident at the summer home of Col. Wood, Riviere du Loup, Quebec, where she was employed as a domestic. She was, apparently, in the act of pouring coal oil or gasoline on the fire, when an explosion occurred, inflicting fatal burns about the neck and head.

Miss Smedmore who was born in Woolwich, England 23 years ago, was a daughter of Peter Smedmore, Woolwich, England. She came to Canada last October. Mr. Smedmore, to whose home the body was brought this morning is the only relation living in Canada.

The funeral will take place to-morrow morning to Little Lake cemetery.

Four-Legged Chicken

Mr. Wm. Leslie, 401 Smith street, whose good luck in raising chickens has become proverbial in the locality in which he resides, this morning reached the climax, when in a brood of which 13 out of 13 eggs hatched, one chicken had four legs. The chick is extremely lively and shows every satisfaction of living.

Water Braces Fragile Structure Of A Flower

Flowers, like fruits and vegetables, consist of a very large percentage of water. Most flowers contain from 80 to 90 per cent. The structure of most flowers is very fragile and any loss of water, however slight, causes the structure to break down or wilt. There are certain periods in the flower life when it has a maximum amount of both water and undeveloped food material. It is during such periods that it is best to cut flowers that are to be kept in the house.

With regard to the water content of flowers without which, often in a few minutes, they lose their firm structure, it is found that they contain a maximum amount in the early morning and during the cool hours of the evening. Flowers, therefore, which are cut during either of these periods and placed immediately in water last much longer than those cut during the heat of the day. Most flowers also when cut in the bud stage, owing to the fact that their food content is still largely unelaborated or unused, last much longer than those cut when fully opened. Lilac and willow twigs, also flowers of large size, like the paeony, show remarkable capacities in this regard. The explanation is partly that the stored up food content is used up more slowly in the dull light of the room than it is under the powerful influence of the outside sunlight.

A USEFUL POINTER

Another useful pointer on cutting flowers with leafy stems is to remove as soon as cut the lower leaves. On placing them in water this allows the water to rise immediately to the upper leaves and blossoms instead of to the lower leaves.

Cut the stems on the slant where possible, and make a clean cut with a sharp knife or scissors. This also helps the water to quickly rise up the stem. Long stems are an advantage in some cases, but flowers with stems of medium length are perhaps better in most circumstances. So much for hints on actually cutting the flowers. After they are cut, what are the best methods of keeping them perfect as long as possible?

2. Keeping The Flowers Fresh After They are Cut.

In the first place don't crush them into a vase in large bunches. Arrange for effect with few, rather than many, in each vase.

The water in which they are placed should not be too cold. In fact warm water is advantageous, as it rises in the stems more quickly, owing to the fundamental law of gravitation. Should the water in the stems be much warmer than that in the vase it is apt to descend and as it may be some time before the return flow to the blossom commences, the flowers may wilt slightly in the intervening time. However, it is always wise to place the flowers in as cool a place as possible, as this will prevent wilting, even should the water conditions be slightly unfavorable.

It is very desirable to change the water daily. Where that is done it is not really necessary to shorten the stems, although this latter practice is a good one.

The first day the flowers are cut they use up much more water than later on. It is always wise, therefore to replenish the water supply a few hours after the flowers are put into the vase, especially if the weather is hot.

Preservatives, such as salts like common salt, ammonia, charcoal, etc., are not at all necessary when the water is changed daily. From experiments it has been found that they have no beneficial effects at all. Their sole value is in cases in which the water cannot be changed daily. In that case any simple preservative is effective. When flowers have been left too long without changing the water, they may be sweetened by washing in ammonia water. In the case of all varieties of flowers, good, pure, clear water gives the best results.

HOW TO REVIVE THEM.

To some people a few flowers are apt to be poisonous, in which cases they should be handled with care. Examples of such flowers are primulas, forget-me-nots and poppies.

To revive flowers which are wilted they may be placed in several changes of lukewarm water. Or water as high as 100 degrees F., provided the stems are not injured. Flowers with hard or woody stems withstand even boiling water. It is to be used with care when above 100 degrees F. however.

When flowers are used in heated rooms, especially those which have to be closed up at night it is wise to remove them to some cool basement. This will help to keep them fresh many days longer. This, where expensive flowers are used for social functions, is a valuable point to keep in mind.

In cases where flowers cannot be placed in water to keep them they my be made to remain fresh much longer by the simple expedient of dipping their cut ends in wax or tallow. This, however, must be done immediately after cutting and before they have lost any water by evaporation.

Do not fail to visit the various flower exhibitions provided for the citizens by the Horticultural Society. Every citizen with a pride in his city should be a member of this society.

Five Specials That Should Command Your Attention

We have made an effort to present four specials that embody style—garments that would stand out prominently no matter what company they were in. The silk suit item is one that is deserving of particular attention, and we advise you to head its proclamation if you desire something modish and at a moderate price.

$3.50 and $2.75 Voile Blouses at $1.98

Fashionable Blouses that are characterized by the clusters of tucks down the front, and trimmed with insertion and lace, wide collar of Swiss embroidery; good assortment of sizes in the lot. It requires no knowledge of value to see that the price is a special one. Regular $3.50 and $2.75. Special price .. $1.98

Dressy White Skirts of Wide Cord Pique $3.50

Fashion has pledged itself to the tailored blouse, and we ask what better consort could it find than a Pique Skirt? This particular model has a stylish broad cord, fastens down the front with pearl buttons, cut with good flare gathered back and finished at top with belt and fancy pockets. A perfect fitting model. Special $3.50

Charming Chiffon Taffeta Silk Suits Regular $29.75. Sale $24.75

We will not go into details about Taffeta Silk Suits. It is sufficient to say that for genuine style they have no equal, and for summer they are most useful on chilly evenings when a heavier garment would be burdensome. Made of beautiful chiffon taffeta and can be had in green, navy, brown and grey; cut on smart full lines and drawn in slightly at the waist with a girdle, and the shirred pockets are there just for the sake of novelty, wide cape collars are also greatly in evidence; that no detail might be overlooked the makers finished them with handsome silk linings. Skirts are finished with shirring, flared, and side closing. Regular $29.75 value. Special $24.75

Tweed Raincoats that are Genuinely Waterproof $18.00

Once upon a time little regard was paid to the Raincoat, a hit or miss sort of garment with no style, but time has wrought a change. It is now possible to rubberize woollens so tweeds have come to the fore. This model has slashed pockets, balmaccan style, fancy cuffs and snug turn-down collar. A decided tweed pattern. Special at .. $18.00

"Heatherbloom" Underskirts $2.98

Picture these delightful garments with their black grounds all decked with flowers, in colours of rose, green, purple, maize. There is a quaintness that suggest "high favour in the old Colonial days." So history repeats itself, for across the border their popularity is widespread. Have a 12-inch fancy frill. Price $2.98

LANCE CORP. EARL C. GARBUTT KILLED IN ACTION

Was Brother of Farmer Resident of This City.

Mrs. Ford Turner formerly of this city and now a resident of St. Catharines, received the sad news that her brother, Lance Corp. Earl C. Garbutt had been killed in action June 3rd, 1917. No further details are known as yet. Lance Corp. Garbutt was the third son of the Rev. M. C. Garbutt of Norham, Ont. Sergt. H. R. Garbutt, a brother, is now in England.

The young soldier was a fine type of man, and his death will be regretted by all those who had made his acquaintance. He has been a visitor to Peterborough on different occasions when his sister, Mrs. Turner, was a resident here.

THRONGS OF CITIZENS JOINED THE I.O.O.F. ON DECORATION DAY

Beautiful and Impressive Evidence That the Dead Are Not Forgotten--Little Lake Cemetery Resplendent in the Colourings of Early Summer.

THE GRAVES DECORATED

Thousands of citizens united yesterday with the Peterborough and Otonabee lodges of the Independent Order of Oddfellows in their annual commemorative observance of Decoration Day. Both lodges were largely represented as they paraded from their hall to the Little Lake cemetery to the music of the Salvation Army band. Each member carried bouquets to be placed on the graves of their departed brethren, as a token to a memory that death but serves to enrich, and as a symbol of an abiding fraternity that reaches beyond this life.

The example of the I.O.O.F. has undoubtedly influenced the entire city in recalling the absent ones in every home and implementing the conscious summons to honour the dead. Yesterday's throngs afforded convincing evidence of the fact that Decoration Day has become a public event, established with this beautiful custom that springs from the fraternal spirit of the Oddfellows.

Like sand in an hour-glass, crowds of citizens converged at the cemetery gates to spread out in all directions to the little plots that mark the last resting place of friends and relatives. Apparently there were none forgotten among that silent host. The fields, garden plots and conservatories had yielded their brightest blooms that were tenderly laid upon the shallow mounds even to the farthest corners of the cemetery. Wild flowers mingled their incense with the carefully nurtured roses, blushing peonies, and fragrant carnations in their sheathes of fern. A warm sun smiled bignantly upon the blurring scene as the visitors moved along the paths or across the sward to the familiar locations. It was all characteristic of Decoration Day, especially in the sections of Oddfellows distributing their floral remembrances upon the distinctive graves of their departed. As a fixed event it served as the connecting link of the present intangibly uniting the past and the shadow of the inevitable future.

The I. O. O. F. ceremonial preliminary to the decoration of the graves proceeded with wonted solemnity. Prayer was read by Mr. W. A. Logan, and the entire assembly sang "Nearer My God to Thee," accompanied by the Band. Mr. George Gillespie continued the ritual reading the following reflective passage on the theme of remembrance:

Brethren—Another year has passed away and we are assembled once again, to pay respect to the memory of our departed brethren, on this peaceful Sabbath day amid these surrundings which nature and the care of man have made beautiful, and yet "where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap," and where on all sides, we behold, as emblems of mortality, these monuments which tell us of those who once lived, but who have passed away. I am sure it needs no words of mine to make this scene impressive. Looking back over a number of years of Oddfellowship, calling to mind many of the brethren with whom I once associated, but who have passed into "the silent halls of death." I find myself to-day burdened with memory, rather than gifted with speech, and in the words of Tennyson, I say, "Would that my ongue could utter the thoughts that arise in me." But even were the gift of eloquence mine I would not speak of the chilling hand of death, nor in my words make mournful measure for those who have gone, preferring rather to take the view of Longfellow: "This life of mortal breath is but the suburb of the life Elysian, whose portals we call death."

In the work of our Order we have many beautiful ceremonies all serving to teach us how priceless is friendship, how deep is love; how lasting is truth. These are the links which unite us heart to heart in our great fraternity, and to-day, my brothers, we join with these, the golden link of remembrance. 'Remembrance! Something akin to talismanic power as in the word, but more than that, I take up the Sacred Book that is one of our many symbols, and turning its pages over, I find these words, "everlasting remembrance.", What majesty of expression is in the phrase; and so inwrought is it in passages of Holy Writ, that to breathe the word 'remembrance' brings peace to our souls, like the breathing of a prayer. In this Book we find the hope of life beyond the grave that makes bright our vision as we unitedly engage in this service to-day, for how vain it all would be, and how dread the prospect, had we not the assurance that after the night of sorrow and regret and tears, there would come a glad morning of rejoicing:

"And with the morn those angel faces smile,
Which we have loved long since and lost awhile."

The sweetest songs of our tongue are songs of remembrance, and of all the gifts we possess this is one of the most precious; the power to write 'remembrance' on the heart of a friend.

It is an evidence of the existence of this power, by brothers, that we are here to-day, bearing these flowers in our hands. One by one the links that bind us may be severed, but though time may dim its lustre, all unbroken still remains the link that was forged in the flame on the altar of love, the golden link of 'remembrance.'

We shall not speak to-day of our departed ones; we bring these bright flowers as garlands for their graves, and by all the significance that has been given them in their fragrance and beauty, they shall speak for us all that our words have failed to say. So some among us this day will bring many tender recollections; may sorrow touch these hearts, "Gently as falls the dew drops on the rose." May this ceremony give us renewed strength and zeal in the work we, as Oddfellows, are privileged to do, bearing one another's burdens, giving help and encouragement and cheer, caring for those who may need our care that after death's ministry has been fulfilled, there may be no regrets:

Now is the time, Brothers, no longer wait,
To scatter deeds of sunshine and good cheer;
Wait not till loved ones pass beyond Death's gate,
They may not need us in another year.
Now is the time.

The graves decorated were as follows:

Virginia Potato Crop Only 40 Per Cent.

The Virginia crop of early Irish Cobbler potatoes is but forty per cent. of the average yield. It is largely due to this comparative failure that the new potatoes that are being imported are so high priced. A wholesale quotation of $12 a barrel is a figure to conjure with at this season. An early drought struck the Virginian fields, seriously depreciating what was first expected to be a bumper crop.

Mr. Walter Oke, who gave this information, stated that in his opinion the potato market now depended upon the August yield. He expected that it would be large, and in any event it would be the factor in the market.

LOCAL POTATOES.

Of the local gardeners, it may be safely remarked that none of them have a more advanced crop than Mr. John Williams of North Monaghan. His Irish Cobblers have been in bloom for some time, although there are others to follow in flower. Mr. Williams expects to harvest his potatoes about the 8th or 12th of July.

Retribution Is Chief Motive Of British Tommy

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD.—This army is so absorbed in the job of beating back the Boche by blows that the submarine war, the Russian situation, the munitions problem and the food shortage have no place in the soldier's thoughts.

After a four-days' tour of the front covering 500 miles along the line and in the rear, the visitor learns that Tommy has just one aim, to smash the Boche, and just one motive, retribution.

He is a specialist, let the Navy fight the U-boats and let the Government tackle other extraneous war problems, but let the soldier kill the Boche and thereby avenge the world. Random conversations with soldiers afield carry the conviction that President Wilson and Lloyd George don't know what they are talking about when they speak of objects and motives. Tommy is the real authority. Tommy is a natural born grouch. He kicks about everything from rain to dust and from warm beer to dull razors. But he does find satisfaction in killing the men who plunged the world into topsy-turveydom. In unguarded moments he will tell you that he wants retribution and also why he wants it. A young killed Scot, resting in a reserve trench—formerly a German first line—had some opinions which proved to be typical of the soldier. He was running a safety-razor blade around the edges of a tin of Chicago beef, preparatory to having lunch when a party of civilian visitors came blundering down the trench.

"Well now, it is queer to see civvies out here on a gloried Cook's tour and wearing tin hats," said he in greeting. "I suppose you've come to see what's left of France. It isn't much to look at any more; just shell holes and hell generally. When the show is over we're going to present it to Frits to take home in a sandbag, but I'm afraid there won't be much left of Frits either, because we're going to make him suffer first. The Boche began this show. He has made us suffer. Just the other day I went over the top and saw my pals fall as we went through the barrage and I wondered if there really could be a God behind it all. Mister Boche has got to pay for those pals of mine.

"And look at France." He swept his hand at the awful expanse where millions of shell-holes merged for miles and miles. "Do you think we're going to leave Germany fertile and smooth after this?"

A flying officer had similar ideas. Said he: "Give us an eye for an eye."

CHANCE FOR AMERICA

Many soldiers are anxious to see their American comrades in the line. France they say with a touch of sorrow, has been bled. It is America's chance to take over a chunk of the line with her young elements and thus save the middle-aged Britisher of 45 to 50 years from the job. And they point out, as though in warning, that the war will certainly cross to American shores if the United States should fail when her help is needed.

In their crumbling old German trench the Kilties were enjoying comparative ease, after five days in the line. A dozen or so, with little mirrors set up on the clay parapet, were lathering for a cold shave, their first in nearly a week.

The officer led his civilian charges out of a trench forward to a knoll where they sat down to watch the German shells tearing up a road a mile away. To the rear a British battery was whanging away and missles shuttled overhead in endless, invisible procession.

Soon it was noticed that the German shells crept nearer and nearer. And then a young sub-lieutenant came out of the line and asked "Would you mind moving into the trench. The Boche has seen you and you're drawing his fire."

No one minded in the least. The tourists kept to the trench in the trip back to the machine. At the roadside a Tommy was sweating over his shovel.

"Does Frits shell this road much?" the officer inquired.

Tommy straightened up and saluted with a wink. "Yes, sir" he answered. "He drops some heavy stuff around here about this time every day. Ought to begin any minute now."

"Let's go" said the officer.

The machines had barely left when two high-explosive shells dropped close to the rear car. Five wide-eyed civilians chorused: "Gee! That was close." The chauffeurs didn't even look around. They had fought at Mons.

Half a minute later a third shell banged ahead, much nearer than the first two. It was a rough, ill-mannered shell, throwing up a great spout of soil, rock and greasy smoke. Then a fourth even closer. Enough. "Get out and pile into that dug-out" the escort ordered. There was not a single dissenting voice.

Two more shells. Some workers went right on with their digging and others flattened out on the ground.

That's all there was to the show. The refugees climbed back into the motors.

As the machines departed a road-builder yelled, "Tell the little dears not to come out in their limousines again till the war's over. We delight to see their bloomin' 'appy smilin' faces, but they do draw fire."

TY COBB IS WELL IN FRONT

Georgia Peach Increases His Batting Margin Over Tris Speaker

CHICAGO, June 23.—Ty Cobb is drawing away from Tris Speaker in the race for batting honours in the American League. Unofficial averages released to-day show the Detroiter leading with .368, 25 points ahead of Speaker. A week ago three points separated them.

Weaver, of Chicago, has scored more runs than any player in either major league, having crossed the plate 40 times. Both, of Cleveland, maintained his position as leading base-stealer with 19, and Chapman, his team-mate, kept his pace in sacrifice hitting with 31. Pipp, of New York, is leading the home run hitters with five. Chicago, which is leading the league, noses Boston for team batting with .342.

Leading batters who have played in half their club's games: Cobb, Detroit, .368; Speaker, Cleveland, .343; Malmin, Philadelphia, .315; Chapman, Cleveland, .310; Sisler, St. Louis, .310; Mambaganas, Cleveland, .300; Rice, Washington, .297; Jacobson, St. Louis, .297; Veach, Detroit, .290; Walker, Boston, .286.

Cruise, of St. Louis, shot into the lead among the National League batters with an average of .350, nine points ahead of Rousch, of Cincinnati. There was a general shake-up among leaders in other departments, Robertson, of New York, deposing Zeider, of Chicago, the the leading baseStealer with 17. Stengel, of Brooklyn, took the lead in sacrifice hitting with 14, and Hornsby, of St. Louis, tied Cravath, of Philadelphia maintained the lead in team batting with .305.

Leading batters playing in half of their club's games: Cruise, St. Louis, .350; Rousch, Cincinnati, .341; Jack Smith, St. Louis, .338; Fischer, Pittsburg, .327; Burns, New York, .326; Griffith, Cincinnati, .322; Hornsby, St. Louis, .314; Zimmerman, New York, .313; Whitted, Philadelphia, .306; Kauf, New York, .304; Groh, Cincinnati, .302; Wheat, Brooklyn, .301.

BASEBALL

NO RUNS, NO HITS AND NO MAN REACHES FIRST AGAINST "ERNIE" SHORE

BOTON, June 23.—A no hit, no run, no man reached first base pitching performance by Ernest Shore, Boston twirler; an assault upon Umpire Owens by Babe Ruth, another Boston pitcher, in which the umpire was struck behind the ear, and the defeat of Walter Johnson by Dutch Leonard were incidents of the world's champions' double victory over Washington to-day. The scores were 4 to 0 and 5 to 0.

Shore's entry into the select list of pitchers who have shown perfect performances was made possible by Ruth's banishment from the first game. Ruth had pitched only to Ray Morgan, and Umpire Owens had given the latter his base on balls. Ruth argued the decision. The umpire ordered him off the field, and Ruth then struck at Owens. Other players intervened, and Ruth left the field.

Shore was called in with Morgan on first base, but a moment later the latter was thrown out attempting to steal second. Thereafter Shore pitched great ball, and his fielders turned back every Washington batsman.

DISSENSION IN THE RANKS OF THE GIANTS

Acting Manager Herzog Denies That He will Quit Because of Trubla.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., June 23.—Charles L. Herzog, acting manager of the Giants, after to-day's game with the Philadelphias, denied a report that he was about to quit the team because of insubordination on the part of the players. A despatch from New York stated that the second baseman was ready to pack his grip and go back to the farm to spend the rest of his days.

"Why should I quit?" asked Herzog. "The club is going good and the players are hustling harder than ever before. They are my friends, and I have had no trouble with them since I have had charge of the team. We have won nine and lost three games. That's a good record."

BOWLING NEWS

At a meeting of the Executive of the Lawn Bowling Club the following Skips were elected for the season: T. C. Elliott, R. M. Waddell, Jno. Wylie, E. L. Bowes, W. J. Oke, R. Eliott, R. C. Budd, Dr. Wightman, R. J. Soden and J. W. Maynard, skips to select vice skips. All parties desirous of bowling kindly hand their names to Secretary W. J. Oke at once.

Promotion For Mr. Harold Dunford

Assistant Superintendent of Prudential Office in St. John's N.B.

Mr. Harold Dunford of the Prudential Life Insurance Company's staff in Peterborough, has been chosen assistant manager of the Company's branch in St. John's N.B., and will assume the position on July 2nd. About a year and one-half ago Mr. Dunford joined the local staff, and, from the outset, met with a success that promised advancement. Under the guidance of the local Superintendent of the Company, Mr. John I. Allen, he displayed a deep interest in the details of his work, studied the principles of insurance, and otherwise fitted himself for the position for which he was selected from a number of men recommended from Ottawa, Montreal and other cities. Mr. Dunford's many friends in Peterborough will extend their best wishes to him in his new appointment by the sea. Incidentally, this promotion is another bouquet for Mr. Allen, whose superintendency has produced a convincing number of graduates who are now in higher positions, including Superintendencies.

Campbell Millers Won the Tug O' War Honours in Toronto

The tug-of-war team of the local plant of the Campbell Milling Company carried off all the honours in the annual picnic held at High Park, Toronto, on Saturday. The employees of the parent mills at West Toronto, and of the Peterborough and Pickering branches joined together in what proved a delightful picnic. On several days last week the Peterborough tug of war team set to practicing in their yard on Dalhousie street under the instruction of Police Sergeant Kidd. One of the stalwarts of the team was ex-Constable Bill Smith, who is a whole team in himself. After they had almost yanked a couple of telegraph poles up by the roots the local tuggers journeyed to Toronto, fairly confident of sweeping the field. They had three or four teams to meet, and in the finals carried off first prize, and the tug-of-war honours of the day. All the local staff attended this outing.

A LETTER OF CONDOLENCE

Smith Council Expresses Its Sympathy For Mrs. John Chittick

The Smith Council has sent the following letter of condolence to Mrs. John Chittick Smith:

Bridgenorth, June 23, 1917.

Mrs. John Chittick,
Smith:

Dear Madam,—At a special meeting of the Council, a motion was unanimously passed that the sincere sympathy of the Council be tendered to you in your sad bereavement.

Mr. Chittick's services as collector for nineteen continuous years have been much appreciated by the members, and they feel that it will be a difficult task to secure a person who can render such faithful services. He was especially endowed with tact, which made him particularly fitted for his position. He was a man favourably known by all the ratepayers of the township, and his loss will be greatly regretted by all.

Signed on behalf of the Council, I remain,

Yours truly,
J. W. KELLY.

CHILDREN CONFIRMED.

POLICE HAVE FORTY SUMMONSES

Summons for forty alleged trespassers on the C.P.R. have been made out by the local police on the information of Constable George Greenham, of Havelock. Following certain complaints from the Peterborough section, one of which was of a very serious nature, Constable Greenham spent the closing days of last week east and west of the station. On the east side he stationed himself between the river and the overhead bridge. On the west side he intercepted trespassers between Chamberlain and Romaine streets. In the inner yard and on the bridge and its approaches, no attempt was made to interfere with citizens. These cases will likely be heard in police court this week.

The War Will Be Won In 1935

So said Baden-Powell, organizer of the Boy Scouts.

What he means is that not until 1935 will the fruits of victory be gathered in fullest measure.

He means that it will be the lads and young men of today who will give a country dominance 18 or 20 years hence.

That for the next two decades, the strength of every country now engaged in war will be crippled because of crippled men and insufficient men.

For this war is killing off our best manhood, and leaving the country poor for a generation in workers of ability. Until the young crop of undecimated men comes into the fullness of its fruitage, our country and other countries must go a-limping.

That country with the largest number of efficient men—18-20 years hence—will win the war—no matter how victories may have gone in the actual conflict now on.

When the Napoleonic wars were over, the stature of the sons of France was lower, on an average, by one inch!

Already, the Red Cross sewing-women and the factories who make night-shirts for our soldiers are making them smaller—because smaller men will wear them!

Those boys of tender years now—in their early teens and even younger—must be built up physically, to do the world's hard work of 1935 and 1940. They, too, will in time become fathers, and if their children are to be full-powered men, then lads of to-day must be physically fit.

Right Here in Peterboro

we are doing what we can to make strong men for tomorrow.

We are giving all the boys who come to us—and we want more—vigorful bodies, and are helping to endow them with resolute wills and clean hearts and heads.

We are making lads doubly efficient—and they will need double efficiency when they become bread-winners and producers and fathers.

Right here in Peterborough our "Y" work is feeding the churches, the schools, the professions and industry with the right type of men.

And we can continue this work only through the generosity of those in Peterborough who have reached man's estate and who are themselves earning and bearing burdens and producing.

You can contribute to final victory by helping us keep the "Y" going in Peterborough.

And since you have not been able yourself to go to war, cannot you not and will you not contribute something to keep up the "Y"—which is working not for any profit, but to build up Manhood?

We ask you for a contribution to help the "Y" do its fine work.

And we know that we shall not ask in vain.

Yours for the men of the future—the boys of to-day,

G. A. GILLESPIE, President Y. M. C. A.
THOS. BARRIE, Chairman Finance Committee
J. J. TURNER, Treasurer

Social and Personal

The Picton Times says: Mr. R. Gordon Ross eldest son of Mr. W. T. Ross, Collector of Customs, who has filled the position of accountant in the Bank of Montreal, Picton, for the past four years, to the entire satisfaction of the bank and of its customers, has been promoted to the Peterborough branch, and leaves for his new post this week. While congratulating Mr. Ross on his well deserved promotion universal regret is expressed at his departure from Picton. His clever handling of the duties of his position, his prompt and efficient business ability, and the unfailing courtesy he extended to the staff, and to the customers of the ank, won him the warm regard of all with whom he came in contact. His career in the bank has been upward, from the first, and his many friends look forward with confidence to a future of rapid, and assured success. Mr. Ross' position here will be taken by Mr. Crowe, from Welland branch. Mr. Crowe has only lately returned from the front, where he was in the Aviation Corps for two years.

WEDDING BELLS

CURTIN—HARGROVE.

A quiet, but pretty wedding took place at the Sacred Heart Church this morning, when Miss Cathline Hargrove, daughter of Mr. J. Hargrove, was united in the holy bonds of Matrimony to Joseph Curtin, son of W. Curtin of Peterborough.

The bride was attended by Miss Stella Conway, while Mr. James Conlin acted as groomsman.

Mr. and Mrs. Curtin left on the 8.10 train for Toronto. On their return, they will reside in Peterborough.

WHITE—WARREN.

At All Saints' Church, on June 23, a very pretty wedding was solemnised when Elizabeth H. Ellen Warren was united in holy matrimony to Mr. Oliver White, formerly of the 21st Battalion, and son of Mr. and Mrs. A. White, Charlotte street. The bride looked charming in a pretty navy blue silk dress and Leghorn hat and carrying a bouquet of carnations and roses. The bridesmaid's who attneded the bride were her sister, Miss Minnie Warren, and niece, Miss Doris Warren, who looked pretty in voile dresses, each wearing carnations and roses. The flower girls, who were the bride's nieces, Miss Violet Warren and Lilian Farthing, each carrying baskets of flowers. The bride's brother, Mr. James Warren, gave her away, and Mr. Frank White, the bridegroom's brother, acted as best man.

After the ceremony the wedding dinner was held at the home of Mr. James Warren, 63 Homewood street.

Mr. and Mrs. White took the G. T. R. 5.35 train for Toronto and Niagara Falls.

The bride's travelling suit was a navy blue, with hat to match.

On returnig from their honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. White will reside in the city.

The bride's gift to the bridegroom was a beautiful set of ebony military brushes, and the bridegroom's gift to the bride was a trinket set, and the bridesmaid's were gold hat pins, gloves, gold brooches, and the best man, a tie pin.

Mr. and Mrs. White's presents were costly and numerous, including a beautiful tea set and water set, from the Snowden Hotel, where the bride was employed for a number of years; also a beautiful arm chair from the inspectors of the Henry Hope Co., where the bridegroom was employed. He was also given a mantel clock from the War Veterans, of whom he was Financial Secretary; Also a beautiful Morris chair from Pte. Jas. Haughton of the 21st Battalion, who is home on furlough.

The guests who attended the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. White (mother and father of the bridegroom), Mrs. P. Farthing, the bride's sister and Mrs J. Warren, her sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Davy, Montreal; Mrs. Pearce, Mr. and Mrs. Pearce of Toronto. The city guests were Mr. and Mrs. Murton, Mrs. Goodwin, Mr. and Mrs. Schaley, Mrs. Bugg, Mrs. Gollop, Mrs. Tromley, Mr. Frank Green, formerly of the 21st Batt., Mr. H. Denne and Mr. A. Lee.

During the dinner, Mrs. Schaley rendered a solo, "A Perfect Day" which was very much appreciated and during the evening a number of friends gathered together in honour of one of the bridesmaid's birthday, Miss Doris Warren, and a very enjoyable evening was spent. Songs were rendered by Mr. Allen, Mr. Fred Hartshorn and Mrs. Bugg and during the evening Miss Warren was presented with a pearl ring from her girl friends.

The wedding march was played by Miss Maggie Flowers.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM JOHNSTON.

The town of Trenton was visited by a very sad death on Thursday when Mr. William Johnston, only son of John Johnston, was called to an early grave. Mr. Johnston arrived home two weeks ago from Hornpayne, where he was employed on the Canadian Northern railway.

He was under the parental roof just one week when he contracted typhoid pneumonia. In spite of good medical care the angel of death called him away after a week's illness.

Will was born to be a very conscientious and honest worker and the crowds who attended his wake and funeral showed the high esteem in which the young man was held in his home town.

Will was a member of St. Peter-in-Chains Roman Catholic church, Trenton, where he received the last rites from Reverend Father Connolly. He leaves to mourn his loss, his parents and one sister, Ethel.

The friends from a distance were Mrs. Burt Carlan and Mr. Leo Derocher of Toronto, and Miss L. Fitzpatrick, of Downeyville.

The bearers were: Charles Faltire, Fred LaBelle, Joseph Cote, Arthur Culverson and John Shannon.

WIFE OF OLD PETERBOROUGH RESIDENT PASSES AWAY

GLENCOE Ont., June 22.—Mrs. Jessie Ford, wife of Rev. W. J. Ford, of this city, a superannuated Methodist minister, died to-day. She was born at Napanee, Ontario. A broken hip, suffered in a fall a few months ago, hastened her death.

The Rev. W. J. Ford is well known to many Peterborough citizens. Among his relatives is Mrs. Benj. Shortly, and his brother, Dr. Ford, of Norwood.

(By Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent in France.)

CANADIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS June 25.—In a difficult advance towards Lens, and amid a confused tangle of wrecked mines, partially-destroyed miners' houses, railway embankments, and the flooded ground in the Souchez Valley, a valuable bit of the enemy's front-line trench, extending over four hundred yards north of the river and east of the Boise-de-Riamont, was captured during the night by the Canadians and was firmly incorporated.

The task set for the Canadians was to capture the enemy outposts to the south-west of Reservoir Hill. The attack on the outpost was evidently expected. The enemy scuttled, abandoning ground upon which machine gun fire was immediately turned by Germans located on the hill.

This was speedily followed by heavy artillery fire, which continued during the night and was especially severe in the vicinity of the Lens electric station. The enemy's dug-outs were searched, but found to be empty.

The enemy on this front appears no longer to have confidence in the ability of his infantry to oppose night attacks stoutly. Several raids last night in the region between Lens and La Bassee showed that the German trenches were so lightly held that little resistance would be offered to the raiders.

In one case British troops remained half an hour in the enemy's positions destroying defences.

In a recent cable on the part taken by the Canadians in the work preparatory to the capture of Messines Ridge, mention should have been made of the work of the tunneling companies from the Dominion. During many weary months, while Canadians above ground in the Ypres salient bore with fortitude the constant fire from the enemy guns, behind the ridge the Canadian miners far underground were driving mine shafts for the enemy's destruction. After our troops went to the Somme the work was continued.

It is not permitted to write in detail the work of the miners, but Canadians will learn with satisfaction that no small part of the mining operations that made possible the blowing up of the German lines on Messines Ridge stands to the credit of Canada.

British Steamer Sinks Sub With Long Range Shot

Shell Caused an Explosion Which Parted the Undersea Boat Amidships — Another British Steamer Also Bags a German Pirate

Special to The Examiner:

AN ATLANTIC PORT, June 25. — Officers of a British steamer which arrived here to-day reported having sunk an attacking German submarine. The British vessel sent a shell into the U boat's magazine, causing an explosion which parted the undersea boat about amidships. Each end sank separately. The British steamer was uninjured.

The submarine was five miles distant and running away after having attacked the steamer nearly 400 miles off the coast of Ireland.

According to the story told by the gunner of the British setamer the submarine was first seen when she sent a shell at the steamer from a distance of about 3,000 yards. It fell short and the steamer immediately was swung around so that her stern was toward the U boat, getting the naval gun at work. Eleven shots were fired in rapid succession and each struck very close to the German.

"I knew I had the range after the second shot, and so did the German," said the British gunner.

Boat Broke in Two.

"The Germans were using their two guns fore and aft, while we had only one, but the shells were falling short and he started to run. I followed him with a shell, and the twelfth, the one that sent him down, struck just abaft the periscope. He was then more than 9,000 yards away.

"We could all see the boat break in two and go down, disappearing within a few minutes. I sent four more shots into the water at the spot where she disappeared to let any of the Boches who might have escaped know that we were still around and would take care of they if they appeared.

"At the same time the battle was going on, the wireless operator picked up the call of an American vessel that arrived at an Atlantic port last Friday, and also caught a message that another American ship had been torpedoed and was sinking. The message said that the German was firing on the lifeboats. That vessel was about 30 miles to the south of us, and I don't know how she made out."

Another Submersible Sunk.

Special to The Examiner:

AN AMERICAN PORT, June 25.— Fifteen shots fired by gunners aboard the British steamer Manchester Port tore away false rigging on a German U-boat disguised as a fishing smack and sank the boat, according to the belief of the crew arriving here today. The Manchester Port was not struck in the exchange of gunfire. Her sailors said almost everyone of the vessel's shots struck the disguised submarine.

The Manchester Port's wireless calls reporting the fight were heard by the liner Norlina which last week arrived and reported having sunk a submarine.

HOW ITALY AIDED FRANCE TO ARREST GERMAN INVASION

DRAMATIC SCENE WITH M. VIVIANI

Senator Marconi Tells New York Some Diplomatic History.

NEW YORK, June 25.—Senator William Marconi, a member of the Italian War Mission to the United States, which is headed by the Prince of Udine, speaking at a dinner given by Mayor Mitchel in honour of the Mission, declared that his country's prompt refusal to join Germany in a war of aggression was the decisive factor which enabled France to stem the tide of invasion.

"Germany did not expect us to join in a savage attack on the liberties of Europe," said Mr. Marconi. "She did not even care whether we eventually agreed to remain neutral. Her game was a much deeper and more treacherous one. She wanted us to leave France, our great Latin sister, in doubt as to our intentions.

"On the morning of July 30, 1914, the day before Germany declared war on Russia, the Marquis Di San Giuliano, who was then our Foreign Minister, unofficially informed the French Ambassador at Rome, that Italy would never side with the Central Powers in a war of aggression.

"This information was immediately wired to Paris, but it was not sufficient to make France feel absolutely certain that Italy's attitude was favourable to her, because there was as yet no official declaration of neutrality on our part.

"On August 2, 1914, three days before England declared war against Germany, at a council of Ministers held in Rome, Italy, decided formally to declare her neutrality. News was immediately communicated, through our charge d'affaires in Paris, who went to see M. Viviani, the French Foreign Minister, in the middle of the night.

"M. Vivini, on seeing him, grew pale and drew back, for he was almost convinced that nothing, but Italy's decision to join Germany would have brought the Italian Charge d'Affaires there at that hour.

"The revulsion of feeling when M. Viviani read the telegram was such that he could not hide his emotion. Within half an hour orders had gone forth for the mobilization in the north of nearly 1,000,000 men, which France would have had to keep on her southern and eastern fronts to guard against a possible attack from Italy.

"That million men helped to stem the advancing tide of Germans, to win the battle of the Marne and to save France. Had there been the slightest wavering on the part of Italy, France would not have dared to withdraw a single man from the Italian frontier, and the history of the world might have been different.

"Gentlemen, is there any man who can think, in view of what I have just told you, that Italy's conduct was not a decisive factor in the war?"

BILLY SUNDAY'S FIRST SERMON TO WOMEN

Billy Sunday preached to women only for the first time in his New York campaign. More than 7,000 women braved the rain and filled the seats of the big Tabernacle nearest the platform.

Mrs. William Asher, who took Rodeheaver's place as choirmaster, also took his favorite speech: "Ladies, take off your hats so you can sing better!"

Few of the 7,000 seemed to know the first hymn, "There is Sunshine in my Soul," but when the pianos struck up "Brighten the Corner Where you Are," the whole audience joined in a great outpouring of song.

Mr. Sunday was a little tired after three meetings the day before but he had just got word that "Ma" Sunday was coming home from the hospital, where she had been for the past ten days, and that cheered him.

A neatly dressed woman of fifty, with white hair, who has several times acted queerly on the sawdust trail, went up this afternoon and had a hysterical attack. She was taken to the Bellevue Hospital for observation. A tall minister from out of town who insisted on taking a seat, although warned that the service was for women only, was persuaded to leave. The text was II. Kings. iv, 26.

"Is it well with thee: is it well with thy husband; is it well with thy child?"

"You remember the Prophet Elijah," said Mr. Sunday, "and his journey to the school of prophets up to Mt. Carmel. There was a woman who noticed the conduct of the man of God, and she said to her husband: 'Let us build a little room and place therein a bed, and bowl and pitcher, that he might make it his home.'

"The suggestion evidently met with the approval of the husband, because ever afterwards the man of God enjoyed this hospitality. I sometimes thought she might have been a new woman of the olden times, because no mention is made of the husband.

"You never hear of some old lobsters unless they are fortunate enough to marry a woman who does things, and their name is always mentioned in connection with what the wife does.

"There are homes in which the advent of one, two and possibly three children is considered a curse instead of a blessing. God, in His providence, has often denied the honour of maternity to some women. But there are married women who shrink from maternity, not because of ill-health, but simply because they love ease, because they love the garments and the ability to flirt like a butterfly at some social function.

"There is not an angel in heaven that would not be glad to come to earth and be honoured with motherhood if God would grant them that privilege.

"Society has just about put maternity out of fashion. When you stop to consider the average society woman I do not not think maternity has lost anything. The humbler children are raised by their mothers instead of being turned over to a governess.

"There are too many girls who marry for other causes than love.

"Some marry for novelty and some girls marry for a home. Some fool mothers encourage girls to marry for cause they love fine garments and the and buss around. Some fool girls marry for money, and some girls marry for society, because by connecting their name with a certain family's they go up a rung in the social ladder, and some girls marry a young buck to reform him, and they are the biggest fools in the bunch, because he would not marry you to reform you.

"You mothers are worse fools to encourage your daughters to marry some lobster because his father has money and when he dies, maybe your daughter can have good clothes and ride in an auto instead of hot-hoofing it.

"Look at the girls on the auction block to-day. Look at the awful battle the average stenographer and the average clerk have to fight. You cannot work for six dollars a week, and wear fine duds, and be on the square.

"I believe the time will come when sexual hygiene will form a part of the high school curriculum. I would rather have my children taught sex hygiene than Greek and Latin. A lot of the high school curriculum is mere fad.

"Women live on a higher plane morally than men. No woman was ever ruined that some brute of a man did not take the initiative. I believe a good woman is the best thing this side of heaven, and a bad woman the worst thing this side of hell.

"The devil and women can damage this world, and Jesus and women can save this world.

"I wish I could make a girl that flirts see herself as others see her. If you make eyes at a man on the street he will pay you back. It does not mean that you are pretty. It means that if you don't care any more for yourself than that, why should he? The average man will take a girl at her personal estimate of herself.

"The divorce laws are damnable. America is first in many things that I love, but there are many things that are a disgrace. We lead the world in crime: lead the world in divorce.

"Many a girl has found out after she is married that it would have been a good deal easier to die an old maid than to have said 'yes,' and became the wife of some cigarette-smoking, cursing damnable libertine.

"I am a Roman Catholic on divorce. There are a whole lot of things worse than living and dying an old maid, and one of them is marrying the wrong man. The trouble with the average American girl is that she holds herself cheap. She is just scared to death of being what the world irrevantly calls an 'old maid.'

"Now, girls, don't simper and look silly when you speak about love. Love is the noblest and purest gift of God to man and womanhood. Don't let your actions advertise 'Man Wanted, Quick.' That is about the surest way not to get a man. You might get a thing with breeches on, but he is no man.

"For God's sake, don't transfer the love that God gave you or bestow it upon some brindle nosed pup or Spitz—cats and dogs are all right in their place, but it is out in the kennel somewhere.

"Since the world began woman is the one that man sought after. He will work for you, labour—he will die for you—but, girls, when you come down from the pedestal and make yourself easy of conquest, I don't blame the average man.

"The virtue of womanhood is the rampart wall of American civilization."

YES!! THIS IS TRUE! ANY CORN LIFTS OUT

No foolishness! Lift your corns and callouses off with fingers.

Pain? No, none at all!

Sore corns, hard corns, soft corns or any kind of a corn, can harmlessly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freezone says a Cincinnati authority.

It is claimed that at small cost once can get a quarter of an ounce of freezone at any drug store which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This simple drug dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue while applying it or afterwards.

This announcement will interest many women here for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on every woman's foot.

HAM SANDWICH PHILOSOPHY.

Some Comment on a Recent Ill-Considered Obstruction.

One of our contemporaneous philosophers recently remarked that "two ham sandwiches are always more than the average man wants, yet one is not enough."

Perhaps this is another of our minor modern problems, but we should say that something depended upon the size, quality, and condition of the sandwich or sandwiches in any given instance. Of many ham sandwiches it may be truthfully said that one is not enough and that two are more than enough. If a reform is needed in this class it might be suggested that the obvious demand is for a one-and-a-half ham sandwhich, a sort of special coinage after the fashion of the proposed two-and-a-half cent piece.

Considering the ordinary commercial sandwich any discriminating consumer is likely to find that he has had enough before he half finishes the first one. That rugged experience will probably give him an aversion for ham sandwiches for at least a fortnight. Yet we have seen ham sandwiches trimmed so thin as to resemble X-ray pictures. The whole interior economy of the structure was clearly revealed to view from either side. Of such sandwiches one might consume a dozen before dulling the edge of a moderate appetite. Speaking of a ham sandwich as if it were something definite is clearly a philosophical error unless the remark is based upon a definite sandwich.—Providence Journal.

TRAGEDY OVER LINE FENCE

Recluse is Held After Shooting of Farmer's Son.

WOODSTOCK, N.B., June 25.—Harry Wiley, was shot and killed on his father's farm near Glassville, Carleton County, Saturday, and William Glenn, a neighbour, has been held in connection with the shooting.

Wiley, it is said, was making some temporary repairs to a line fence when Glenn, whose farm adjoined, came up and shot him with a rifle.

Glenn barricaded himself in his farmhouse for two hours and then gave himself up, it is alleged. Glenn has lived the life of a recluse for many years.

"Jack, dear, do you love me still?" "Try it once, pet, and let me see what it's like."

Belle—"I have so many callers that really I cannot satisfy them all."

Nell—"I didn't know you had become a telephone operator."

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

Purple-faced with heat and anger, the policeman forgot his surroundings and glowered at Grant with real fury. So he heard no one approaching along the main road until he was hailed a second time, with "Hello Robinson!"

He turned sharply. This was Mr. Elkin.

"Good morning!" he said. "Have you seen the superintendent?"

"What? Mr. Fowler? No. Is he here so early"

"I must have missed him."

"Well, you will hardly find him on Bush Walk," which was the name of the path.

"You never can tell," came the dark answer.

At any rate, the policeman elected to abandon his self-imposed vigil, and the two walked together into the village.

"My! You look as though you had run a mile," commented Elkin.

"This murder has kept me busy, growled the other, mopping his forehead.

"Ay, that's so. And it isn't done with yet, by a long way. Pity you weren't in the Hare and Hounds last night. You'd have heard something. There is a chap staying there name of Ingerman——"

"I've met him. The dead woman's husband.

"Oh, perhaps you've got his yarn already?"

"It all depends what he said to you."

"Well, he hinted things. Unless I am greatly mistaken, you'll soon be maging an arrest."

"I believe I could put my hand on the murderer this very minute," said Robinson rindictively.

Elkin laughed somewhat half heartedly.

"Lay you fifty to one against the time," he said. "I'm the only one near enough for that limit, you know."

The policeman realized that he had allowed annoyance to shake his wits. He looked at Elkin rather sharply, and noticed that the horse breeder seemed to be nervous and ill.

"I did not mean that I could grab my man this minutes," he said, "but if I can guess him, it amounts to nearly the same thing. What have you been doing to yourself, Mr. Elkin? You look peeky to-day."

"Too much whisky and tobacco. I will call at Siddle's for a 'pick-me-up.' Am I wanted for the jury?"

"Yes. I left a notice at your place last evening.

"I didn't get it."

"Been away?"

"No; fact is, I went home late, and didn't bother about letters this morning. What time is the inquest?"

"Three o'clock, in the club room of the Hare and Hounds."

"Will that fellow, Grant, be there?"

"Ra-ther. Dr. Foxton warned him yesterday."

"Good! What about Doris Martin? Will she be a witness?"

"Not to-day."

They were entering the village and could see down the long, wide slope of the hill. Grant had just come into sight at its foot.

Both men scowled at the distant figure, but neither passed any comment. They parted, the policeman walking straight on, Elkin bearing to the left. The chemists's shop stood exactly opposite the post office, so Elkin arriving first was unaware of his unconscious rival's destination.

He had not answered Mr. Siddle's greeting, but gazed moodily through a barricade of specifics piled in the window. Then he swore.

"What's wrong now?" inquired the chemist quietly.

"That Grant. Got a nerve, hasn't he?"

"I can't say, unless you explain."

"He's just gone into the post office."

"Why shouldn't he? He wants stamps, maybe; plenty of 'em, I should imagine."

"Oh, you're a fish, Siddle. You aren't crazy about a girl, like I am. The sooner Grant's in jail the better I'll be pleased."

"If you take my advice, which you won't, I know, you will not utter that sort of remark publicly.

"Can't help it. Bet you a fiver I'm engaged to Doris Martin within a week."

Mr. Siddle took thought.

"Why so quickly?" he asked after a pause.

"I'll catch her on the hop, of course. If she's engaged to me it'll help her a lot when this case comes into court."

"I cannot believe that Doris would accept any man for such a reason."

"I'm not 'any man.' She knows I'm after her. Will you take my bet — even money?"

"No; I don't bet."

"Well, you needn't put a damper on me. In fact, you can't. Have you that last prescription of Dr. Foxton's handy? My liver wants a tonic."

The chemist thumbed a dog-eared volume, read an entry carefully, and retired to a dispensing counter in the rear of the shop.

"Shall I send it?" came his voice.

"No; I'll wait. Give me a dose now if you don't mind."

For some reason, Fred Elkin was not himself that day. He was moody and fretful as a sick colt. But he had diagnosed his ailment and its cause accurately; a discreet doctor was probably aware of his failings, and had considered them in his mixture.

The post office was not busy when Grant entered. A young man, a stranger, was seated at the telegraphist's desk, tapping a new instrument. The G.P.O. forewarned, had lent an expert to deal with press messages.

Mr. Martin, sorting some documents, came forward when he saw Grant. His kindly, somewhat preoccupied face, was as long as a fiddle.

"Good morning, Mr. Martin," said Grant.

"Good morning. What can I do for you?" was the stiff reply. Grant was in no mind to be rebuffed, however.

"I must have a word with you in private, he said.

"I'm sorry—but my time is quite full."

"I'm sorry, too, but the matter is urgent."

The click of the sounder became less business like. There was an element in the tone of each voice that drew the London telegraphist's attention. Martin, usually the mildest-mannered man in Sussex was obviously ill at ease. But he simply could not hold out against Grant's compelling gaze.

"Come into the back room," he said nervously. "Call me if I'm needed," he added, nodding to his assistant.

Grant did not hesitate an instant when the postmaster reached the "back parlor" through another door. The open window draped in Clematis, gave a delightful glimpse of The Hollies. A window box of mignonette filled the air with its delicate perfume. Grant hoped that Doris would be there, but the only signs of her recent presence were a hat and an open book on the table.

"Now, Mr. Martin," he said gravely, "you and I should have a serious talk. It is idle to deny that gossip is preading broadcast certain malicious and absurd rumours which closely concern Doris and myself. To me these things are of slight consequence —to a girl of your daughter's age they are poisonous. If you, her father, know the whole truth, you can regulate your actions so as to defeat the scandalmongers. That is why I am here to-day. That is why I came here yesterday, but your attitude took me aback, and I was idjot enough to go without a word of explanation. I was too shaken then to see my clear course, and follow it regardless of personal feelings. This morning I am master of myself and I insist that you listen now while I tell you exactly what occurred on Monday night."

"Surely—these matters—are — for the authorities," stammered the older man.

"What? Your daughter's good name?"

Mr. Martin reddened. His agitation was pitiful.

"That is hardly in question, sir," he said brokenly.

"I am speaking of the tongue of slander. Heaven help and direct me, I would suffer death rather than see Doris subjected to the leers and inquendoes of every lout in the village."

Grant's earnestness could hardly fail to impress his friend. But Martin had either made up his mind or been warned not to discuss the murder, and adhered loyally to that line of conduct. He retreated toward the door leading to the post office proper.

"It is too late to interfere now," he said.

"What on earth do you mean?" demanded Grant, yielding to a gust of anger.

"The whole of the circumstances—are being inquired into by the police," came the hesitating answer.

"Has that prying scoundrel, Robinson, dared to cross-examine Doris?"

"He came here, of course, but Scotland Yard has taken up the inquiry."

"A detective—here?"

"Yes. He is with Doris in the garden at this moment."

Grant knew the topography of the house. Without asking permission, he tore through yet a third door leading to a kitchen and scullery, nearly upsetting a tiny maid who had her ear or her eye at the keyhole, and raced into the garden in which the postmaster kept his bees.

Doris, standing with her hands behind her back, was looking at The Hollies, and deep in conversation with an alert and natty little man, who was evidently absorbed in what she was saying.

Grant, in a whirl of fury, was only conscious that Doris's companion was slight, almost diminutive, of frame, very erect, and dressed in a well-fitting blue serge suit, neat brown boots and a straw hat, when the two heard his footsteps.

Doris was flustered. Her Romney face held a look of scare.

"Oh, here is Mr. Grant!" she said, striving vainly to speak with composure.

The little man pierced Grant with an extraordinarily penetrating glance from very bright and deeply recessed eyes.

"Ah, Mr. Grant, is it?" he chirped pleasantly. "Good morning! So you're the villain of the piece are you?"

POINTS TO CONSIDER WHEN PURCHASING A RAILWAY TICKET.

A Canadian Pacific Railway ticket does not represent merely a means of transportation between given points. It, in addition, provides the traveller with every comfort and convenience developed by modern railway science. "Safety First," with up-to-date equipment, unexcelled dining service, palatial sleeping cars, in a word, everything that a railway can provide for the comfortable transportation of its passengers, including courtesy.

STORY OF THE PENNY GIRL.

Likeness on the Old Cent Was That of Sarah Longacre.

In 1835 the government of the United States made an offer of $1,000 for the most acceptable design to be placed upon the new one cent coin soon to be issued. Some Indian chiefs traveled from the northwest to Philadelphia to inspect the mint, whose chief engraver was James Barton Longacre, who invited them to his house.

The engraver's daughter, Sarah, ten years old, greatly enjoyed the visit of her father's guests, and during the evening, to please her, one of the chiefs took his feathered helmet and war bonnet and placed it on her head. In the company was an artist, who immediately sketched her and handed the picture to her father. Mr. Longacre, knowing of the competition for a likeness to go upon the coat, resolved to enter the sketch for the prize offered by the government. To his delight, the officials accepted it, and the face of his daughter appeared upon the coin.

The face of Sarah Longacre has gone into more mints, more pockets, more homes, more stores—yes, more churches—than any other coin in the United States or now in the world.

SETTLING A RATTLER.

Prairie Dogs Did the Job Well by Burying Him Alive.

It would not seem a very easy thing to bury a snake alive, but that is what an Oklahoma man saw some prairie dogs do.

He was resting under a tree when he noticed a commotion among some prairie dogs near him. They would run up to a certain spot, peep at something and then scamper back. Looking more closely, he saw fifteen to twenty dogs about a rattlesnake, which presently went into one of the dogs' holes.

No sooner had it disappeared than the little fellows began to push in dirt, evidently to fill up the hole. By the time they had pretty well covered the entrance the snake stuck his head up through the dirt, and every dog scampered off to a safe distance, all the time barking.

The snake crawled to another hole about a rod distant and went in. Then forward came the dogs again, and all went to work to push up earth to the hole. This time they succeeded and completely covered the entrance. This done, they proceeded to beat the earth down, employing their noses for this purpose. When they had rendered the earth quite hard they went away. The observer examined their work and was surprised to find that they had packed the earth in solid with their noses and had sealed the snake inside.—Los Angeles Times.

ANCIENT ANIMAL GIANTS.

Monster Sloths That Were as Large as a Rhinoceros.

In an account of the fossils of giant animals of Argentina to be seen in the Museum of La Plata the Rev. J. A. Zahm, author of "Through South America's Southland," calls special attention to the mylodon, a ground sloth as large as a rhinoceros and related to the megatherium that flourished thousands of years ago.

The mylodon may have lived within comparatively recent times. Only a few years ago Nordenskjold discovered in a cave in southwestern Patagonia a large piece of well preserved skin covered with greenish brown hair and small bony knobs that was recognized as the skin of the mylodon.

There is good reason to believe that the mylodon was still browsing in the forests of Patagonia as late as fifty years ago. Indeed, there are naturalists who contend that it is still living in some of the caves of southern Chile.

So strong was the conviction that as late as 1902 an expedition started from England the chief object of which was to search for a living mylodon, and, although it failed to find one, there are men of science who continue to believe that a living mylodon will yet be found somewhere in the forest depths of southern Chile or Argentina.

Paradox In Taste of the Sexes.

"Did you ever notice what women eat?" asked a restaurant man the other day. "See those four women who have just come in? I'll wager that I can tell you what they will order before they are seated. It will be either salad, cream puffs or chocolate eclairs."

The women seated themselves, toyed with the bill of fare and, sure enough, ordered chocolate eclairs and coffee.

"If it were not for the men, we would never sell a piece of pie or meat," the restaurant man continued. "For some reason women rebel at the thought of beefsteak and such things. They want something dainty. Even the feminine acrobats of the stage close their eyes in horror at the thought of roast beef."

When it comes to candy, though, there is a paradox. Confectioners say that almost as much candy is purchased by men as by women. The men buy it often to eat themselves too.

"One of the best patrons we have is a former football player now practicing law in this city," said a candy man yesterday. "He eats everything in the way of sugar from chocolate drops to cream candy and always has a box of it in his desk, just as some other men have cigars to hand out. If you want to make him angry, say that effeminate men are the only ones who eat candy, and he will give you a line of argument that would sell goods if he were a drummer."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

She Missed Her Guess.

The car was crowded with shoppers, each of whom carried the special brand of headstrong and aggressive bundle that shopping alone can yield. The women stood in various attitudes of peril and discomfort and made those who sat still more uncomfortable by jabbing them or half smothering them. A tall woman, with angular bundles in her arms and wrath in her eye, had been torturing a small, shrinking man during the passage from Fourteenth to Seventieth street. There he arose with what sounded like a sigh of relief. The dignified woman pushed him back to his seat, saying, with a smile of grim satisfaction, "I have stood so far, and I am perfectly able, sir, to stand the rest of the way."

He subsided with a gasp, but at the next corner he arose again. "Be seated, sir," she said. "I do not care for your seat."

He choked a little, but managed to sputter, "You can stand if you wish, but this is two blocks beyond my street. I must get off."

The other passengers smiled, but there was an ominous frown on the dignified woman's brow, and it boded trouble for somebody at home.—New York Press.

Manners Maketh the Man.

That we are a rushing, busy people is no excuse for lack of "manners." It is just as easy to be polite as impolite and takes no more time.

Bad national manners are the result of bad training, or entire lack of it, at home. If the wife and mother would be very careful about her own deportment, children would learn by example —the only true way to learn. Good manners are the result of the refining influences of home life and cannot be acquired without practice in this way. Culture cannot be simulated or put on for occasions.

Samuel Johnson says, "The difference between a well bred and ill bred man is this—one immediately attracts your liking, the other your aversion."

Manners certainly cover a multitude of other sins. A man may be poor, homely, too small or too large, but if he is innately refined—for true manners are inbred—he will always attract. This is equally true of both sexes. It is culture that maketh man—or woman.—American Queen.

Suffered With Heart For Ten Years

Would Nearly Smother

There is nothing that brings with it such fear of impending death as to wake up in the night with that awful sense of smothering. The uncertain and irregular heart action causes the greatest distress of both mind and body.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are the only remedy that can give prompt relief and effect a complete cure in cases of such severity.

They strengthen and invigorate the heart, so that it beats strong and regular, and tone up the nervous system so that the cause of so much anxiety becomes a thing of the past.

Mrs. M. O. McCready, Wapella, Sask., writes: "I am not much of a believer in medicines, but I feel that it is only right for me to let you know what your wonderful remedy has done for me, and in a very short time, too. I had suffered terribly with my heart for nearly ten years, could scarcely do any work, and would nearly smother at times. I had many remedies, some only relieving me for a time. I got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and felt so much better that I kept on using them, and can truthfully say I feel like a new woman.

"I would advise anyone with heart trouble to use them."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c, or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

REMARKABLE SCENES in RUSSIA; Other WAR PICTURES

In The Bow Valley

It is the boast of the Canadians that the Rocky Mountains north of the international boundary line contain the most beautiful scenery on the North American continent, if not in the entire world.

Many travellers who have made the trip through Banff, Lake Louise, Field and points along the Canadian Pacific to the Pacific Coast declare that even the glory of the Alps is dimmed by the grandeur of the Canadian Rockies. Switzerland's mountain scenery, say those travellers, in comparison with the lofty peaks of the Canadian Rockies, is toy-like. Several Switzerlands could be placed in the Rocky Mountains of Canada, and still not deprive that country of many of its chief points of interest.

From Calgary, which is the last point on the Canadian prairies to the Gap is a rise of about 1,000 feet. At the latter point the mountains rise abruptly in great masses. For thousands of miles north and south the Gap is the only entrance where railway engineers could find an opening sufficient to make possible the construction of a railway line to the Pacific coast of Canada. A head in the railway line brings the train between two almost perpendicular walls of dizzy heights. Through this gateway the Bow River issues from the hills. A short distance beyond the traveller finds a long valley through the Fairhome range, and the Kananaskis range opposite. Prominent among the peaks in this vicinity are Pigeon, Wind and Three Sisters Mountains. A remarkable contrast between the ranges is very noticeable here.

To him who is unfamiliar with mountain scenery, the sight is impressive indeed, for snow-capped peaks single and comparatively isolated, rising to heights of 9,000 feet and more, appear on all sides. Among those in the vicinity of Canmore, a region of large coal mines, are found the Three Sisters. Nearby and along the embankment of one of the deep valleys traversed by the railways are group after group of isolated and curiously weathered conglomerate mountains called "Hoodoosh"—giant earthen pillars, ten times the height of a man—some of them—composed of hard enough material to withstand the erosions that have played havoc with the surrounding bank.

Five miles beyond Canmore the Rocky Mountain National Park of Canada is entered at Bankhead, with an altitude of 4,500 feet, the paths narrow suddenly and as the mountains are penetrated the scenery becomes grander and more awe-inspiring. The walled precipice shooting up in Seven Peaks; on the left is Rundle, called after an early missionary to the Indians, and one is right in the heart of delightful Banff, where is situated one of the most magnificent hotels of the C. P. R. System.

THE CLOSING WEEKLY LETTER

Bryant, Dunn & Co's Bulletin for the Week

NEW YORK, June 23.—The first part of the week was taken up with a readjustment of stock prices to a lower level. This was normal after an extended rise. It originated in a desire to take profits following the announcement of the Liberty Loan. The flood of disquieting reports which attended the reaction, led some to think that conditions were radically wrong. Such, however, was not the case. The market was over bought, speculatively, and a technical readjustment was due. When this was over a fresh buying movement started and for two days we have had a strong market accompanied by short covering.

The 6 per cent. call money market with predictions that the rate would work higher, before the end of June, in connection with heavy Liberty bond payments was at the bottom of the break in stocks. But Government demand for lower commodity prices and war taxes induced much selling. Both of these matters have been market influences for some time past. Of one thing we may be assured, the Government will not do anything to disturb confidence. It realizes that cheerfulness plays a large part in winning a war. We see no ground for worry as to profits and taxes. Money may remain firm for some days yet, but we see no reason for being disturbed. Financial interests are promised adequate assistance from the Federal Reserve banks, through rediscounts and short-time loans.

Much was made of the propositions for the Government to assume control of the railroads and handling of coal, coke and other products. The statement of the Federal trade commission was regarded as overdrawn as the answer of the railroads indicated. For some time we have had governmental supervision of the railroads. Our understanding is that with the Government now responsible for railroad operations it will see fair compensation is assured. An advance of at least 10 per cent. in freight rates is now believed likely. Should his view prove well founded there is room for a considerable upturn in railroad stocks and we advise their purchase on weak spots. They are likely to lead the next movement.

Equipment companies would benefit greatly by an increase in railroad rates. More liberal expenditures are in order to meet war demands and Washington advices indicate that a very large number of freight cars is to be bought with Government funds for use in facilitating movements of commodities. From now on every effort is to be made to increase equipment supplies. Equipment stocks will be more in favour from now on, and we advise their purchase.

Fresh attention has been directed to the motor companies because of the war needs and the part which they are likely to play in the great struggle. An improving Russian situation is reassuring. Drought in Germany for the past month is also a thing which will pay close watching. It is largely a war of ships and food. On the whole the outlook from our standpoint is reassuring.

"Why did you go into politics?" "I'm not sure that I know, exactly," replied Senator Sorghum. "Sometimes I think it was because I was the only man in our busy community who was willing to put in his time thinking up pieces, committing them to memory, and reciting them to a crowd."

TOMMY FETED IN ITALY

Milan's Warm Reception to British Contingent for Front

An Italian correspondent writes: "Have you seen the English Soldiers?" Such was the common question you heard in Milan on all sides when the English were the talk of the city. They were passing through the station, and sometimes they stopped a few hours. Then the rumour spread that English contingents were coming to our front to fight with our soldiers. One day the rumour became a certainty. English soldiers marched from the station to the Cathedral square. They had to wait for a few hours and wished to get a glimpse of the city. They were happy, but much more so were the Milanese.

Our gallant Allies were cheered and feted all along the route. From windows and balconies hadkerchiefs and flags were waved to them; in the Cathedral square a crowd gathered and shouted "Long live England!" They asked the soldiers to sing "God Save the King." Then there was a loud demand for "Tipperary." The soldiers good-humouredly sang and smiled and returned thanks, shaking hands right and left. None of them could speak Italian but all said to the girls: "Bela tosa." How and where they had learned the Milanese expression for "Pretty girl" is still one of the mysteries of the war.

Their return to the station was a triumphal march. I saw them there while they were waiting for their train. Men and women were presenting them with Anglo-Italian dictionaries, postcards, packets of chocolate, cigarettes, illustrated papers, and so forth. Many of them scribbled a few lines on the cards and gave them to me to post. I was very pleased to do them this little service.

KING'S SURPRISE VISIT

Lively Welcome by Girls at London Fuse Factory

After having seen what the modern "War-girl" could accomplish in the munition areas in the north of England, the King expressed a wish to see some of the London girls at work. An unceremonious visit to a London fuse factory was accordingly arranged. The girls were charmed with the King; the King was delighted with the girls. Their interest in the work was so keen, they were so bright and healthy, and cheerful and industrious withal, that nobody could resist their enthusiasm. At first, naturally, they were apt to be a little shy, but the King quickly put them at their ease. Upstairs in one large, airy room 800 young women in blue blouses and saucy little ultramarine mob-caps, were putting the finishing touches to thousands of shining brass fuse-caps when the King walked quietly in.

At his arrival they were as quiet as mice save for the "tap-tapping" of their little hammers and the whizz of the machinery overhead. The King walked from bench to bench watching with growing interest their quick, expert work. At the end of the room he paused to look back over the busy scene. This was the signal they were all waiting for. Each girl raised the brass cap she held in her hand and brought it down with a crash upon the bench before her. Then the fuse-cap chorus of welcome broke out. The whole battery sprang into action until the noise of it was well-nigh deafening. Shop after shop took it up, upstairs and downstairs, and the King passed out into the fresh air with a rattling volley following him. He was amused—and delighted.

CANADA'S FOOTBALLERS DISAPPEAR INTO WAR

Chronicle of Athletes Who Won Fame and Death—In the Big Game Until the Last

Grantland Rice, noted sport writer, took a trip up to Fredericton, N.B. from New York, and then reproduced the following: When a record of this war has been completed it will be found that no one set of men have contributed more to the cause than the sportsmen of Canada. You hear a lot about the stars of England who have fought and died, and of the stars from the States who have started. But neither country has given a greater proportion than Canada has to the cause of crushing the Hun. No one sport in Canada has given a greater number to the firing line than football. Practically every football player of note has gone overseas, and many of the best have already been killed or badly wounded. The list of the dead includes Russell Britton, of Kingston, the star quarterback of the Argonauts and one of the best that Canadian sport has ever known. Gordon Southam, of Hamilton, one of the Canadian all-stars, is another who has been killed in action. At the rate established so far there will be very few football stars left when the war ends and sport comes back to its own.

Canadian football, contrary to general opinion, is very like our own. They play a lot of soccer and Rugby here, but, in the main, football in Canada means just about what it does in the United States. One of the first to go was Eric McDonald of Fredericton. McDonald, in addition to being a star football player, was also a noted sprinter and famous all-around athlete. He carried out the original idea of the football entries, which was to rise through valor or fall on the field. In this case, McDonald has survived to rise from the rank of lieutenant to that of colonel, and it would be no surprise to see him soon promoted to the rank of brigadier-general for distinguished service and military efficiency. His record at the front has been even greater and finer than his record here in sports, where he was regarded much as the U.S. of A. would look upon a Ned Mahan or a John Kilpatrick.

The Case of Longboat

Most of those mentioned are unknown in the States. But there will be few below the southern side of the Canadian border who have forgotten Tom Longboat, the Indian marathon runner, and his manager, Tom Flanagan. Longboat is still remembered as one of the greatest marathon runners of all time. He has put the long distance efficiency into effect as a dispatch carrier on foot, where he has done remarkable work and has been mentioned more than once for his daring, stamina and efficiency. The idea of an Indian dispatch runner proves again that this war is not entirely modern in its make-up, despite the 42-centimetres, the U-boats and the Zeppelins. Longboat to-day is running greater distances at greater speed than he ever used in his best marathon days, to judge from reports that have been received from the front.

Percy Molson, McGill's star sprinter, and Frank Lukeman, of Montreal, are other track men who have done distinguished services. White Victor Buchanan, president of the Montreal Athletic Association, was killed at the front while going over the top with the Fighting 13th. He was one of the best known sportsmen in Canada. Ted Savage, outside wing and captain of the championship Montreal football team, is still another who has rendered brilliant service in France.

These names are mentioned to show what Canadian sportsmen have done and as an indication of what famous names in American sport from the United States will accomplish. There is no football team in Canada, no track team, that hasn't lost enough star players to break up the organization and that hasn't contributed the finest sort of fighting material—game, resourceful, alert, and always to be found on top of the job, making good or remaining on the field of No Man's Land, with the game over for all time.

VERY KIND TO HUNS

Automobiles and Potatoes for Captured Officers in England

The following story, headed "Hune' Happy Home," and published in a London paper, indicates how English papers kept an eye on the treatment of the German prisoners: Sandhill Park, one of the stately homes of England, six miles from Taunton, is housing 150 German officers. The house stands in the midst of an extensive and charming park, surrounded with delightful scenery under the shadow of the beautiful Quantock Hills. It was for generations the seat of the Lethbridge family, but was vacant when taken by the Government as a "home-from-home" for the Germans. Sleek, well fed, and well clothed, the German residents of Sandhill Park are frequently seen taking long walks in parties of thirty and forty accompanied by a British officer and a non-commissioned officer.

Additions to the rations provided by the Government are permitted, and the price of eggs has gone up by leaps and bounds since the arrival of the Germans. It is also said that they are permitted to order extra supplies from Taunton and London. Potatoes were a feature of their diet long after the shortage had been felt by the villagers. Should a German officer require the aid of a dentist he is permitted to travel to Taunton by car, although the railway from Bishops Lydeard offers a cheaper route.

Ramsgate was Grateful

At Ramsgate parish church a service of thanksgiving was held for the preservation of the town on "repeated occasions of danger, and especially in the serious bombardment by enemy destroyers."

All men joining the colors in England are issued with a razor, and recruits already possessing a satisfactory one receives 25c.

What a lot of things you wouldn't do if you thought your friends would find out about them!

Oldest Canadian Officer on Active Service in Great War

MAJOR-GENERAL DONALD ALEXANDER MacDONALD, C.M.G., I.S.O., Ottawa, Senior Staff Officer at the Militia Department, after over half a century in Canada's Army. Born in 1845 at Cornwall, Ont., this veteran of veterans was commissioned ensign in 1863; served in the Fenian Raids of 1866 and 1870; was with the Red River Expedition of 1870, and fought again through the North-west Rebellion of 1885. He was able when the Great War was under way to go down to his office at Headquarters, Ottawa, daily, and lend his aid in the organization of the overseas contingents.

CANADIAN DISCIPLINE

Behaviour in Battle and in Camp Excellent, Says Officer

"The men behaved magnificently. I believe that there are no better soldiers in the world. Anyway, I cannot imagine any better." So said a Nova Scotia officer belonging to a Toronto regiment in speaking to a representative of the London Canadian Gazette of the conduct of his men at Vimy Ridge. "We were on the right of the Canadian Corps. We went into position on Good Friday night and went into the assembly trenches—these were just craters—on Easter Sunday. The men were supremely happy at the prospect of attacking. The joyousness and excitement of the battalion were something I shall never forget. Shortly after daylight on the Monday morning we witnessed the most marvellously intense barrage we had ever seen. It lasted for three minutes, and then the battalion went over the parapet. We ran into machine-gun and rifle fire from the German line, but our men never for one instant wavered.

"It was absolutely magnificent to see them. The extended line went steadily forward. I found myself wondering what it was that impelled men to go right into fire like that. I think the answer is to be found partly in the spirit of the men, which was wonderful, and partly in their perfect discipline. Do you know that the discipline of the battalion is such that we go sometimes for three months without any charge against any of the men worth talking about being entered up. I cannot tell you much about the actual capture of the Ridge because I was hit about five times after we started, and again ten minutes later. There are two outstanding features of the day left in my mind. One is the behaviour of the men which no words can ever describe adequately; and the other is the numbers of Germans without arms wandering about unescorted. I think I must have seen quite 1,500 of them. They simply quitted their trench as soon as our men got there, and were sent back to our lines as prisoners; and so ready were they to surrender that they came along in batches without any escorts."

JOFFRE AND RECREATION

Hero of Marne Fond of Motorboating as Play

Marshal Joffre, of France, said that a soldier must play as well as fight or he is not a good soldier, just as civilians must rest and play to be most efficient in their work. Nor is this doctrine applied merely to the bomb throwers and trench defenders, but it was put into practice by the Marshal himself and by the French army chiefs all down the line. Marshal Joffre believes the greenhedged banks and the shady shores of the rivers of France afford a cure for all ills, and after seeing North America he was sure that the placid streams and lakes of this continent hold a healing power to the value of which Canadians will some day awake. The hero of the Marne was, in fact, what is generally called a "motorboat bug."

Varied Career Indeed

Mr. W. Barnard Faraday, Secretary of the British Aeronautical Society was the son of Mr. F. J. Faraday, for thirty years Financial Editor of the Manchester Guardian. Mr. Barnard Faraday had a strangely varied career. After completing a course in mechanical and electrical engineering, he was apprenticed to a well-known firm. Apparently not attracted by engineering, he betook himself to the study of law. He was called to the bar in 1900 and achieved some celebrity as a writer and lecturer on economic subjects. Early in the war Mr. Faraday obtained a commission in the York and Lancaster Regiment.

Eighty-two thousand nine hundred working days were lost through 29 trade disputes in one war month.

Don't regard any time-saving method of doing housework as shiftless; it isn't.

Drinking Tea Upset Nerves

Mr. Burroughes Compares Canadian Customs With Those in Old Land and Tells How Nerves Were Set Right.

Orillia, Ont., May 29.—"How to be well and strong?" is the question many are asking at this time of year and in this letter you will find the answer.

It tells something of the blood-forming, nerve-invigorating influence of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the great restorative which is causing so much talk here just now.

Nature's way of curing disease is by building up the vitality of the body, and this is exactly what Dr. Chase's Nerve Food does. The blood is made rich and red, and it nourishes the exhausted nerves back to health and vigor.

The experience of Mr. Burroughs as described in this letter is similar to that of hundreds of others in this community who have recently put this well-known food cure to the test.

Mr. George Burroughs, 23 Peter street, Orillia, Ont., writes: "A few years ago, after coming out to this country from England, the change of customs seemed to have some effect on me. In the old country the habit of drinking strong tea was prevalent, and after arriving here I suffered very much from nervousness. If I put my arm down on the table it would shake very noticeably, and while performing my work I would easily tire, and want to sit down and rest. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Nerve Food so I secured some and took a treatment. It built me up and made me strong and healthy. I have not had a trace of the nervousness since. I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment also, and find that it heals the skin very quickly. In fact I find all of Dr. Chase's medicines good."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, a full treatment of 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Do not be talked into accepting a substitute. Imitations only disappoint.

Ontario Municipal Electric Association Opposes R.R. Grants

The attitude of the executives of the Hydro-Electric railway, and the Ontario Electric Associations toward the reported prospective grant of $24,000,000 to the G.T.R. and C.N.R. railways is shown in the following resolution passed at a meeting in Toronto last week as follows:

That this meeting of the executives of the Hydro-Electric Railway Association of Ontario, and the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, which taken together represent a majority of the municipalities of the Province of Ontario views with alarm the statements appearing in the press and the rumours that are current to the effect that another large sum of money, said to be $24,000,000 is to be handed over to the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Railways.

The Canadian Northern Railway last year made its "last aid" call, and received the sum of $15,000,000, and if reports be true they are back again to-day asking for $1,000,000 more than they received last year, with prospects, it is said, of getting it, and which is spoken of as a first step towards the Nationalization of Railways.

It is the opinion of this meeting, that if the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Railways have failed to carry out their obligations and are asking for further extension of public credit or sums of public money to enable them to carry on thus justifying the report of the Railway Commission, that the Government should refuse such help.

That the provisions of the Mortgage given by the Canadian Northern Railway Company in 1914 be enforced (see page 84 Railway Commission Report) as it is hard to consider seriously their claim of equity, unless contracts with Government are looked upon as binding only on the country, and waste paper as far as the Company's obligations are concerned.

The Grand Trunk Pacific be left alone and the Grand Trunk be compelled to carry out its contracts, and that no grant or extension of credit be given these Railways without first giving the municipalities an opportunity to present protests.

And further, that a general meeting of all the public service bodies and municipalities in the Province of Ontario be called to meet in the City of Toronto during the early part of July, and that Sir Henry Drayton and Sir Adam Beck be requested to address this meeting, and if necessary, arrangements be made to send a large deputation to wait upon the Government at Ottawa to express the feelings of the municipalities in this matter.

And that copies of this Resolution be forwarded to the Honourable Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, the Honourable Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals and the Honourable Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance.

ENGLAND SHORT OF BEER.

London Saloons Have Hard Work to Obtain Supplies.

LONDON. — Beer rationing has set in in earnest in the south of England, particularly in the country villages near the big military camps. Saloon keepers are now receiving only a fraction of their former supply and are being restricted severely in supplies of spirituous liquors. At the week-end there are now many South-of-England villages where not a drop of spirits may be had.

London is affected in spots. The most famous eating house in the Strand will serve only half a pint of beer to each customer at luncheon or dinner. Several saloons in the centre of the city had to go for two or three days without beer, and one licensed holder applied to the licensing board to know if it would jeopardise his license if he closed his cafe for a few days, as he had no beer to sell, and could obtain no further supplies for nearly a week.

THE FRENCH MAKE SURPRISE ATTACK

Capture All Objectives in Brilliant Assault

SUDDEN OFFENSIVE BY THE FRENCH PROVES A COMPLETE SUCCESS

General Petain's Troops Strike on a Wide Front Northwest of Hurtebise and Capture Enemy's Front Line Trenches Despite the Fact That The Germans Had Concentrated Many Reserves --- Three British Flyers Successfully Battle German Air Machine.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON (Bulletin), Junt 26 — THE GERMANS HAVE WITHDRAWN IN THE NEIGHBOURHOOD OF LA COULOTTE FROM A LINE ABOUT ONE AND THREE-QUARTER MILES LONG THE CANADIANS ARE STILL PURSUING THEM.

PARIS, June 26.—Suddenly assuming the offensive over a wide front northwest of Hurtebise, the French forces last night captured front line German trenches and completely attained all objectives, the War Office announced to-day. On Monday evening, following a short period of artillery preparation northwest of Hurtebise, the French brilliantly attacked on a strongly organized front and took all their objectives almost instantly, the official statement asserted. The first line of the enemy was completely captured. "The enemy surprised at the rapidity of our attack lost heavily. Three hundred prisoners, including ten officers, were captured. Counter attacks following an intense bombardment of two flanks on this front were stopped by our fire," says the statement.

The French coup was executed at one extremity of the front on which the Germans up until Sunday had for five days been waging tremendous counter-offensive movements. Hurtebise lies on the Chemin Des Dames southeast of Laon and very close to Craonne.

The victory to-day was all the more remarkable since it came at a time when the enemy was known to have concentrated vast reserves in almost the same region for a German counter-offensive.

LONDON, June 26.—Three British naval planes fought ten Germans in an aerial battle over Roulers, shooting one down in flames and probably destroying two others, an Admiralty statement to-day declared. The British machines were patrolling the air, the Germans apparently were starting out for a raid. Notwithstanding the enemy's superior numbers the British flyers entered into an immediate engagement. The fight continued sixteen minutes. Thick clouds prevented verification of the destruction of the enemy's losses except the one plane, which was known to have been set afire. All the British machines were unharmed.

MONTREAL, P.Q., June 26.—La Patrie says: "The disorderly campaign of insult directed against our province just now by the Ontario press is a far greater danger to the national cause than the attitude upon which French-Canadians are united. An attitude which is in perfect conformity with the spirit of our political institutions, and which is furthermore that of quite a number of our countrymen of English origin, although the latter do not manifest it with the same exuberance."

MADRID, June 26.—The suspension of all constitutional guarantees was announced by the Cabinet to-day. Ministers explained that widespread political intrigues necessitated this step in effect, establishing martial law throughout the nation.

ATHENS, June 26.—King Alexander formally announced to-day he had entrusted former-Premier Elutheros Venizelos with the task of forming a new cabinet.

Canadian Troops Tighten Hold on Town of Lens

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 26.—Slowly but surely, to-day, the British grip on Lens, France's coal metropolis, tightened. The Canadians have taken La Coulotte, one of the strongest posts in defence of Lens, as this cable is despatched. Patrols have pushed forward to-day to Mericourt, south of Lens, forcing back the Prussians. The enemy has abandoned an important hill as well as a number of trenches. In that neighbourhood south of the Souchez River, the British outposts were pushing farther ahead. In a suburb of Lens itself the British are advancing eastward, driving the enemy ahead of them, north of Lens, where yesterday and Saturday the British raided German lines almost incessantly.

STEWART LYON'S REPORT.

A special cable from Stewart Lyon, Canadian Press Correspondent in Flanders, early in the day intimated that the Canadians had made good progress around Lens, taking the strongest point in the Lens defences, and pushing their advance in all directions around this long-fought-for town. It is expected that this latest success of troops from Canada, which it is stated was accomplished with relatively small losses, will bring this important mining centre firmly within the Allies' grasp in the course of a day or two.

PARIS, June 26.—Germany is making ready to apply pressure on Norway to force an apology for the opening of the German diplomatic valise found to contain "sensational evidence," according to an article printed in "Le Petit Parisien." The Norwegian Cabinet, it is stated, ordered the opening of the valise in question, and "made a sensational discovery," resulting in the arrest of several German conspirators in Norway.

BERLIN, via London, June 26.—"In spite of severe losses which the enemy's storming waves suffered, he penetrated our line at some places northwest of Hurtebise," to-day's War Office statement asserted. "An immediate counter attack, however, drove him out."

The German version above, confirms th French claim of a victory achieved around Hurtebise, except that the German statement claims the success of a counter attack. The Paris official statements declared all counter attacks were repulsed.

LIEUT.-COL. T. W. H. YOUNG, of Peterborough, who has been appointed officer commanding the Canadian Convalescent Hospital at Uxbridge, Eng. Col. Young saw nineteen months' service in France.

LIEUT.-COL. YOUNG IN COMMAND OF UXBRIDGE HOSPITAL

Important Appointment for Well-known Peterborough Doctor Who Has Seen Many Months Service on the Western Front.

IS NEAR LONDON

Word has been received by Mrs. T. W. H. Young, that her husband, Lieut.-Col. T.W.H. Young has been appointed commanding officer of the Canadian Convalescent Hospital at Uxbridge, Middlesex, England. His many friends will be glad to hear that the well-known Peterborough officer has received this important appointment. The Uxbridge Hospital situated seventeen miles from London has accommodation for between 500 and 600 patients.

Lieut.-Col. Young left Peterborough early in the war to go overseas as medical officer for the 2nd Canadian Divisional Engineers with whom he went to France in 1915. After much service with the Engineers he was appointed to the command of a Casualty Clearing Station. Altogether Lieut.-Col. Young served nineteen months in France, returning to England in March last. Since that time he has been on duty at Buxton.

His new command is a very important one and it is pleasing to know that his long and faithful service in France has been recognised.

Position Open for a Veteran

The local Soldier's Aid Commission has been advised that a desirable opening is available for a returned soldier. Who, if at all possible, has been a farmer. Preference will be given to one who has been a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College, and one who is able to operate a typewriter, or is willing to learn. The applicant, being successful, will be required to take charge of correspondence regarding farms and lands and have a knowledge of stock farming.

If any such a man be available will he please apply to the office of the Local Branch, of the Commission, City Buildings, at the Patriotic Fund rooms. If any one knows of some one who would like this position, please advise as above.

WILL GIVE ADDRESS ON TECHNICAL EDUCATION

Arrangements have been made by the local Board of Trade by which Mr. Howell, Principal of the Hamilton Technical School, will give an address in the Collegiate Assembly Hall on Friday, June 29th, on the value of technical education. It is hoped that there will be a very large attendance. Peterborough is sadly lacking in facilities for technical education, and with the problem of furnishing vocational training for so many returned soldiers, the need is even greater than in normal times. The Board of Trade urge the citizens generally to turn out.

NORWOOD SOLDIER, IS NOW OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED DEAD

Private E. E. Ally Who Enlisted in the 59th Battalion Has Been Missing for Some Time --- Private Blaker, of 93rd, is Wounded --- Capt. M. H. Park on His Way Home --- To-day's General Military News PRESUMED DEAD.

Pte. E. E. Ally, late of the 59th Battalion, Norwood.

WOUNDED.

Pte. C. Blaker, late of the 93rd Battalion, Chemong.

PTE. E. E. ALLY.

Pte. E. E. Ally, of Norwood, who enlisted in 1915 with the 59th Eastern Ontario Battalion and went overseas with that unit is now officially reported or presumed dead. He had been missing for some time. Pte. Ally had been transferred to another Canadian battalion at the front.

PTE. C. BLAKER.

Pte. C. Blaker, of Chemong, Indian Village who enlisted last spring in the Chemong quota of the 93rd Battalion is officially reported wounded Pte. Blaker went overseas as a member of C Company of the 93rd, under Capt. Bygott and was transferred to another Canadian battalion at the front.

The Great War Veterans Association of Brockville propose to raise a fund of $5.000 to carry on their work.

Kingston, June 25.—With an immense cone of mud, rocks and wood, a trench blew up at Barriefield camp on Saturday morning as one of the lessons for the instruction of the infantry school students. It was the biggest and most realistic war effect that has ever been carried out at the camp, and had the camp staff, including Brig.-Gen. T. D. R. Hemming, as spectators.

In advance of the front line of trenches as built last year, Capt. W. K. Macnee had buried ninety-three pounds of explosive. This was exploded by a time fuse of three minutes at exactly 11.03 o'clock. At that time the front trenches of "our" line were filled with men armed with rifles, bombs and shovels. The wiring party were in an advance communication trench.

When the mine went up and filled the air for hundreds of feet around with earth, the spectators had to run for cover, the men in the trenches going into the dug-outs, etc.

Immediately after the missiles had come to the ground and the air was sufficiently clear of smoke and dust, the infantrymen went over the parapet. They lined the crater and in advance of the crater. Others followed to dig the new communication trench and with machine gun, rifles and bombs in action, all of which added to the war-like effect, the crater was lined with sand bags and made suitable for occupation.

LONDON, June 25.—A man who ran a doll factory was brought before a military tribunal and asked exemption from the army, saying that he employed 60 people, and was rapidly capturing trade which was formerly controlled by Germany. If he were conscripted, he said, his employees would be without jobs and the Germans would recover the business after the war.

The tribunal postponed his summons for three months.

KINGSTON, June 25.—Captain J. H. Box, who is well known here for the part that he took in sports at Queen's University, especially in hockey and football, has been granted the Military Cross for bravery in the field. Captain Box won decoration in a heavy attack that took place in April. The British troops attacked the Bulgarians on a fifteen-hundred-yard front and captured positions for a depth of a mile and a half. It was in bringing in wounded on stretchers at night that the dangerous work was done, and it was for this that Captain Box received the decoration.

LONDON, June 25.—The three Canadian tunnelling companies who did such heavy work which contributed largely to the success of the Messines victory have received the warmest congratulations from the British commander. His despatch in reference to their work states: "Not only did they render me valuable assistance in directing the men into the tunnel system prior to the attack, but also when leaving for the assembly trenches. Although there was a barrage on this trench, both officers and men stood outside directing the men to their places, the result being there was no confusion. Everybody was in the right place at the right moment. They also rendered me ex-

IT'S UP TO YOU!

There is a big bunch of healthy minded, large souled, unselfish business men going out on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week to secure $10,000 for the current needs of the Y.M.C.A. There is nothing in it for them except the pure joy of being useful. But they think it is well worth while to give up their own businesses for a time to help along the good work of the 'Y'. They have discovered that kindness and helpfulness are the greatest things in the world.

Some of them will call on you. Be prepared to receive them. They are gentlemen from the ground up. They will not beg, they will not demand, they will put it to you. As you belong in their class you will greet them cheerfully as comrades and send them away with your subscription, happy in the knowledge that the milk of human kindness is not controlled by a trust.

Four Different Views on Conscription Issue

CAPT. M. H. PARK, of the Royal Flying Corps, who is on his way home to Canada.

Minister of Inland Revenue Supports the Bill, the First French-Canadian To Do So — Hon. Dr. Pugsley Approves the Measure.

YESTERDAY'S DEBATE

OTTAWA, June 25.—Parliament to-day heard four different views on the conscription issue. The Minister of Militia, Sir Edward Kemp, led off with a defence of the measure which added little new to the arguments or information already before the House. He noted that of the 6,400 recruits during May, only 1,208 had gone to the infantry branch, where, he maintained, the need was greatest. As to the Quebec situation, he said that the recruiting campaign of Col. Blondin and Gen. Lessard had netted only 221 soldiers, and only 92 of these enlisted from the Province of Quebec.

PLEA FOR APPEAL TO PEOPLE

W. M. German, Welland, declared his approval of the conscription principle, and his disapproval of the "Prussianism" which would not trust the people. To refuse the people the right to pronounce upon conscription because it was feared they would not pronounce aright was, he declared, a new doctrine for a free country. "It may be Toryism, but it is not Liberalism and it is not democracy."

In a trenchant and clear-cut address Mr. German hit out hard at the administrative failures of the Government since the war began. The taint of politics, he said, had run through everything. The present bill he characterised as a bill "not to gain recruits, but to gain an election." While declaring that if a referendum were refused he would have to vote for the bill and do what he could to make it a success. Mr. German made a strong appeal to the Government to adopt the course of submitting the question to the people, after an adequate educational campaign, thus avoiding "discontent, discord, distrust, disunion and disaster."

HON. MR. SEVIGNY SUPPORTS BILL.

Hon. Albert Sevigny, Minister of Inland Revenue, in announcing that he would support the bill, "no matter what others may say," declared that feeling was running so high in his Province that his life had been threatened. However, he intended to stand by the Government. His declaration in 1911 that "Canada owes nothing to England" he got round by saying that Canada was not fighting now for England, but with England, and for her own existence.

His attack on Sir Wilfrid Laurier as "an old man of seventy-six years of age who is ending his career by seeing the two races further apart," drew vigorous protests from the Liberal members, by whom Mr. Sevigny's somewhat labored recantation of the Nationalist doctrine he preached in 1911, was cynically received.

DR. PUGSLEY SAYS CASE NOT MADE OUT.

The last speaker of the day was Hon. Dr. Pugsley. The failure of the voluntary system he attributed not to the people, but to the Government. He recounted some of the sins of omission and commission. He pertinently asked for some statistical demonstration of the truth of the Government's statement that conscription must be resorted to forthwith lest the gaps at the front be left unfilled. The figures given to the House, he said, needed explanation, and the Prime Minister had made out no case for the sudden breaking of every pledge in regard to conscription given to Parliament and to the people. He believed that the best interests of the war would be served, and harmony and unit among the Canadian people maintained, if the referendum were granted. If it were not granted, he declared he would have to vote against the bill, in the belief that the whole situation would be properly cleared up by a new Parliament and a new Administration.

NO REFLECTION UPON SPEAKER.

When the House met, Mr. L. J. Gauthier, St. Hyacinthe, rose to state that, on his return to Ottawa this morning, his attention had been directed to the Speaker's reference to his statement that the 'Barrette amendment calling for a six months' hoist for the conscription bill would never have been accepted by the House had it not been engineered by the Government.

"Nothing was in my mind reflecting upon the Speaker," observed Mr.

BICYCLE RACES BIG FEATURE OF HOLIDAY EVENTS

Toronto Riders Coming to Compete and C. W. A. Officials Will Also Be Here — Prizes Are Valuable.

A BIG ATTRACTION

The bicycle races at the Dominion Day celebration promise to be in themselves an attraction that will be a big feature in the afternoon's events. Mr. Chas. R. Banks has received from the Canadian Wheelmen's Association an official sanction to hold two amateur races, one a five-mile open, the other a two-mile handicap. These races will be in charge of Association officials, who will be appointed to come to Peterborough. While in Toronto, on Saturday, Mr. Banks met a number of the speediest cyclists, ten of whom have signified their intentions of taking part in the local races. Among them is Doc. Morton, one of the fastest riders in Toronto. Thus, the open five-mile race should present an interesting contest. It will be open to all amateurs, and should provide some thrills.

The first prize in this race will be a $50 bicycle presented by Mr. A. A. Bregent of Montreal, distributor of the Pope bicycles in Canada. Mr. Bregent has also placed the services of his traveller, Mr. Fred St. Onge, at the disposal of the local committee for the arranging of the details of the bicycle feature. Other prizes include one hundred pounds of flour, given by Mr. R. Denne; one pair of Dunlop tires, a box of cigars. When the list is completed it will be found to include a group of articles well worth striving for.

Wheelmen Coming.

For Monday's events three live-wire wheelmen are coming to Peterborough, in the persons of Fred St. Onge, Harry Richard of the Dunlop Company, and Bill Gladdish, Editor of the Canadian Wheelmen's Journal. Mr. St. Onge will be in the city on Friday and Saturday and wants to meet all the boys and men who took part in the last bicycle run. Another outing will likely be part of the Monday programme.

TOSSED SWORD INTO SEA.

Russian Admiral Would Not Give It Up To Mutineers.

PETROGRAD, June 25.—How Admiral Koltchak, of the Russian Black Sea fleet tossed his sword overboard rather than surrender it to mutinous sailors of the port of Sevastopol, was related in an official report from the officer received to-day. He said the sailors insisted on this symbol of total submission, but he replied that he had won his sword in the Russo-Japanese war and would never give it up. Subsequently the admiral wireless all other Russian commanders urging them not to resist the muti-

EDUCATION ON TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

In our news columns to-day it is announced that the Board of Trade has made arrangements for the presence in the city of the principal of the Hamilton Technical School. He will speak on the benefits and value of tehnical education as a practical part of our system of instruction of the young. The meeting will be held on Friday evening next, June 29th, in the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall.

It is hoped that the occasion will not only secure, but attract, a large attendance, as evidence that the public are anxious to be informed more fully of the value of technical education as a means of more thoroughly equipping our young people with the practical knowledge that well fit them for better promoting the industrial interests of the city, of which the ratepayers have splendidly shown their appreciation by their votes recently given. Increasing and promoting Peterborough's industrial possessions and industrial efficiency are the concern, directly and indirectly of every citizen, and technical education should appeal to every citizen, no matter of what calling, whether his condition involves the mechanical, the commercial, the literary, or the leisure element of citizenship—everybody is interested, whether or not he knows a screw driver from a screw. We are so closely knit together in interest, the things that make for the general welfare are so interlaced—acting and reacting in every direction—that we cannot substantially benefit any particular interest without, necessarily, benefitting the whole body of citizenship.

The Province of Saskatchewan, with a population of half a million, has 30,000 motors; one to every sixteen of the population. At the same rate Peterborough would have 1,250 auto cars.

SPENDING MONEY TO MAKE MONEY.

The Leonard Construction Company, which is rebuilding the Quaker Oats buildings, has the right idea as to the value of good roads—because it is good business to have good roads. The company is hauling sand and gravel from North Monaghan, and the gigantic five-ton lorries need a solider road for their use than the average township road. The company, therefore, spends much money to virtually reconstruct the roads it uses—because it is good business. There must be adequate roads to suit the company's purposes, resulting in a saving of time, and, with greater speed, less wear and tear of its transport motors. If a company demands and makes good roads to suit its purposes, because there is money in it, would it not be a wise thing to have the general township roads serve the same purposes of the public ,to a saving of time, to less wear and tear of horseflesh and vehicles, more comfort, and greater all-round advantages?

The case for good roads has become so strong that it cannot be evaded or avoided any longer, and our County Council is fully justified in contemplating, and in resolving to deal next November with the problem of a county roads system. We are behind many other counties, many of them of less importance and less need of good roads than Peterborough County. We are sure that men of the intelligence and good common sense of our County Councillors fully appreciate the paying value and importance of good roads. Why they have not entered upon a systematic good roads campaign before, this is hard to understand. Perhaps the dread of meeting public resentment from the necessary increase of taxation. Of course, good roads cost money; and more money means increase of taxation; but no taxpayer in the city or county who puts his good sense to work will deny that the advantages they get from better streets and roads far outweigh the trifling incidental increase of taxation. Anybody who considers the matter for a moment will not hesitate to admit that a very considerable increase of taxation to secure good roads, will not equal a fraction of the annual loss sustained by the farmer who is compelled to use bad roads—in loss of time, in loss of temper, in deterioration of horseflesh, in wear of vehicles. A scythe or a grain cradle costs a hundred times less than a mower or reaper, but the farmer spends the extra money needed to buy the latter, because they both save time,—in saving crops—because they make money for him—he makes money by spending money. On exactly the same principle, paying increased taxes to be spent on good roads is making money by spending money, which is obviously useless unless it is spent for useful purposes.

PARK CONCERTS AND CASH.

Very general popular regret is felt at the action of the 57th band in deciding to discontinue their weekly park concerts; but when the cause, and imperative necessity of such a course is considered, the decision does not seem to lack justification. A band, a good band, cannot be maintained in a condition to furnish good music without money. The city council in reducing the grant, put the band in virtual bankruptcy. This reduction of itself might not have been fatal to the maintenance of efficiency, had not the band's income been seriously reduced by the virtual disorganization of the 57th Regiment, whose officers generously supported the band financially. The last straw was added by the council's withdrawal of the council's customary assistance; the finances of the band were reduced to such a point as to forbid the idea of the band maintaining the efficiency that would permit it to apepar in public to the credit of itself or the city, and the enjoyment of our citizens, who have delighted in the music provided by the band of a character and variety to attract thousands to their concerts.

It seems that the aldermen would do well to reconsider the committee's recommendation of the reduction of the grant before the matter is finally settled.

It is all very well to be considerate of the money of the taxpayers, but there are others whose interest and pleasure, entertainment and instruction, are to be reckoned with. Expenditure of municipal money is not a mere matter of book-keeping ;balancing accounts by paying back to ratepayers the money they have contributed. The whole population is to be considered, even those who do not directly pay taxes, but form an important part of the people of a city. We must make life in Peterborough as pleasant as possible, make residence in Peterborough as attractive as possible. One of the ways in which we can do this is by helping provide for the amusement and pleasure of the citizens of all classes in the elevating and instructive form of good music made popular and easily accessible. The park concerts of the past have not only cheered and refreshed thousands of hard-working citizens with restful enjoyment after the labours of the week, but has done even a better thing than that — brought the people together and provided them with an opportunity for social intercourse of a character to bring the people together and promote an unity of citizenship that lies at the base of general cooperation in the more material way of working together in advancing the building up of Peterborough in all departments of its interests—to inspire and intensify a true civic spirit. The Scriptures tell us that man shall not live by bread alone; or a city cannot become a real live and progressive by concentration of attention and action upon material things alone. The streets, the commercial and factory buildings, the schools, the churches, and the residences, are not the real city, but the people are what make the real city, what give it life and soul. And while we spend thousands of dollars every year on material matters, we should be consistent and thoughtful, not cheese-paring, in the matter of the esthetic interests of those who alone constitute the real city—the people.

Since we cannot have band concerts, since we cannot cater to the higher part of our citizenship without adequate funds to support an effective band, it seems it would be wise for the city fathers to revise the determination which involves starving out band concerts. The aldermen will, we are sure, be not only applauded, but thanked for taking a big view of their responsibility to the people in this matter. The French are a music and pleasure loving people and more effective in accomplishment for this reason—for taking their pleasures earnestly. The city of Paris maintains opera houses at large expense, the authorities taking a practical interest in the pleasures of the people; and the citizens are none the less patriotic —none the less efficient in the work of peace, than they are in their splendid achievements in the war—their country is worth fighting for because the pleasures and amusements as well as necessary services are thought of by the state.

"Music hath charms to soothe a savage breast."
But will it charm the watch-dogs of the civic chest?

AN ANCIENT PRECEDENT IS BROKEN.

Though it is only by a temporary appointment, the fact that Vice Admiral Sims has been placed in general charge of the allied naval forces operating against the German submarines in Irish waters is nevertheless a remarkable illustration of the thoroughness with which Great Britain, France and the United States have joined in the accomplishment of a common task.

Of course, several nations have combined before now, and often, in the attainment of an end desired by them all, but only in the rarest of instances have they so trusted each other, so forgotten that in the war they were waging they had individual interests and ambitions as well as those shared by all, as to let the command of their armies or their navies pass out of their own immediate control. The very thought of that inspires a natural hesitation when questions of life and death are involved, and almost always this hesitation has led to refusal to carry cooperation so far as to put their military forces of any kind under the orders of foreigners.

Even Austria and Turkey have not done quite this, though the difference is nominal rather than real, perhaps, because the alliance of which they are a part is not between equals, but rather that between a master and his servants. The relation between the four western Powers is not of that kind. Of unlike strength and dissimilar resources, they yet are thoroughly independent in everything except their present aims, and that is what makes so notable the raising by Admiral Sims of his flag as senior officer over a fleet that certainly contains more British vessels than he himself took across the Atlantic. The compliment thus paid to him, and through him to his Government and his country, is about as great as could be conceived. It involves a violation of precedent that is really startling, and as a demonstration of confidence and esteem it could hardly be surpassed. —New York Times.

cellent service in regard to water and food arrangements in the dugout system. In fact, nothing was too much for them to do for us."

Captain Maurice Park, who went overseas with the 99th Battalion, and who transferred to the R. F. C., has been acting as one of the instructors in aerial gunnery to the 6th wing since his serious aeroplane accident last December. The Medical Board Certificate declared he had been rendered unfit for active service, and to be suffering from severe shock to the heart and nerves. Captain Park is on his way home, having received instructions to report at R. F. C. Headquarters to fill a similar position here.

Mrs. Tobin has received the following letter from the information bureau of the Canadian Red Cross Society:

Dear Madam,—I beg to inform you that Pte. V. Tobin, No. 196983, 5th C. M.R., who is now at the Duchess of Connaught's Hospital, Taplow, Eng., was admitted into hospital about ten days ago having been wounded in the right knee. Our authorized representative recently visited him and reports that he is going on very well. Pte. Tobin will frequently be visited by our authorized representative while he is in the hospital, who will take him from us any comforts he should ask for. You will also hear through us how he progresses.

Yours very truly,
CONSTANCE SCOTT.

KILLED IN ACTION.

The Kingston Standard says: Signaller Harold B. James of Toronto, who has been at the front for over a year, is officially reported killed in action. Sig. James enlisted in April, 1916, with "C" Battery, R.C.H.A., and reached France about the first of May of that year. He was born in Peterborough, but had been living in Toronto for a number of years. His mother, Mrs. B. James, resides at 40 Humberside Avenue, Toronto.

GLASGOW CHARITY CUP RAISES $209,575 FOR VARIOUS GOOD CAUSES

LONDON, June 23. — The first Scottish League soccer clubs to issue reports on last season's work shows surprising results. Glasgow Celtic, which won the championship of the Scottish League for the fourth year in succession and also captured the Glasgow Charity Cup made a profit of $9,510, while the Rangers finished up the season with a balance in hand of $12,250.

Third Lanark announced a profit of $1,160, and enjoyed the most successful season in the history of the club. The Glasgow Charity Cup games, decided last month, produced $4,500 for war charities, and since the competition was started charities have benefitted to the extent of $209,575.

Montreal Reform Club Expresses Confidence in His Wisdom

Special to The Examiner.

MONTREAL, June 26.— At an important meeting of English speaking members of the Montreal Reform Club last night, a resolution proposed by R. C. Smith, K.C., was carried unanimously, endorsing Sir Wilfrid Laurier's attitude on conscription, while expressing regret at the defections of some of the Liberals in the House of Commons. The resolution promised faithfulness to the Liberal chiefetain and expressed confidence in his wisdom. The resolution was as follows:

The Montreal Reform Club, assembled in special meeting, approves without reserve the constitutional and patriotic atttitude of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, asserting the determination of Canada to continue to the allies all her resources, but wishing at the same time to remain faithful to democratic principles and to preserve national unity, and expresses the wish that all true Liberals in parliament and out of it give him most earnest support.

The chief speakers were the Hon. Sydney Fisher, the Hon. Walter Mitchell, Provincial Treasurer, R. C. Smith, K.C., A. R. MacMaster, K.C., S. W. Jacobs, and ex-Mayor Fuerin.

Closure May Be Put On

To Wind Up the Debate on the Conscription Bill

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 26.—It is now conceded that hardly a Liberal member from the west of Quebec is likely to vote against the conscription bill, though many of them will vote for the referendum first.

The majority against the Laurier amendment will be more than substantial. The one question now is how much delay there will be before the measure is passed. It can fairly be said that from now onward the debate on the second reading is not likely to develop two new arguments either pro or con, and there is no legitimate reason for dragging it out.

The government has of course power to put on closure on one day's notice and wind the present debate up in 24 hours with speeches limited to 20 minutes each, and this may be done eventually.

FAREWELL TO PASTOR

Rev. E. A. Pearson and Wife Leaving Chatham given useful presents.

CHATHAM, June 25.—Yesterday, Rev. E. A. Pearson completed three years of service in Park Street Methodist Church, and with Mrs. Pearson leaves on Wednesday for Guelph where he will serve Norfolk Street Church. The Ladies' Aid presented Mrs. Pearson with a set of table linen, and the Young Ladies' Bible Class gave her a water colour, while they gave Rev. Mr. Pearson an electric reading lamp. The Sunday School presented them with a beautiful illuminated address, and the congregation presented a cheque of substantial proportions. Mr. and Mrs. Pearson have the honour of having three sons, their entire family, at the front. Rev. Dr. Daniels will occupy the pulpit here for the next year.

Yesterday afternoon in Park street Church some six hundred Sunday School children partook of the Sacrament. The scene was most impressive.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Diplomatic Mission

It Was Attended With Difficulties

By ELINOR MARSH

James Maitland, son of an admiral in the U. S. navy, fell in love with and married Mlle. Julie de Lavalle, the daughter of a French diplomat who had spent many years in the French service, a considerable portion of which time he resided in Washington. M. de Lavalle never represented his country as an ambassador. He was an adept at secret methods then in vogue between nations, but, since the open diplomacy of the late Secretary Hay, now largely done away with. When any quick Machiavellian work was to be executed it fell to Lavalle.

Maitland and Mlle. de Lavalle were married while the bridegroom was employed in the state department. At the time the Panama canal was being located and there was any amount of chicanery perpetrated both as to its location and the prevention of its location both by Central and North Americans. Then came young Maitland's opportunity. One morning the secretary sent for him, handed him a dispatch and told him that he wished him to take it to the United States consul at Vera Cruz, who would see that it reached its destination.

Delighted at being thus enabled to make a beginning in his profession, Maitland took the dispatch—it was placed in an official envelope of the state department addressed to the consul—and was about to leave when the secretary said to him:

"It is essential that the information contained in that envelope reaches our consul in Vera Cruz on or before the 18th. After that date it will be too late. It is well that you should know that its prompt delivery will involve the making or the failure to make millions of dollars by certain capitalists. You will therefore be very guarded in speaking of your mission and watch well the dispatch. I send it to Vera Cruz by you in order that no one in this country may know its ultimate destination. Nevertheless there are plenty of spies about, and we may have them right here in the state department. Be careful, and good luck to you."

When Maitland went home and with the exhilaration of youth told his wife of his mission, its importance, considering the interests involved, and all that, she failed to show similar enthusiasm.

"What is it, pet?" he said. "You don't seem pleased."

"Jimmie," she replied, "you will never get it through."

"Why not?"

"They will steal it from you."

"What makes you think so, Julie?"

"From a little girl I have heard my father tell the ways people take to outwit one another. I know all about it. You know nothing."

However, the little woman packed her husband's suit case—all the baggage he proposed to take—then took the dispatch to the library, and when she returned handed her husband a box of cigars. He opened it and removed the top layers and below was an envelope addressed to Senora Sanchez, Mexico City, in Mrs. Maitland's own hand.

"Little one, you're a brick," said the young diplomat. "I see your scheme. It would never do to leave the dispatch in my suit case under cover of a state department envelope, would it?"

"No. Now, Jimmie, do be careful of the suit case and don't let it out of your sight a moment."

Maitland gave her a dozen kisses, picked up the suit case, called a carriage and started for the train. He reached New York during the afternoon and went at once on board the steamer which was to sail early the next morning. He was about to lock his stateroom door on the suit case, when, remembering that there might be other keys that would unlock it, he took the dispatch out from under the cigars and put it in his pocket. If he was followed, with a view to stealing the document, his baggage was surely the first place the thief would look for it. In order to discover if the case had been opened for the purpose, in replacing the cigars he laid all of those on the top row with the ends in the same direction except one, which he reversed. Having done this he went on deck for air.

The next morning Maitland found himself out on the Atlantic ocean heading for the gulf of Mexico. He walked the deck alone, having resolved not to make a single acquaintance. In the afternoon he went to his stateroom for a nap, and before lying down it occurred to him to examine his suit case. Not that he really expected to find evidence of any one having been there, but simply to satisfy himself that it was as he had left it.

What was his astonishment to find every cigar in the box laid in the same direction. The one he had placed differently had been reversed.

The discovery took his breath away. After all, his wife was right. If there were those on his track who had already shown such skill in hunting for the document, what more would they do? Instinctively he clapped his hand to his breast pocket. The dispatch was there. But he did not feel assured that it would be there when he arrived at Vera Cruz. He vowed that no one should during the passage come within arm's length of him.

He napped in his berth and read a novel which he had brought with him during the afternoon and evening, not leaving his stateroom. The next morning he passed on deck. He expected every moment that some man would attempt to make his acquaintance. No man did, but a very pretty young woman sitting in a steamer chair looked at him as he passed her and cast down her long Spanish lashes. Every time he passed her in pacing back and forth she gave him the same glance and the same downward sweep. He suspected her at once and put himself on his guard.

With the exception of the Spanish woman there was no evidence of any person or persons shadowing him. But on the second day out an old lady with very white hair came up the companionway and looked about for a seat. The ship was rolling, and Maitland, taking hold of her arm, supported her to a steamer chair. She thanked him, but he would have nothing to do with her. Surely he had reason to suspect every one. The old lady besides thanking him made some commonplace remark, to which it would have been polite for him to respond, but he turned from her as though she had some infectious disease.

Several times after that he surveyed her from a distance and noticed that she looked very peculiar. Indeed, after scrutinizing her one afternoon as she sat dozing in her steamer chair it occurred to him that she was a young person disguised as an old woman. When the day before the ship was due at Vera Cruz he saw her and the young Spanish woman sitting side by side and talking confidentially he made up his mind that they had been sent out from Washington to steal his dispatch and that one or both of them had already opened his suit case. Probably one did the work while the other kept watch.

A few hours before his arrival in port Maitland went to his stateroom, took the dispatch from his pocket and, looked at it. He felt very happy. If he had got it so far on the journey despite those who were trying to get it from him surely he could do what little remained. Replacing it, he picked up his cigarette case, which he had left on a shelf, lighted a cigarette and, lying down with his novel, began to read. He soon became drowsy and fell asleep.

When he awoke the ship was in port. He felt nauseated. Something had happened. He clapped his hand to his side pocket.

The dispatch was gone.

"Beaten after all," he moaned.

Starting up, he staggered out and on to the deck. No one had gone ashore. A last hope occurred to him. He would have the two women arrested on a trumped up charge. There they were near the companionway. He rushed forward and, seeing a policeman on the dock, beckoned to him. The man met him on the companionway, and Maitland, slipping a ten dollar bill into his hand, told him that there were two women thieves on board who had robbed him. When the women reached the dock they were taken into custody. They made a great ado at their arrest, asserting their innocence.

"I am an American," said the old lady, "and I demand to be taken before the United States consul."

"I will take you to the consulate," said Maitland, "provided your confederate will consent to go with us."

The old lady persuaded the other woman to make no objection, assuring her that it was their best course. Maitland called a carriage, and the three travelers entered, the policeman climbing to the box. On reaching the consulate Maitland insisted that the Spanish woman go in with them. He did not dare leave her in the carriage. She seemed indifferent about it, and the three went in together. The consul being engaged at the time, they were placed in the waiting room.

While waiting, Maitland, facing the old lady, scrutinized her. What was there that was familiar about her? Suddenly—the Spanish woman's back was turned—she gave him a smile.

He recognized his wife.

Rising, Julie went into the hall, Maitland following her.

"Don't worry," she said. "It's safe."

"Where?"

"In my corsage."

"How did you come by it?"

"I've had it all the time. When I handed you the cigar box in Washington it contained a dummy. I kept the dispatch."

"Who opened my suit case?"

"The woman in there."

"How do you know?"

"I saw plainly that she had been sent to delay the delivery of the dispatch and, pretending that I was on the same errand, won her confidence, and we agreed to work together. After she found the envelope was not in your suit case she was sure you had it on your person. You were very careless to leave your cigarettes in your stateroom. She picked the lock with a skeleton key, went in and replaced your cigarettes with those that had been drugged. When you were asleep she robbed you."

"And the dummy? What did she say when she discovered that?"

"She cried. Had she secured the dispatch she would have been paid $100,000."

While Julie was explaining she was opening her dress, took out the real dispatch and handed it to her husband. Returning to the room he had left, he told the Spanish woman that he had found the missing article, apologized and said she might go where she liked.

When Maitland delivered his dispatch his wife did not appear in the transaction. He was well launched in the profession he had chosen.

87 AUTO FIRMS READY TO BUILD ARMY TRUCKS

Three Offer to Supply the Entire 35,000 Vehicles on Which Bids Were Asked.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The War Department's request for bids for 35,000 army motor trucks brought response from eighty-seven concerns, and when the offers were opened today it was found that the number for which bidders were ready to contract was many times the Government's requirements. How many will be ordered has not been determined. The estimate of 30,000 made in asking for bids was based on the maximum transport needs of an army of 2,000,000 men.

Virtually all the big motor companies and many of the smaller concerns submitted bids. Many types and sizes were offered, the prices ranging from $1,031 for one-ton truck to $4,600 for five-ton vehicles. Some of the manufacturers are ready to begin delivery at once and others set varying rates, ranging up to six months in the future.

Three concerns —the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Company, the Hartburt Motor Truck Company, and the Nash Motors Company — each offered to build the whole 35,000. Three companies offered to build trucks at cost plus 10 per cent. profit. Offers to turn out ten trucks a day came from two firms with no limit set on the total.

It is estimated that there are not more than 40,000 motor trucks on the Allies western battle front in Europe, that number having proved ample for the needs of the British French, and Belgian fighting forces. For this reason some officials feel that the War Department should not go above its estimate of 35,000 as the total to be ordered. It is expected that those offering quickest deliveries will receive preference in the placing of contracts.

Give More for Science, Says Lodge

LONDON.—Sir Oliver Lodge, in an appeal for greater state aid of scientific research, declares his belief that England can grow all the food necessary for feeding her people, if proper scientific methods are employed. He says:

"People state that the area of the British Isles is too small to feed the inhabitants. The effort has never been made. The area is certainly inadequate if in the twentieth century we use the methods of the twelfth. But it must be known that of late years discoveries of the utmost importance have cropped up in sporadic manner through individual enterprise and at private cost, though application of these discoveries on large scale has still to be made.

IS CONTINUOUS FOLLY

"Either we must grow our own food or we must labour at other things to provide the wherewithal to purchase it from abroad. How dependent we are on other lands the war has shown, but the mistake of thus depending on them is a continuous folly.

Let scientific men be encouraged not stingily, but lavishly, to attack the problems connected with the fertility of the soil; and the best means of utilizing solar energy in the production of the right kind of vegetation, and good results are bound to follow. What the nation chiefly lacks in this matter is faith.

"The satisfactory promotion of scientific discovery is an affair of millions of pounds sterling. The nation can afford to be lavish. The young energy and the brains are ready; the means and equipment are lacking.

HAMPERED BY POVERTY.

"Even now, in war time, the ancient stranglehold of official parsimony is tight in many instances, and not even now is official expenditure authorized which would enable schemes to move in the right direction. Private purses have to be appealed to, or we have to take refuge in other work of a less expensive character.

"So it has always been in the history of science. Poverty and self-sacrifice are writ large on the portals of every scientific and educational establishment.

"Has the nation learned that it can afford a great deal more in these directions than it thought it could? If it has, the result will be brilliant beyond all expectation."

CARE OF WAR PRISONERS.

British and German Commissions to Confer at The Hague.

The Hague, June 25.—The British commission headed by Lord Newton has arrived here to discuss with German delegates, headed by Gen. Friedrich, the question of war prisoners of both countries. The prisoners' camp, reprisals and matter connected with the exchange of interned prisoners over military age and disabled prisoners will be considered.

Wincarnis is the one thing you need when you are—

Weak, Anaemic, Nervous, Run-down

THE wonderful results of Wincarnis in cases of Weakness, Anaemia, Nerve Troubles, and that "Run-down" condition, are due to the four-fold power that Wincarnis possesses. Wincarnis is not merely a "tonic"—it is a Tonic, a Restorative, a Blood-maker, and a Nerve Food—all combined in one. Therefore, when you take Wincarnis, you derive new strength,—and at the same time, new rich blood—and at the same time, new nerve force—and at the same time, new vitality. Thus the whole system is invigorated, and revitalised, and becomes surcharged with a delicious feeling of new life. That is why over 10,000 Doctors recommend Wincarnis.

Take advantage of the new and lasting health Wincarnis offers you. Don't suffer needlessly. Remember that Wincarnis has an unrivalled reputation of 30 years' standing.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

A SPLENDID RECITAL BY MR. ALLAN'S PUPILS

A most enjoyable recital was given by the vocal and piano pupils of Mr. John Allan in the Sunday School room of St. Paul's church last evening. The hall was crowded to the doors and the long and interesting programme was carried out in a manner that reflected the greatest credit, not only on the individual talent of the pupils who took part, but on the teaching methods og Mr. Allan. A number of those taking part were heard for the first time in public and their performance was indeed most creditable.

The programme was as follows:

Vocal—Gerald Lane—"Tatters"—Miss Florrie Harrison.

Vocal—Coningsby Clark—"O my garden full of Roses"—Miss Meta Richardson.

Piano—Greenwald—"Mazurka Caprice"—Miss Audrey Huycke.

Vocal Hermann Lohr—"Where my Caravan has Rested"—Miss Lettie Shearer.

Vocal—Teresa Del Reigo—"Thank God for a Garden"—Miss Grace Todd.

Piano—Bach—"Prelude & Fugbetta"—Miss Edith Smith.

Vocal—David D. Slater—"Who'll come a-maying?"—Miss Lois Braund.

Vocal—Hubert Bath—"The Call of the Woods"—Miss Blanche Mann.

Piano—Chopin—"Valse in Ab major, op 42"—Miss Mary Harstone.

Vocal—Gounod—"O'ma Lyre Immortelle" (Sapho)—Mrs. H. W Nicoll.

Vocal—C. B. Hawley—"Love's Life"—Miss Mary Fleming.

Piano—Liast (a)—Liebestraume

Piano—Grieg (b)—Papillon, op 43—Miss Marjorie Mather, A.T. Coll M.

Vocal—Lardon Ronald—"O Lovely Night"—Miss Gertrude Stevens.

Vocal—D. Prothero—"Beside the Shalimar"—Miss Jean Herbison.

Piano—Dolmetsch—"2nd Valse Lente, op 23"—Miss Mary Graham.

Vocal—W. H. Squire—"When you come Home"—Miss Ida Lynn.

Vocal—Maude V. White—"Slumber Song"—Miss Camilla Park.

Vocal—Frances Dorel—"The Garden of your Heart"—Miss Hazel Davidson.

Vocal—Dorothy Foster—"Mifanwi"—Miss Ruth Bristol.

Piano—Beethoven—"Sonata G major, op 79"—Miss Eva Waugh.

God Save the King.

Bobcaygeon Boy Injured

Clarence Read Has Foot Badly Hurt in Motor Car Accident

Bobcaygeon, June 23.—Mr. Clarence Read eldest son of Mr. F. W. Read, met with a distressing accident Wednesday evening. He had taken Mr. and Mrs. Fleming, following their marriage, in Mr. Reid's new Studebaker car to Lindsay, and was returning. Mr. Maitland Platt, of Toronto, was driving the car, with Clarence beside him, and Mrs. Watt, who had accompanied the bride and groom to Lindsay, in the rear seat. When about four miles out of the village, just east of the Red School, in trying to pass Mr. T. J. Ingram, their car skidded on the slippery road after the heavy rain, struck against the post of a culvert opposite Mrs. Thos. Taylor's, broke the post, and overturned into the ditch, smashing his right foot.

Clarence was brought into the village by Mr. Ingram, and was taken at once to the office of Dr. Thorne, where some twenty pieces of bone were removed from his foot. He is resting nicely, but will be laid up most of the summer. The car was quite badly damaged, and will be returned to the shop for repairs. Mr. Claude Bottum brought Mrs. Watt and Mr. Platt into the village in his car.

WESTWOOD NEWS ITEMS

Private William Davidson on His Way Back to Canada

WESTWOOD, June 26.—Rev. Mr. Dunn, of St. Andrew's church, Toronto, preached in the Presbyterian church on Sunday and Friday. He was much appreciated by all.

Miss Jean Robertson, of Toronto, is visiting her friend, Miss Gladys Humphries.

Miss Gladys Blodgett, of Roseneath is the guest of Miss Bessie Warner.

The Sunday School Convention, which was to have been held on June 21st is postponed until Thanksgiving Day.

Mrs. D. Brackenridge, Mary and Max have returned from a pleasant visit in South Monaghan.

Keep the fourth of July open for the Patriotic Strawberry Festival at Westwood. Come and enjoy a treat. Proceeds to be used in sending comforts to our boys at the front.

On Tuesday, June 19th, a Bee Demonstration was given at the apiary of William Thompson by Bee Inspector, Lang. A number of interested bee-keepers attended.

Mr. Michael Walsh, a life-long resident of Asphodel, passed away Saturday evening. He will be missed in his daily trips to Westwood.

The Dominion Day Jubilee Service will be held in our Sunday School next Sunday.

A NEW POLICEMAN.

Thos. Beattie of Bridgenorth, Engaged For Summer Duty.

Thomas Beattie, of Bridgenorth, has been added to the police force for the summer months. This morning he was trying to fit himself into some of the coats and trousers of the station wardrobe. In length the trousers suited Beattie as if cut for him, but his waist line was considerably under-developed. However, that should be easily remedied.

Voice of The People

Correspondence under this heading containing or involving attacks on individuals or violent or extreme statements, must to secure insertion, be signed with writer's real name, the owner of which thus assumes the responsibility.

Dear Sir: In regard to the Prince street sewer: I have been walking around this last month smiling, and thinking of getting it on the street, but when I went out this morning, and found men and horses filling it all in and no pipes laid in, I went back in the house and said to my wife, no breakfast for me this morning. For this last month there have been a few men with a sledge hammer, and it was dong, dong, dong. You would think that it was Chief Howard's fire alarm system that was on the rough.

Now the donging has quit, and we have no sewer.

But it was not Mr. Neary's fault. I mean the foreman. I was right there and all the material that he had you could take it away in a wheelbarrow, and they would not get him any.

If I were him and the men, I would have been tempted to get the City Engineer and hold his head under that sledge hammer, while I would hit it once anyway.

Talk about it costing $18 a foot; let it cost it so long as we get it—but to cost that and not get it is still worse. It is a funny thing if we are supposed to have a City Engineer, and not enough material to put in a bit of a sewer. I think the ones who are to blame might as well be in France. Don't put the blame on Mr. Neary, because he is not to blame.

Thanking you Mr. Editor, for this space in your paper, I remain, yours truly,

H. Cruikshank,
251 Prince Street.

Voice From a George St. Pew Regrets Mr. Peever's Departure

A happy coincidence in connection with the annual Flower Sunday at the George street Methodist church, is that every year since its inception, twenty years ago, Sunday has been fine, and last Sunday was no exception.

At 10.30 the Sunday school children each carrying their offering of flowers, met outside the church. The classes under the supervision of their respective teachers, formed into a body, then marching into the church where three pillars had been erected and beautifully draped with Union Jacks and Stars and Stripes. A special platform had been built on which the Sunday school orchestra rendered special music.

Rev. Mr. Peever, who preached an impressive sermon, specially prepared for the children, was assisted in the service by Mr. C. C. Parsons, the superintendent of the Sunday school.

DR. HARVEY'S ADDRESS.

At the conclusion of the service Dr. Harvey rose from his pew and spoke in feeling terms of the coming departure of Rev. Mr. Peever, who leaves on Wednesday. He said that though it is unusual for a person to speak from the congregation, he often felt the pew is too silent, and took too much for granted when their feelings should be expressed. On behalf of the congregation he expressed the deep appreciation of the congregation and the different societies and leagues connected with the church that all felt for their pastor. Mr. Peever had taken an unceasing interest in all church work and leaves a place in all stages which will be difficult to fill.

THE PROGRAMME.

A special programme had been prepared for the service, including a duet by the Tretheway Children, selections by the Children's Orchestra, and violin solos by Miss Mignon Telgmann.

The church was crowded to the doors.

CROPS AROUND BEATTY IN GOOD SHAPE

Former Peterborough District Man Satisfied With Their Condition at Present Time.

In a letter to The Examiner, Mr. Albert Argent, of Beatty, Sask., says that they had three days' rain the week ending June 16th, that it rained again around the 19th, and they have had sufficient rain for their district for some time. He also states that the crops are a long way ahead of two years ago, although there was a very late spring.

PERSHING SELECTS FREDERICK PALMER

Noted American War Correspondent to be with U.S. Troops in France.

PARIS, June 24.—It was announced at American Army Headquarters today that Maj-General Pershing had appointed Frederick Palmer of New York to his staff in the intelligence department with the rank of Major.

The appointment is in line with Gen. Pershing's purpose to secure specialists in all branches of the service, and Mr. Palmer's long experience at the European front, at Headquarters, was regarded as making him particularly valuable to the staff at this time. He will have general charge of the army's relation with the American press, and while his activities will be chiefly devoted to that work the staff will be able to utilize his war-acquired knowledge in other respects.

Ottawa Foresees Prolonged Session

House Will Not Adjourn Before September 1st, Parliamentarians Predict.

OTTAWA, June 26.—Parliamentarians are predicting now that it will be September 1st before the House will be adjourned. It will be the middle of July, at the earliest, before the compulsion measure will be disposed of and after that there will be introduced the extension measure.

Railway legislation has then to be considered, a new Franchise Act and other important measures. Even with morning and Saturday sessions it is regarded as likely the session will run until September 1. If an extension is opposed it is probable that the end of the session will be followed by a dissolution and an election in October. However, the situation is so uncertain that it is difficult to make predictions as to what will happen. There are so many Liberals who wish to discuss the compulsion measure that it is doubtful if the bill will receive a second reading until the middle or end of next week. After that there will be another week in committee so that the final vote will come about July 15. With so many Liberals voting with the Government, there is no doubt now that the referendum will be defeated with a large majority and that the bill will carry with an even larger majority.

ENJOYABLE CONCERT AT CONSERVATORY

Varied Programme Last Night Was Thoroughly Appreciated

The concert under the auspices of the Conservatory Orchestra, last night, was a most enjoyable one, with a varied programme, every number of which seemed to find favour with the audience, judging by the hearty applause. The Orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Gliddon, was in splendid form and its numbers were thoroughly enjoyed. The opening offering was Keler Bela's beautiful overture "Lietapiel," which was charmingly played. Lampe's fantasie on "Home, Sweet Home," as played the world over, as presented with a full appreciation of its possibilities and by special request the "Pinafore" music was played in sparkling fashion. The Conservatory is to be congratulated upon its splendid Orchestra and Peterborough is fortunate in possessing an organization.

Miss Helen McLaren sang "The Valley of Laughter" in splendid voice. Miss Florence Scott was heard to advantage in several vocal numbers, her offering including "The Sunshine of Your Smile." Miss Georgia Cuffe sang the solo "In God's Own Keeping" in most charming fashion. Dr. Park contributed appreciated. Two delightful piano solos, "Haydn Variations," by Miss Cora White, and "Ballet Music from Alaste," by little Miss Agnes Logan, added greatly to the enjoyment of the occasion. Mr. Walter Evans gave a most pleasing rendition of the "Moon Song" from "Pinafore," and later in the evening was heard most enjoyable in a spirited rendition of "There's a Land."

Altogether the programme was a delightful one.

Conscription Issue

Gauthier. "My remarks were directed against the Government solely. If anything in my remarks has been interpreted as a reflection upon the Chair, I desire to withdraw them."

Mr. Gauthier's brief statement was greeted by manifestations of approval.

ONLY WAY TO EQUAL SACRIFICE.

Sir Edward Kemp, in resuming the debate on the conscription bill, declared that compulsory enlistment was the only method now practicable to remove "the inequalities and injustices of voluntary recruiting," and to secure the needed reinforcements for the front. The fathers and mothers and sisters of Canada, he said who were now represented at the front demanded that an equal sacrifice should be compelled from others. It was not right that one family should suffer while another went scot-free. Sir Edward regretted that the coalition proposals had fallen through, and he added that not one of Sir Robert Borden's colleagues had objected at all to the Premier's attempt to secure Ministers from the opposition side of the House.

ASHBURNHAM SOCIETY DOING GREAT WORK

$100 Grant to Prisoners of War Fund and $100 to the Field Comforts Commission

The Women's Patriotic Society of Ashburnham, at their last monthly business meeting, held June 6th, voted to give one hundred dollars to the Prisoners of War Fund; also one hundred dollars to the Field Comforts Commission, and increased their regular monthly donation to the four prisoners of war whom they have adopted, from five dollars a month each to twelve dollars a month each. They also shipped, through the Red Cross Society, twenty-four pairs of pyjamas, eighteen bed jackets, six pairs of socks, for the month of May.

The total monthly collections for May amounted to forty-three dollars.

One-cent-a-day collections amounted to forty-five dollars and twenty-seven cents.

They will hold their usual monthly business meeting in the workroom, Wednesday, July 4th. Will every woman in Ashburnham, who is at all interested in this society, make a special effort to attend this meeting as there are matters of importance to discuss.

Refund of Taxes to Overend Estate

Mr. W. F. Johnston presided at a meeting of the Court of Revision last night with Messrs. Jas. Finnie and B. Morrow present.

It was ordered that $57.86 of the taxes for 1916 of the Overland estate property on Prince and Princess street be remitted to carry out an agreement made by the City Council.

It was ordered that the income tax for 1916 of W. R. Scedding be remitted.

An application was read from N. Minnicolo for remission of his business tax for 1917 on No. 166 Simcoe street.—Granted.

A letter was read from the Toronto Savings and Loan Company regarding the assessment of corner properties on Water street and Aylmer streets for pavements and asking that an allowance for flankage be made. It was arranged that the chairman would take the matter up with the City Solicitor.

SUCCESSFUL MOONLIGHT.

Epworth League of George Street Church Enjoyed Sail Last Night.

The annual moonlight excursion of the Epworth League of the George street church was held last night with about 275 of the young people and their friends attending. The "Stoney Lake" provided an enjoyable sail down the river, returning in good time. In every sense the outing was successful and was thoroughly enjoyed. A pleasant feature that was greatly appreciated was the programme of music by an Edison disc phonograph loaned by the Greene Music Company

LAKEFIELD PERSONALS

LAKEFIELD, June 25. — A garden party was held on Friday evening on the grounds of Mr. George Payne, under the auspices of the Epworth League. The affair was conducted in honour of Pte. Roy Robinson, a former League president, who has been invalided home after serving two years in France. The greater part of the evening was spent in various games and amusements, after which refreshments were served. A large number attended and all reported a good time.

Mrs. T. Simpson and Mr. Harry Simpson, have returned to their home here after spending a few weeks at Stoney Lake.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Simpson have left for Toronto where Mr. Simpson will be an associate examiner in connection with the departmental examinations.

Mrs. Wm. Morrison was in Peterborough on Saturday.

New Runabout for Chief Howard

The Lindsay Warder says:

Chief Howard, of the Peterborough Fire Department, secured his new gasoline runabout this morning. The body of the car was made by the Fitzsimmons Auto Body Works, Lindsay, and is a neat affair, with special provision for carrying the Pulmotor. The car is finished in a bright red and will add greatly to Peterborough's citified fire equipment.

NEW BRUNSWICK "KILTIES" RECRUIT 1,301 IN BOSTON

BOSTON, June 24.—Canadian and British forces have obtained 1,301 recruits from this city since June 7 through the activities of the New Brunswick "Kilties," and their band of bagpipes, Col. Percy A. Guthrie announced to-night. Of this number 108 left to-night for Fredericton, N. B., after a leave-taking which jammed the trainshed at the North Station.

Col. Guthrie has just returned from New York to establish permanent British recruiting headquarters here.

INVITATION TO RUSSIA.

Uncle Sam Will Provide Anything That is Asked For.

MOSCOW, June 25.—The headquarters of the War Industrial Committee was visited Sunday by the American mission headed by Elihu Root, who said that half a million Americans soon would be fighting while America's fleet already was annihilating German submarines.

"Say," he continued, "what Russia wants and we will come in, all. Our high aims, in the war justify the heaviest sacrifices."

671 George St., Peterborough, June 10, 1917.

C. N. Meserve, Esq.,
Y.M.C.A., City.

Dear Mr. Meserve.

Will you allow me to send you a word or two of appreciation of the work of the Y.M.C.A. both in Peterborough here and also overseas. My two sons have received much benefit from the "Y" here for a number of years and since Will (Lieut. W. F. Leader) has been overseas he has written in appreciation at finding its privileges and influences in camp there.

I am sure your work is second to none in its influence for good, both on the civilian and the soldier. Thanking you as its representative for benefits received through my boys, I am,

Yoursfaithfully,
GEORGE LEADER.

C. N. Meserve, Esq.,
Gen. Sec. Y.M.C.A.

Dear Sir:—

My son, Clarence, who enlisted June 3rd, a year ago, is now in France. Previous to enlisting he was a member of the Peterborough Y.M.C.A. It is a pleasure for me to express my appreciation of the help he received from the Y.M.C.A. here in the formation of his character for Christian service. Overseas the Y.M.C.A. is the favorite spot to which our boys go for physical comfort, rest and congenial companionship, where home seems nearer and friends seem dearer. Enclosed is my cheque in aid of the home branch.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) F. J. VOADEN.

Dear Sir:—

As the father of a Y.M.C.A. boy, who is in the service of his country with the Royal Flying Corps, I wish to bear testimony that the influence of the Y.M.C.A. on the spiritual, moral and physical life of my boy has been of the most helpful character along these various lines and I feel assured that the memory of the lessons taught in your organizations will abide with him in the years to come and particularly in this the formulative period of his miltary experence when he will be exposed to dangers, physical and moral, and I hope and pray and will believe that through these very influences he will be kept brave, true and clean. It is a great source of satisfaction and comfort to me to know that the same influence will be thrown around him overseas. God bless the Y.M.C.A. and may you be successful in securing the necessary fund to carry on the good work? We, as citizens, must be ready and willing to do our bit in helping an organization that is doing so much for our boys in this great conflict.

Sincerely yours,
W. A. LOGAN.

To the Secretary and Board of Managers:—

As I have had two boys who have received a training in the Y.M.C.A. for at least 8 or 9 years, one of them in the far West, the other overseas, I wish to thank you in as grateful a manner as possible for the training received in your organization as I consider it spiritually, morally and physically of the very highest type conceivable, and I am satisfied it is worthy of all the support the City, as well as private citizens can give it. The boy overseas writes home on Y.M.C.A. paper and says he treasures the training he received from the Y.M.C.A. more than all else and wishes me to still help to support it which I intend to do.

Dear Sir:—

In reply to your letter of the 7th, I may say that my son, Pte. F. G. McNeeley, who was formerly in the Y.M.C.A. office here, enlisted with Q.F.A.C., Kingston, and when last we heard from him, was at Moore's Barracks, England, but may now be somewhere in France.

Fred says that the Y.M.C.A. is of great service to the Army and is described by the soldiers as "A Home at the Front," and personally, I cannot speak too highly of the "Y" as I well know what this service means to me.

To the Sec. of the Y.M.C.A.

Dear Sir:—

In reply to your favor received today with regard to our boy, Arthur, now for about 2 years serving with the 33rd Battery overseas I have much pleasure to say we had a letter from him a few days ago written on the 12th of May and that he was quite well then and that be thought the war will soon be over. We have heard from others that have seen him lately and they all say he is looking fine and I have much pleasure in saying that I have no doubt that the training he received in the "Y" before the war has been a great help to him in every way, physically, morally and spiritually, and to all the "Y" boys serving at the front and I have no doubt it is the training that has enabled the Canadian troops to win the honors they have so nobly won. I have also noticed with pleasure the great work the "Y" is doing at the front and wish them every success.

Yours sincerely,
(Sgd.) GEORGE HORSEFIELD.

The boys of to-day properly trained will win the war and guarantee Canada's future prosperity.

POSED AS RETURNED OFFICER AND FETED IN AMERICAN CITIES

"Captain" de Willoughby Wound Up a Dazzling Adventure by Marrying Rich Syracuse Girl

ARRESTED IN HAMILTON

HAMILTON, June 25.—Percy Seymour de Willoughby, arrested in Hamilton on Thursday on a charge of false pretences and fraud in New York and Boston, where he posed as a British Army Captain.

Inspector Mitchell, of the Immigration Department, Ottawa, is conducting an enquiry with a view of determining whether the man should be dealt with under the immigration act or the extradition act. The prisoner has expressed his willingness to go to England for trial, but does not want to return to the United States.

He was recognized from a circular sent out by the Chief of the Canadian police at Ottawa, which stated that he was wanted on a charge of passing worthless checks. The prisoner is said to have admitted his identity.

According to the police circular, de Willoughby enlisted in England, where he was an accountant, and went to France with his corps. In France, he is said to have deserted and returned to England, where he again enlisted under the name of de Willoughby. He is then alleged to have passed worthless checks, and was arrested. Escaping from jail in England, he came to America, where he represented himself as Captain Percy de Willoughby of the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, and stated that he had been wounded several times.

He admitted, so Detectives Shirley and Smith say, that he borrowed large sums of money from American millionaires, with which he entertained them on a scale of grandeur and munificence in keeping with the dinners, luncheons and banquets they arranged in his honour. Of all the places he visited he found the residents of Gotham the most hospitable. Even the press of that metropolis headlined him as a hero and distinguished officer.

Finally, owing to his many creditors pressing him for a settlement, he told the detectives, he started on a lecture tour of the larger American cities, attracting large audiences wherever he appeared to give lectures on the war in aid of the Red Cross. No matter what charges may be made against de Willoughby, it is said that he never misappropriated any of the large sums of money he obtained from rich and prominent Americans for the Red Cross by means of his lectures.

The story of De Willoughby's social conquest of America reads like a tale from the Arabian Nights Entertainments or an Oppenheim novel. He was lionized, dined, petted and exhibited as a prize social acquisition by the most exclusive, most prominent and richest families of New York and the other large American cities. He hob-nobbed freely with millionaires, kings of industry and finance, state and government officials and the leaders of New York's most exclusive social set.

With audacity and daring De Willoughby gave lectures on the war to large and fashionable audiences in the principal American cities. On one occasion in Boston he lectured to an audience of over 4000 Bostonians with the British consul on the platform as chairman.

In Detroit De Willoughby was heralded and feted as a hero. The most prominent citizens received him into their homes and clubs and vied with each other in doing him honour.

However, it was New York that gave De Willoughby the most enthusiastic reception.

Prominent hostesses waged strategic battles with each other for the honour of entertaining De Willoughby. The exclusive New York clubs opened their doors to him and he was given the freedom of Fifth avenue and all the grand, aristocratic and palatial homes of the city.

In New York he was introduced to the members of the Joffre and Balfour parties. He even sat on public platforms with them.

While lecturing in Syracuse, romance entered the life of De Willoughby in the person of the daughter of Louis Hueber, a Syracuse millionaire. He brought her to Niagara Falls, Ont., where they were married in St. Patrick's Presbytery. As De Willoughby and his bride were walking down the street after the wedding ceremony, Mrs. De Willoughby asked to be excused to do some shopping and immediately disappeared. De Willoughby has not seen her since, but, according to a despatch from Syracuse, she returned to her parents in that city and intended joining her husband again in Montreal, after making inquiries about her husband's record from the British consul in New York. Mrs. De Willoughby expressed her continued faith in her husband, although he had represented himself to her as a British army captain. He was an acting captain, but really carried the rank of lieutenant, she is reported to have said.

According to his statements the prisoner was born in Portsmouth, Hampshire, England, was educated in a military college; served in the 7th Royal Fusiliers as a lieutenant and was discharged owing to ill-health; joined the 4th Royal Fusiliers as a private, but was again discharged owing to ill-health in September, 1916; came to Montreal, then went to New York last October and obtained a position as an expert accountant, for which he received a salary of $1.85 per month.

Then, according to the alleged confession, came the great round of festivities in New York's social set.

The police say he claimed he left the United States for Canada to enlist because the American papers were giving him so much publicity and praise that the military authorities were making it too hot for him by embarrassing enquiries about his credentials.

Urns Were Removed From Prayer Places

One would think that the last resting place of the dead would escape the attention of marauders, but according to the officials of the Little Lake Cemetery Company this is not the case. On Sunday a number of urns were taken away from their proper places and used to decorate other graves. There were half a dozen cases of this and such conduct is not only most annoying to the owners of the property, but constitutes a criminal offence and prosecutions are likely to follow.

HARVESTING AT IT SHEIGHT BY JULY 12th; NEED ALL AVAILABLE LABOUR

"Happy as tinkers!" was an expression used by a local merchant, to-day, of farm supplies, to illustrate the satisfaction with the crop prospects that prevails in the country. Fall wheat is a trifle disappointing but all the other grains and hay never looked better, according to the reports from this district.

A farmer who was in the shop at the time stated that he had offered a man whom he wished to engage for the harvest, three dollars a day, but he had little hope of hiring him even at that wage.

"By the twelfth of July we will be in the thick of the haying," said this farmer. "I don't think there will be much moved before that day this year. There is no doubt that the acreage under seed around Peterborough is heavier than ever, but from the present outlook the scarcity of labour will be a serious problem."

This farmer was somewhat skeptical of the help that might be rendered by citizens, however eager they might be to assist in harvesting all the crops this year. They realize that there would be many men who would be greatly helpful, but they want to avoid getting those who would be absolutely worthless, and who would be taking a good man's place.

Early in the Spring this question was weighed with all the enhusiasm that usually welcomes future movements. But the softening distance has dissolved, and the work is close at hand.

There were suggestions of weekend labourers, of holidays spent with the farmers, of factory hands laying off for the two important months of July and August. That was more than two months ago, and now, two weeks hence, the farmers will be in dire need of all the available labour this city can provide.

If any concerted action is to be taken in this matter it should be done as soon as possible, and it would probably materialize more quickly if some of the farmers would take the lead in appealing to the citizens, explaining the needs in their actuality, and expressing, perhaps, a spirit of toleration for that kind of help that may not be expert in the country, but which is actuated by a strong desire to allow none of this year's crop go to waste through lack of effort during the harvest season.

The Reeves of the surrounding townships might take the lead in this matter, together with prominent farmers, including ex-Wardens and others who know what the farmers require, and to what extent the city can be of service.

COL. ATKINS WILL SPEAK

Member Who Went "Over the Top" at Vimy Has Floor at Ottawa

OTTAWA, Ont., June 26. — Col. James Arthur, Conservative, who 'went over" at Vimy Ridge, has the floor in the conscription debate this afternoon. As a practical soldier he will tell the House that the men at the front are not concerned with what Borden said in 1917, or what Laurier promised during times of peace. What they want is reinforcements. Their business is winning the war, and Col. Arthurs will declare that they need help. Other Conservatives scheduled to speak to-day or to-morrow include Donald Sutherland Edwards, of Frontenac, who will make an attack on the Liberal referendum, Weichel, of Waterloo, who is said to be coming out courageously for conscription despite the difficulties of such a course in his constituency, and Dr. Chabot, of Ottawo, one of the French supporters of the compulsion bill. On the Liberal side, A. K. Maclean, of the Maritime Provinces, will speak.

Civil Servants Are Not Exempt

OSGOODE HALL, Toronto, June 26. —Federal and Provincial civil servants and judges in Ontario must pay their income taxes just like other people. So declared the Ontario Divisional Court to-day on the appeal in the long disputed test case of County Judge Morson, who claimed that his position relieved him from such taxes.

WEST ENDS TOOK TWO GAMES FROM SOUTH ENDS

Last night at the Water street alleys an exciting game was played, when the South Ends, who are the league leaders, dropped two out of three games to the West Ends. The first game was won by the West Ends by a large margin, but the South Ends came back in the second and won out by two pins, but in the third game again went down to defeat before the West Ends.

To-night a great game is expected when the Allies meet the C. G. E. five. The following are last night's scores:

South End—

CZECH REGIMENTS DESERTED

Three of Them Went Over From Austrian to Russian Army.

AMSTERDAM, June 25. — Three Czech regiments have deserted to the Russians, according to a statement on Saturday to a committee of deputies from southern Austria by F. Von Georgi, Minister of Defences in the retiring Austrian Cabinet, as published in the Lokal Anzeiger and Tageblatt of Berlin. The statement was made during a discussion of the demand of the Czech deputies for the release of Herr Klofac, whose sentence to death on the charge of attempting to reconcile Russia and Bohemia was commuted.

Herr Von Georgi said Czech legions had been formed in all the armies of Austria's enemies, and that of all the Czechs of military age who were in Russia when the war began only three had returned to Austria.

He also said that Herr Pavlu, formerly director of the Bohemian news paper Narodni Listy, of Prague, had boasted publicly in Russia that when an ensign in the Austrian army he had deserted to the Russians after his companions had killed Austrian outposts.

Von Georgi's statements are said to have made a great sensation. The Czech deputies, angered by them, charged that they had been made in a vengeful spirit on account of the fact that the Ministry had been forced to resign.

READ THE VALEDICTORY AT ACADEMY CLOSING

Miss Gertrude McCabe of Peterborough at Lindsay Commencement.

The annual commencement of St. Joseph's Academy, Lindsay, was attended by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, Rev. Dean McColl and Rev. J. J. O'Brien of Peterborough.

The valedictory of the students was a masterpiece of English diction, says the Lindsay Post. An extract from Lord Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar" was happily selected as a theme around which was beautifully entwined ennobling sentiments and lofty ideals. Miss Gertrude McCabe, of Peterborough, achieved a triumph as valedictorian, her delivery being graceful, her enunciation clear and distinct and she well did the many tributes showered upon by the different speakers.

LEFT FOR DANCE LAND IN MERCER

Tawdry Tale of a Midsummer Night in Police Court Case

There was weeping and wailing around the police station this morning when two women were committed to the Mercer reformatory for a year, following their arrest about daybreak on a charge of being street walkers and common prostitutes.

Last night, it was reported, they had started out to attend a dance about ten o'clock and within twelve hours they were on their way to the Mercer. Their sobs sounded deeply penitent after the court had disposed of them, but they made no impression against the record the police had counted up during the past two months.

The two women were Mrs. Blanche Deline and Mrs. Annie Deline. They have resided at 255 George street, between Sherbrooke and King streets, a house listed under the name of James Taggart. Following the arrest of the two women this morning the police apparently concluded that it was the psychological moment to make a complete clean up, and as a result Mr. Taggart spent the day in the police station cells, charged with being keeper of this particular house which, it is stated, has been under surveillance for some time.

P. C. Blade was on his way home about four o'clock when he made the arrest that immediately provided the signal for the raid the police had been planning, awaiting only some infraction for a general round-up.

Taggart and two other women will likely appear to-morrow morning.

WEDDING BELLS

ALLEN—MACNABB.
On Saturday evening, June 23rd, at Parkdale Presbyterian church, Toronto, Rev. A. Logan Geggie, united in marriage Vesta, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert MacNabb, Water street, to Mr. Frederick R. Allen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Allen, Morrow street.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Allen will reside in Toronto.

DRAKE—HUNTER
A quiet wedding took place this morning at eight o'clock at St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, when Pansie, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Hunter was united in marriage to Mr. Norman S. Drake, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Drake of Peterborough.

They were unattended. After the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Drake left for a trip on the Lakes and on their return will reside in Peterborough.

O'CONNOR—O'HERON.
A very pretty wedding was celebrated at the Church of the Immaculate Conception yesterday, when Nellie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice O'Heron, of Auburn, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Stephen O'Connor, son of Jas. O'Connor, by Rev. Dean McColl.

The bride was given away by her father, and assisted by her sister, Mary, while Mr. George O'Connor, brother of the groom, was best man.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride, where a dainty dejeuner was served.

Mr. and Mrs. O'Connor left on the afternoon train for a short honeymoon.

READ—FLEMING.
Christ Church, Bobcaygeon, was the scene of the wedding on June 20 of Kathleen Marie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. [illegible], to George Smith Fleming, son of the late William Fleming and Mrs. Fleming of Glenmorris, the Rev. T. A. Hind officiating. The bride wore white silk crepe de chine, with Georgette crepe and tulle and tulle veil with orange blossoms. She was attended by a maid of honour, her sister, Miss Meta de Cassigne Read, in white embroidered chiffon over pink satin and white Panama with taffeta trimming, and Miss Lucy Platt of Toronto, in pink and white with hat to match. Mr. R. P. Wilson, of Lindsay, acted as best man. The ring-bearer, Master Wilford McIvor, of Toronto, was attired in white silk. Mr. C. C. Forsythe of Lindsay, played the wedding music. After the ceremony a reception and a breakfast were held for the immediate relatives at the home of the bride's mother, the young couple leaving for Lindsay and points west, the bride wearing Paddy green Jersey cloth and white broadcloth, with hat of white Milan straw with black velvet facing and bird of Paradise.

O'CONNOR—O'REILLY.
A quiet wedding was solemnized this morning at St. Peter's Cathedral, Rev. J. J. O'Brien officiating, when Pearl O'Reilly was united in matrimony to Fergus J. O'Connor. After a brief honeymoon the young couple will reside in Emnismore.

OLIVER EXPLAINS POSITION

Believes Conscription Bill is for help of Private Profiteers.

HAMILTON, June 26.—Hon. Frank Oliver, in a letter to the Great War Veterans' Association, sent in response to a resolution in favour of conscription, passed by the association and forwarded to him, says in part:

"If I believed that the military service bill was framed for or intended for the purpose of reinforcing the Canadians lines in France, I would support it.

"I do not read in its terms, nor do I conclude from the record of the Government, that in introducing it this is its purpose. If the purpose of the bill were to equalize the burden of necessary military service upon all sections of the country, and all citizens in those sections, it would say so.

"The arguments put forward in its support indicate that it is not intended to reinforce the firing line as much as to reinforce the munitions plants or other establishments of private profiteers.

"I am for the conscription of manpower for military service: "I am against the conscription of manpower for industrial service for private profits, which is, I understand the principal purpose of the bill."

CITY MAY ENGAGE IN STORAGE BUSINESS.

People of Chatham Successfully Fighting the High Cost of Living.

CHATHAM, June 25. — Following the success that has crowned the efforts of the Civic Purchasing Committee in supplying local consumers with commodities at reduced prices, a movement has been inaugurated to install a cold storage plant in connection with the local Hydro station making it possible for the committee to purchase butter, eggs, fish and other perishable commodities in large quantities. The Public Utilities Commission is considering the matter and it is possible that a recommendation will be made to carry out the proposal.

A comparison of prices to-day shows that butter and eggs were selling on the Chatham market at considerably higher prices than in local stores. On the market the price of butter ranged from 35 to 38 cents per pound and eggs were the same price per dozen. In the stores butter sold for 30 to 35 cents and eggs at 30 cents.

Appeals Made to Russian Workmen

All Russian Congress Called Off Its Formal Sessions in Order To Allow Scores of Committees To Plead with Petrograd Workmen

(By Wm. G. Shepherd).

PETROGRAD, June 26.—The all-Russian Congress of Workmen and Soldiers called off its formal sessions to-day to avert disturbances among Petrograd workmen by appeals of scores of committees.

Charles Edward Russell, the American Socialist, and one of the members of the United States mission, had been invited to address the Congress. He was not advised of any change in plans, and appeared at the convention hall to find the Congress not in session. All its members were working on committees going about the city and pleading with workingmen not to participate in demonstrations constantly being urged by agitators.

Dr. Gunn President of the Congress met Russell and apologized for the change in plans declaring it was made necessary by the critical situation in the city. He intimated that in order to avert possible bloodshed, the Congress was determined that any demonstrations must be broken up at all costs. Members of the Congress admitted the situation was very acute.

ROOT IS OPTIMISTIC.

Moscow, June 26.—The Root Mission left Moscow Sunday night with a distinct sense of encouragement. After their conference with leaders of industrial and political life in Moscow Mr. Root and his associates are disposed to view the Russian situation with greater optimism. The different political atmosphere of Moscow, the marked cordiality of their welcome and the ready response of representatives of all classes to the appeals by Mr. Root, have established the fact that between the characteristically national viewpoint of Moscow and that of the Root Mission, there is no important difference as regards conduct of the war.

The working men, soldiers and socialistic elements in Moscow, with the exception of the maximalists, are showing a greater inclination to give full support to the provisional Government and lay aside for the time being their partizan differences in the interest of the broad democratic principles on which all are agreed. This fact was noted with particular satisfaction by the mission.

CLOUDS LIFTING.

"I have derived much more encouragement from my observations of conditions in Moscow than I expected," said Mr. Root. "It seems clear that the men we met there and the classes they represent are patriotically devoted to the task of bringing the country through her present difficulty. I may say that I think, after visiting Moscow, that there is a fair chance of their succeeding.

"I believe that the cloud which rested over the peasant population and some of the less informed classes already shows signs of lifting. They are attaining a conception of the meaning of their new liberty and of the way in which to preserve it."

SITUATION IS GRAVE.

New York, June 26.—The Russian situation is grave, Ambassador B. A. Bakhmetieff, head of the Russian Mission, told the Senate to-day, but the ultimate outcome is certain to be favourable to democracy's cause.

"Attempts on the part of disorganising elements to take advantage of this element of transition will be made," he said. "They will be met with calm and confidence. The Russian people and its army are rallying around the banners of freedom," he asserted, amid cheers. "They are strengthening their ranks in cheerful self-consciousness to die, but not to be slaves."

The many rumours of the disaffection of the Russian Army were false, the envoy declared. A strong note of optimism ran through the Ambassador's address. He was given a hearty welcome by the Upper House, Senate and gallery joining in the applause.

Following the address, the Senate adopted a concurrent resolution, introduced by Gore, Oklahama, saying Congress heard with satisfaction the commission's assurance and expressing hope that Russia would soon be victorious and peaceful.

THE MARKETS

Stock receipts at the Union Stock Yards were unusually small yesterday and, as a result, the market was cleaned up by eleven o'clock. Extra choice steers were in strong demand at Monday's prices. Bulls were not in demand. The few received sold at about fifty cents under Monday's market. Good cows were in demand at $9.75. Poor cows were lower.

Hog values advanced twenty-five cents to $15.50 a hundred pounds. When the market opened the sellers asked $15.75, an advance of fifty cents, but when the buyers showed no inclination to talk business the twenty-five cent advance was accepted.

The market for small meats was steady with Monday:.

Child Irritable From Itching Rash On Face Healed By Cuticura

"The trouble began with a small rash on my little boy's face and itched a great deal. It was inflamed and red and he was very irritable. The breaking out disfigured his face for the time being. He scratched the sore eruptions until they would bleed, especially at night. I used ——, but it did not heal him. I sent for a sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and then bought more, and the trouble disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. J. S. Bell, Hope River, P. E. I., Feb. 18, 1916.

Cheap soaps, harsh soaps, coarse, strongly medicated soaps are responsible for half the skin troubles in the world. They make little irritations into great ones. Stop the use of all doubtful soaps. Use Cuticura for all toilet purposes. Help it with touches of Ointment applied to any redness, roughness, pimples or dandruff.

For Free Sample Each by Mail address post-card: "Cuticura, Dept. A, Boston, U. S. A." Sold everywhere.

Two Roosevelt Boys Are Now In France

NEW YORK, June 26.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, in a speech delivered in the interest of the Red Cross at Oyster Bay yesterday, made public the fact that two of his sons had already gone to France, and that "the others are to follow." The two who have gone are Maj Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and Captain Archie Roosevelt, both of whom, it is understood will be attached to General Pershing's headquarters. The announcement that they had been detailed to special duty was recently made in an army order.

This is the first installment of the Colonel's famous pledge that he and his four sons and at least one of his sons-in-law would be ready to join the country's forces whenever the occasion arose. The other sons are already in the service, and Dr. Richard Derby, the Colonel's son-in-law, is a Major in the army reserve Medical Corps.

When potatoes are so high economy can be practiced by cooking them with the skin on.

When You Eat Bread you are entitled to everything in the whole wheat grain. Dr. Wiley says: "Wheat is a complete food containing all the elements necessary for human nutrition." But be sure you get the whole wheat in a digestible form. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is whole wheat made digestible by steam-cooking, shredding and baking—the best process ever devised for preparing the whole wheat grain for the human stomach. Two or three of these crisp little loaves of baked whole wheat with milk and berries, make a delicious nourishing meal. Made in Canada.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

CHAPTER VI.
SCOTLAND YARD TAKES A HAND.

It was a singular greeting to say the least, and the person who uttered it was quite as remarkable as his queer method of expressing himself seemed to indicate.

Grant, though in a fume of hot anger, had the good sense to choke back the first impetuous rejoinder that trembling on his lips. In fact, wrath quickly subsided into blank incredulity. He saw before him, not the conventional detective who might be described as a superior Robinson—not even the sinewy, sharp-eyed and well-spoken type of man whom he had once heard giving evidence in a famous jewel-robbery case—but rather one whom he would have expected to meet in the bar of a certain well-known restaurant in Maiden Lane, a corner of old London where literally all the world's a stage and all the men and women merely players.

During his theatrical experiences he had come across scores of such men—daper little fellows, wizened of face yet curiously youthful in manner; but they each and all were labelled "low comedian." Certainly a rare intelligence gleamed from this man's eye, but that is an attribute not often lacking in humorists who command high salaries because of their facility in laughter-making. This man, too, had the wide, thin-lipped, wrinkled forehead and cheeks, the bluish tint on jaws and chin, his voice, his perky air, the very tilt of his straw hat, were eloquent of the footlights. Even his opening words, bizarre and cheerfully impertinent, smacked of "comic relief."

"I figure prominently in this particular 'piece,'" snapped Grant. "May I ask your name, sir?"

"A wise precaution with suspicious characters," rejoined the other smiling. Grant was suddenly reminded of a Japanese grinning at at joke, but he bent over a card which the stranger had whisked out of a waistcoat pocket. He read:

Mr. Charles F. Furneaux,
Criminal Investigation Department,
New Scotland Yard, S. W.

He could not control himself. He gazed at Mr. Charles F. Furneaux with a surprise that was not altogether flattering.

"Did the Commissioner of Police send you in response to my telegram?" he said.

"That is what the lawyers call a leading question," came the prompt retort. "And I hate lawyers. They darken understanding, and set honest men at loggerheads."

"But it happens to be very much to the point at this moment."

"Well, Mr. Grant, if you really press for an answer, it is 'Yes' and 'No.' The commissioner received a certain telegram, but he may have acted on other grounds. Even commissioners can be creatures of impulse or expediency, just as the situation demands."

"You are here at any rate."

"That is what legal jargon terms an admitted fact."

"Then you had better begin by assuming that I am no villain."

"It is assumed. It could not well be otherwise after the excellent character you have been given by that young lady."

"She, at least, will speak well of me, I do believe," said Grant, with a strange bitterness, for his heart was sore because of the seeming defection of his friend, the postmaster. "What I actually had in mind was the stupidity of the local policeman, who is convinced that I am both a criminal and a fool."

"The two are often synonymous," said Furneaux dryly. "But I acquitted you on both counts, Mr. Grant, on hearing, and even seeing, how you spent Monday evening."

Grant who had cooled down considerably found a hint of badinage in this comment.

"You have evidently been told that Miss Martin and I were star gazing in the garden of my house," he said. "It happens to be true."

"Oh, yes. There was a very fine cluster of stars in Canis Major, south of Sirius that night."

"You know something about the constellations, then?" was the astonished query.

"Enough for the purposes of Scotland Yard," smirked Furneaux, who had checked P. C. Robinson's one-sided story by referring to Whittaker's almanac. "It may relieve your mind if I tell you that I have never seen a real live astronomer in the dock. Venus and Mars are often in trouble, but their devoted observers seldom, if ever."

Grant warmed to this strange species of detective, though, if pressed for an instant decision, he would vastly have preferred that one of more orthodox style had been intrusted with an inquiry so vital to his own happiness and good repute. Eager, however, to pour forth his worries into any official ear, he brought back the talk to a definite channel.

"Will you come to my place?" he asked. "I have much to say. Let me assure you now, in Miss Martin's presence, that she is no more concerned in this ghastly business than any other young lady in the village."

"But she is interested. And you are. And I am. Why not discuss matters here, for the present, I mean? We have a glorious view of your house and grounds. We can see without being seen. None can overhear. I advise both of you to go thoroughly into this matter here and now."

Furneaux spoke emphatically. Even Doris put in a timid plea.

"Perhaps that would be the best thing to do," she said. Mr. Furneaux has been most sympathetic. I am sure that he understands things."

The girl was the first to realize that even harmless merriment was in ill accord with the presence of death, for the body of Adelaide Melhuish lay within forty yards of the place where they stood.

"May I leave you now?" she inquired. "Father may be wanting help in the office."

"I shan't detain you more than a few seconds," said Furneaux briskly. "On Monday evening you two young people parted at half past ten. How do you fix the time?"

Doris answered without hesitation: "The large window of Mr. Grant's study was open, and we both heard a clock in the hall chime the half-hour. I said, 'Goodness me, is that half-past ten?' and started for home at once. Mr. Grant came with me as far as the bridge. When I reached my room, in exactly five minutes, after leaving The Hollies, I stood at the open window—that window" and she pointed to a dormer casement above the sitting room—"and looked out. It was a particularly fine night—mild, but not very clear, as a slight mist often rises from the river after a hot day in summer. I may have been there about ten minutes, no longer, when I saw the study window of The Hollies thrown open, and Mr. Grant's figure was silhouetted by the lamp behind him. He seemed to be listening for something, so I, who must have heard any unusual sound, listened, too. There was nothing. I could hear the ripple of the river beneath the bridge, so everything was very still. After a minute or two, perhaps—no longer—Mr. Grant went in, and closed the window. Then I went to bed."

"Did Mr. Grant draw any blind or curtains?"

"There are muslin curtains attached to each side of the window. One cannot see into the room from a distance."

Furneaux measured an imaginary line drawn from Doris's bedroom to the edge of the cliff, and prolonged it.

"Nor can you see the river or foot of the lawn from your room," he commented.

"No. In winter I can just make out the edge of the lawn. When the trees are in leaf all the lower part is hidden."

"You had actually retired to rest about eleven, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"So if Mr. Grant came out again you would not know?" Doris blushed furiously, but her reply was unfaltering.

"I would have known during the next half hour at least," she said. "An inclined mirror hangs in my room. I use it sometimes for adjusting a hat. The square of light in Mr. Grant's room is reflected in it, and any sudden increase in the illumination caused by opening the window or pulling the curtains aside, would certainly have caught my eye."

"You have an unshakable witness in Miss Martin," said Furneaux, stabbing a finger at Grant. "Now, I will hurry off. You and I, Mr. Grant meet at Philippi, otherwise known as the crowner's quest."

Any benevolent intent he may have had in leaving these young people together, was however, frustrated by Doris, whose composure seemed to have fled since her statement about the mirror. She resolutely accompanied the detective, and Grant had to follow. All three passed into the post office. Doris using the private door. Mr. Martin looked up from his desk when they appeared and requested his daughter to check a bundle of postal orders. The pretext was painfully obvious, but Grant was not so wishful now to clear up matters with Doris's father, as the girl herself might be trusted to pass on an accurate account of the affair from beginning to end.

He was about to reach the street quick on Furneaux's heels when the little man turned suddenly.

"By the way, don't you want a shilling's worth of stamps?" he said.

Grant smiled comprehension, and went back, where Doris herself served him. She did not try to avoid his glance, but rather met it with a baffling serenity oddly at variance with her momentary loss of self-possession in the garden.

When he entered the street the detective had vanished.

He walked down the hill at a rapid pace, disregarding the eyes peeping at him through open doorways, over narrow window curtains, and covertly staring when people passed in the roadway. The sensitive side of his temperament shrank from this thinly veiled hostility. He was by way of being popular in Steynholme, yet not a soul spoke to him. Before he reached the bridge, the other side of him, the man of action of cool resource in an emergency, rose in rebellion against the league of silly clodhoppers. Back he strode to the post office, and dashed off a telegram. It ran:

"Walter Hart, Savage Club, Adelphi, London. Come here and help to lay a ghost."

He signed it in full, name and address. Doris was gone, but her father received it, and read the text in a bewildered way.

"I find myself deserted by my Steynholme friends so I am trying to import one stanch one," said Grant almost vindictively.

SUGGESTIONS TO SICK WOMEN

How Many Are Restored To Health.

First.—Almost every operation in our hospitals performed upon women becomes necessary through neglect of such symptoms as backache, irregular and painful periods, displacements, pain in the side, burning sensation in the stomach, bearing down pains, nervousness, dizziness and sleeplessness.

Second.—The medicine most successful in relieving female ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It regulates and strengthens the organism; it overcomes disease.

For forty years it has been making women strong and well, relieving backache, nervousness, ulceration and inflammation, weakness, displacements, irregularity and periodic pains. It has also proved invaluable in preparing for childbirth and the Change of Life.

Third.—The great number of unsolicited testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time published by permission, are proof of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, in the treatment of female ills.

Fourth.—Every ailing woman in the United States is cordially invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for special advice. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

ACTRESS LEFT FORTUNE BY LATE MUSICIAN

LONDON, June 26.—Miss Phyllis Dare, one of the beauties of the English stage, has just come into a fortune under the will of the late Paul Rubens, the dramatic author and composer. Rubens, after minor bequests to his valet and a few friends, left the bulk of a $120,000 estate to be divided between Miss Dare and Christopher Burlison.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Deserted Ship

She Came Into Cape Cod In Good Condition

By F. A. MITCHEL

I.

Captain Barnickel ceased going to sea with the close of the year 1914 and retired to his home on Cape Cod. He had built that home on the seashore and could look upon the ocean and the ships rounding the cape or standing far out to sea. In summer he would either be sitting in a wicker chair on his porch or pacing to and fro, as had been his habit on the bridge. In either case he was not far from an old fashioned glass that he had used many years before at sea.

One morning—it was the second summer after the captain had retired from sea life—he was pacing the porch when, seeing a sail approaching, he stopped his walk and stood looking out on her with his body bent forward and his hands clasped behind him, in exactly the same position that he had done the same thing at sea many a time before. Then, turning about, he went for his glass, supported on a pair of brackets against the front of the house, and, taking it down, leveled it on the vessel.

It was a schooner under half sail. There was a light wind, and she came along slowly. Now and again she would luff up into the wind, remain stationary for a short while, then, catching the breeze, move forward again.

"Looks as if there was no one at the helm," remarked the captain to himself.

He lowered his glass for awhile, raising it again when the schooner had drawn nearer. This time he could see her decks plainly, and not a person could be seen on them.

"That's very strange," said the captain.

It certainly was the strangest sight Captain Barnickel had ever seen—a full rigged ship sailing before the wind with not a person on deck, not even a helmsman. Nor was there sign of any person in the hold below or in the rigging.

The vessel was moving parallel to the shore. Had she not she would have been beached. When she came opposite the Barnickel home she luffed up into the wind and remained stationary. The observer had a good look at her. She seemed to be in perfect condition except that her boats were gone. That she was at the mercy of the winds and the waves was evident. If there were persons aboard of her they were certainly below, but there was not the slightest sign of any one above or below.

By this time the vessel was observed by other persons than the captain. Laying aside his glass, he walked to his gate and thence down to an inlet where there were boats. Taking one of them, he took aboard a volunteer crew and was pulled to the strange ship. Reaching her, he directed that the anchor be let go and the sails lowered. The ship being thus brought to a standstill, the captain looked about him.

As he had noticed from the shore, nothing was amiss on deck except that the boats were gone. The party went below and found nothing at all amiss there. Indeed, the table was set in the cabin for breakfast, and a pot of coffee stood at one end of the table. It was stone cold, as were all the dishes that had been prepared. Evidently something had occurred just before those on board were expecting to sit down to the morning meal.

The only indication of a hasty flight was that the lockers in the staterooms stood open and for the most part empty. A few pieces of clothing lay upon the floor. That women and children had been aboard was evident from the fact that articles of clothing fitted for such persons were present. The log was found, and the last entry had been made six weeks before and had ended abruptly with no mention of approaching danger.

The name of the ship painted on the stern and in other places was the Esperanza, from which it was judged that she was a Spaniard. Whatever had occurred to cause her desertion must have taken place off Gibraltar, for the last reckoning entered indicated this.

Captain Barnickel had met something that in all of his forty years at sea he had never met before. He had run across derelicts, but not a deserted ship. Those about him looked to him for guidance, and he directed that the vessel be taken into the inlet and docked. This was done by the men under the captain's orders. The Esperanza was tied up, her sails lowered, doors locked, and there she remained while those who had taken her in waited for some tidings of those who had deserted her. Meanwhile Captain Barnickel reported her presence on the Cape Cod coast to the proper authorities.

II.

Jose Alvares, a young sailor of Cadiz, had risen from before the mast to be first mate of a vessel, and on returning from a voyage the owners of the ship he was on announced to him that they were intending to give him a command. This was good news for the sailor, for he had been for several years betrothed to a young girl, and his promotion would enable him to marry her. Not only this, but, being master of his ship, he could take her with him on a voyage. There was still another advantage; the young sailor had saved $10,000 and became part owner in the ship he commanded.

Captain Alvares was not given a large ship; indeed, the concern which owned these vessels confined their marine operations to small ones. The vessel to which the young captain was appointed was intended for a freighter between Cadiz and South America, though there were rooms for a few passengers whenever any such desired to go on her. But since she was not a steamer, passengers seldom cared to use her unless it was between points where a steamer was not to be had.

When the ship was loaded there was a wedding on shore, and the captain took his bride aboard his ship. There were several passengers, including a few women and children. The trip being the wedding journey of the captain of the vessel, naturally the start was a jolly one. The captain and his bride were acquainted with the passengers, and the voyage bade fair to be a party of pleasure.

The only drawback to this prospect was the great European war, which was in its second year, and the sinking of ships by means of German submarines. At that time there was no arming of merchantmen, and they were at the mercy of any submarine that could come near enough to get a shot at them. But Captain Alvares believed that submarines infested the lanes usually traveled by steamers, and his course took him far from such lanes. He proposed to skirt the African coast for some distance and then turn eastward and cross the Atlantic where the ocean surface was largely free from ships. Indeed, he intended to sail nearly upon the course sailed by Columbus on the voyage which resulted in the discovery of America.

However, he must cross the ship lane taken by vessels running between New York and Gibraltar. Here was his danger. If he got over it in safety there would not be much danger for the rest of the voyage unless unhappily he might meet one of those ships sent out by the German government as sea raiders.

True enough, it was on the sea lane between New York and Gibraltar that a blow fell. The captain, his wife and the passengers were about to sit down to breakfast one morning when the watch called out from above:

"Captain, there's a submarine on our port bow!"

The captain ran on deck, followed by the men passengers, while the women huddled together, clasping the children in their arms with blanched faces. The submarine's periscope could be seen above the surface of the water moving toward the vessel. There was a fine wind, and Alvares determined to try to escape by putting on all sail. Turning his stern to the submarine, he showed her heels and had the wind held might have escaped, but within half an hour he struck a calm. Then the submarine pulled up near the ship and ordered those aboard of her to take to the boats.

There was nothing to be done except to obey the order. The women and children were first put into the boats, which were stocked with provisions and water; then the crew and the captain last. All must be done hastily, or the captain of the submarine had given a limit of time, and they feared that if they exceeded it the ship would be sunk before they could effect the transfer. Besides, to embark in the raving billows many miles from shore with nothing but oars to propel the boats was in itself a dreadful experience.

While they were making the transfer the captain of the submarine asked Captain Alvares what kind of a cargo he carried. Alvares answered that it was principally Spanish wines. The German, not averse to taking aboard such a stock, determined before sinking his prize to send for some of the juice of the grape.

The passengers had left the ship and were pulling for the coast when two things appeared which changed the situation. The smoke of a British cruiser was seen, the vessel coming from the direction of Gibraltar. The submarine made off southward. She had barely started before a thick fog rolled up and wrapped everything in oblivion.

Those in the boats had a compass with them and were thus enabled to steer a straight course. After terrible exposure they reached a wild part of Africa and in time made their way back to Cadiz.

Their return was a melancholy one, especially since the groom's savings of nearly ten years at sea were supposed to have been sent to the bottom of the Atlantic by the submarine. The ship owners did not relish risking more vessels on the deep, and Alvares was obliged to remain at home in idleness, his discontent being enhanced by the fact that he was earning nothing and now had a wife to support.

But one day when he was lamenting his fate word came of the strange vessel that had come to Cape Cod. No one thought that this could be the ship of which Alvares had been master till the name Esperanza was given. Then theories began to be broached as to how she had escaped. The real reasons which have been given here—the appearance of the cruiser and the fog—did not become known till later. The winds, which had been for a long while out of the east, had blown the ship across the Atlantic ocean.

Captain Alvares, being furnished by the ship owners with means and documents to prove property, crossed the ocean and claimed the Esperanza. In returning on her to Cadiz he had better luck than before and arrived safely.

Rheumatism Entirely Gone

AFTER TWENTY-SEVEN YEARS OF SUFFERING—SWELLING AND PUFFING HAS DISAPPEARED—NOT A PLAIN OR AN ACHE LEFT.

KINCARDINE, Ont., May 30. — A most astonishing cure of rheumatism and eczema has been reported here, and Mrs. Ray is enthusiastic in telling her many friends how the cure was effected.

Rheumatism and eczema frequently go together and in this case caused the most keen distress imaginable. All the swelling and puffiness resulting from many years of rheumatism have disappeared, and there is not a pain or an ache left.

Mr. G. H. Ray, R. R. No. 1, Kincardine, Ont., writes: "Mrs. Ray has been using your Kidney-Liver Pills. She was very bad with rheumatism and eczema, and had had that fearful itch for twenty-seven years. It was simply terrible what she suffered. I persuaded her to try $1 worth of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills; she is now on the last box, and let me tell you she scarcely knows herself, she is so free from both of these diseases. All the swelling and puffiness caused by the rheumatism has gone away, and she has gone down in weight 18 1-2 pounds. She never has an ache nor pain, biliousness nor sick headache all these months. She often says herself 'How glad I am that I know what to do instead of paying know what to do instead of paying doctors so much to make me worse.'"

There is only one way that the poisons in the blood can be cleaned away and the cause of pains and aches removed, and that is by the healthful action of the kidneys, liver and bowels. Because Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills act directly and specifically on these organs and ensure their activity they remove the cause of rheumatism and other dreadfully painful and fatal diseases. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, of Toronto.

SERBIANS DRIVEN INSANE.

Envoy to Paris Charges Mistreatment of War Captives.

PARIS, May 28. (Correspondence)—The Minister of Serbia in Paris, M. Vesnitch, communicates to The Associated Press an official statement regarding the mistreatment of soldier and civilian Serbians imprisoned and interned in Austria and Hungary.

"In spite of the difficulties of ascertaining facts in regard to prisoners of war and interned civilians," says the statement, "Serbian authorities have been able to get some precise facts that may be made public now.

"Soldiers and civilians are huddled in wooden barracks in unhealthy marshy districts along the banks of the Danube. They sleep on the bare floors with no bedding but a thin litter of straw, and with only old blankets for covering, while the roofs and sides of the barracks afford little shelter.

"Their nourishment consists of fodder beets and a quarter of a loaf of bread made with musty cornmeal, and wild chestnuts. None of these prisoners nor interned civilians have had any meat for several months, although they are forced to hard labor under the guard of exempted soldiers who beat them with the butt ends of rifles, tie them to posts, or suspend them for more than two hours at a time for slight infractions of discipline.

"A great many of both soldiers and civilians have lost their minds as a result of physical and moral suffering in these camps. An Austrian doctor told of how he had seen at Krizevac (near Agram) more than 3,000 insane Serbian soldiers and civilians. A reliable witness reports having observed in a hospital at Mathausen more than 100 Serbian soldiers who had lost their reason. Many others remain crippled because of neglect by the camp physicians.

"During the typhus epidemic in Austria-Hungary 16,000 Serbian soldiers died and were buried by hundreds in common graves in one part alone of Mathausen. A false inscription, evidently intended to hide the result of their neglect, was placed by the Austrians on a chapel raised at that place, reading: "Serbian soldiers who died of wounds received in the Serbian-Austro-Hungarian war, which was provoked by Serbia."

SWISS PRESS ALL AT ODDS.

Four Groups Among the Newspapers of The Republic.

BERNE, June 21. — (Correspondence).—It is doubtful whether any country in or out of the war has as peculiar and conglomerate a problem as Switzerland with its newspapers in three languages.

A strong undercurrent of patriotism, a thorough-going conviction that, whatever the rights and wrongs of the war may be, the duty of the Swiss newspapers is first to witzerland, has, thus far, tended to restrain them from dividing irretrievably into two camps. This has been especially true of the older and more conservative papers, both those printed in German and those in French. But the uncropping of Germanophole or Francophile journals, many of them war mushrooms, has been a strain upon not only neutrality, but also the inner peace of the country.

The Swiss press can be divided roughly into four groups. The first consists of the old-time French and German, which have striven to be neutral. The second class embraces many Francophile papers published in western Switzerland. They are frankly anti-German and campaign against the enemies of France.

The third class includes Germanophile papers, many in number but small in influence, which outdo even the Pan German papers of Germany in their bitterness, especially against America, and which work along the German psychological lines when trying to influence public opinion. That is to say, they metaphorically produce the effect of a bull in a China shop when attempting to plead the German cause, chiefly because they try to jam pro-German arguments and the justice of the German cause down their readers' throats.

The fourth class comprises the Socialist papers of Switzerland, which are violently anti-German, anti-Swiss, anti-French, and in general anti-Everything.

The Francophile papers are gentler in their anti-Germanism than are the Germanophile papers in their anti-Ententeism. All the papers are normally bound to print the war reports of both sides, but the French language papers conduct their anti-German work by headlines that tend to cast doubt on the truth of the German reports, and generally team with sarcasm, often good-natured.

The Germanophile papers on the contrary, (most of them are German-owned or subsidized,) employ a ponderous style of attack. Their editorials are generally bitter and often are full of misinformation.

To the credit of the most of the Swiss be it said that they have a hearty contempt for both "phile" types, especially by the Germanophile.

HAD INDIGESTION
COULD KEEP NOTHING ON STOMACH

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitated feeling in it.

After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation; that souring and rising of the food which is so unpleasant and in many cases very painful.

It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion when Burdock Blood Bitters may be so easily obtained. This old and well-known remedy, which is a combination of nature's best roots, herbs, barks and berries will cure indigestion and all stomach troubles.

Mr. Lasare Savoy, Pokemouche, N. B., writes: "About two years ago I was troubled with indigestion that bad I could keep nothing on my stomach. I was sorely disappointed in everything I tried to relieve me. At last a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I took four bottles and can now eat anything that is set in front of me."

That grand old medicine, B.B.B., has been on the market for the past forty years, and we claim, without any fear of contradiction, that it is the best cure for all stomach troubles.

WOMEN SEIZE POTATOES.

Dutch Housewives Stormed Barges Laden with Supplies for England.

LONDON, June 26.—A despatch to the Times from Amsterdam reports that a crowd of women stormed a dozen barges in the inner harbour of Rotterdam Saturday and seized about a ton of poatoes destined for England.

Germany expected last week a consignment of potatoes in return for German exports of coal to Holland. Before a consignment could be made 11,600 tons of old potatoes had to be shipped to England under contract. The people of Rotterdam, who are themselves insufficiently supplied, learning that these potatoes were awaiting shipment, raided the barges. Meanwhile the Germans are threatening to cease coal supplies unless the potatoes are sent, in which case the Dutch will break their agreement with England and endanger their supply of grain from America.

BLIND MEN AS FARMERS.

Germany Utilizing Sightless Soldiers to Increase Food Supply.

Among the many plans proposed in Germany for the purpose of increasing the output of the farms and thus contributing toward solving the problem of "holding out" is an experiment in teaching blinded soldiers to become farmers. Professor Silex, a noted Berlin oculist, is the originator of the plan and, according to reports received by the London press, the Prince of Ples and one of his brothers, Count Frederick von Hochberg, have placed at Professor Silex's disposal the necessary land, farmhouse and agricultural implements. They have also undertaken to stock the farm with cattle provide, for the keep of the men and furnish a teaching staff.

A few weeks ago Lieut. Gen. William Groner, head of the National Service Bureau of the War Office, appealed to all the army commands in Germany to lend every man and team not urgently required for military purposes to the farming community. Groner said that the labour situation on the land was grave and that heroic measures were particularly necessary to help the farmers with their potatoes.

At about the same time the Schlesische Zeitung an organ of the big Silesian land owners, spoke rather gloomily about the harvest outlook and warned its readers not to be overconfident as to results during the coming summer. The Silesian papers said:

"Already fears are expressed as to the effect of the severe weather upon the early potatoes. Every day of delay in the cultivation of the hard, frozen ground multiplies the anxieties as to timely completion of the necessary spring tasks. It remains to be seen how the crops stored through the winter have stood the cold. The new crops will depend more than ever on the manure question, especially whether it is is possible by proper treatment of the soil to make poor seed fruitful. The prospect is small owing to the insufficiency of nitrates and also to the increased scarcity of labour and material of all kinds.

"In these circumstances it will be well to estimate the products of the 1917 harvest year with the most moderate expectations, and to practise wise restrictions. Everything will depend on whether the farmers use their utmost exertions, with support from every side, especially from the military authorities, to accomplish the very belate spring tasks. In addition the full understanding and co-operation of all classes of the people will be needed that the harvest may be good enough to preserve the country from worse anxieties than the present."

BUTTER AND EGGS WERE DOWN AT LINDSAY ON SATURDAY

Farmers Thought the Prices Were Too Low and Will Take Milk.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Butter prices were away down this morning, 35c. being the highest paid at the farmers' market.

The women disclaimed against the reduction and were curious to know what had transpired during the past week to cause such a drop.

"My sister paid 42c. per pound for butter in the grocery store yesterday and here I am selling it for 35 cents to-day," said one woman.

"I'll never come back to Lindsay again to sell butter or anything else," she stated, "if this is how the farmers are treated."

Another woman said it was her last Saturday on the market offering butter for sale, as she would send to the creamery next week. It was easier money she considered.

The Warder scribe shuffled over to where a pleasant faced woman stood over a basket of eggs, which she was selling at 30c. a dozen. "I am not going to sell another one at that price so long as I can get water glass to pack them in. I will sell them at 60c. a dozen next winter," she remarked, as she sold out the last dozen and left for home.

At outside points butter can be bought for 28c. per pound, and eggs at 25c. per dozen it is currently reported.

PORTO RICAN UNIT ENLISTED.

Many Volunteers Turned Away When Regiment is Completed.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, June 26.—Porto Rico has brought its regiment of infantry of the United States Army to full war strength—1,969 men—by the voluntary enlistment of 600 men within less than a month and a total increase of approximately 1,400 men in less than a year.

During the selection of the last 600 men fully five were rejected temporarily for each man chosen. Of the last volunteers accepted none was more than 25 years old.

Hundreds of additional volunteers could have been enlisted had there been any organization in which to place them, according to Lieut. Col. Orval P. Townshend, who has been in charge of the recruiting. He says that never anywhere has he seen more enthusiasm for military service.

Isaac Pitblado Holds West Paying More Than Its Share.

WINNIPEG, June 26.—The closing session in the west of the Board of Railway Commissioners was held here on Saturday afternoon, and Sir Henry Drayton and his fellow-commissioners left last night for Ottawa.

Isaac Pitblado, 'delegated by the Provincial Government to represent the interests of the general public in opposing the fifteen per cent. increase in freight rates said: "In order to give the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk an additional annual income of approximately 11,000,000 we are asked to give the C.P.R. a present of $21,000,000." Mr. Pitblado held that the west was paying more than its share of railway tariff now.

Sir Henry Drayton pointed out that the increase if made, would be under the War Measures Act, and therefore only for a limited time.

51 Individuals and 102 Companies Face Trial in U. S.

NEW YORK, June 26.—Testimony that price lists fixing $3 at the mines as the minimum cost of semi-bituminous coal were sent out to operators on the day after a conference of coal presidents and operators in this city in January, was introduced by the Government to-day in its trial of fifty-one individuals and 102 companies engaged in coal production, in the Federal Court here.

It is the Government's contention, as set forth in the indictment, that the defendants conspired, in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law, to establish prices in the semi-bituminous districts in Virginia and West Virginia.

Great Invasion of Germany By Air Is Planned

KIEL CANAL AND BERLIN IN REACH

French Airman Tells What is Possible if U. S. Raises Fleet.

WASHINGTON, June 23.—The invasion of Germany—carrying of the fight into the Kaiser's territory through the air—with success deemed certain is the plan of the Allies.

Chieftains of visiting War Commissions insist the plan will bring complete victory nearer by many months—provided the National Defence Council's aircraft production board programme calls for 4,000 American air machines for the fighting front by April and for 10,000 by August.

Lieut. Amaury de La Grange, a noted French air fighter, to-day made this revelation in an interview given the United Press. He emphasized with what importance the Allied General Staffs regard America's will abilities in furnishing the "air preponderance" that he is convinced will make possible shattering of the Teuton battle lines.

"Nothing is impossible if we Allies get and hold mastery of the air," de La Grange said. "Berlin is even open to us. Let America contribute as her biggest share toward re-establishment of democracy, the air preponderance, as she can do, and then indeed will German 'divine right' rulers call for a real peace instead of a pseudo peace.

"Put through this proposed programme, and you Americans will have done more to end the war with less cost in money and lives than you could do in any one or all of a dozen ways. Put through this programme, and we can destroy the great German munition works, their great mobilization depots, their great factories for production of motor transports and flying machines.

"Put it through and you Americans will make possible the destruction of those bases from which steal the murderous submarines. Furnish, in democracy's cause, the great air squadrons and we fighting men will make scrap heaps of the great German naval bases. The Kiel Canal will be made useless if we have sufficient machines.

Could Declare Forbidden zone.

"Germany has declared 'verboten' certain sea zones. With complete air mastery, we will declare forbidden zones in German territory—say a zone 100 miles behind the German lines. We will give civilians ample time to move away.

"Then, with our numerically superior air fighters, we can conduct super-raids behind the lines, over munition plants, on troop mobilization points, and on artillery stations that will make it impossible for the Germans to withstand an series of attacks.

"Bu we must have four machines to one German machine to do this. America can do it.

"There are three major styles of machines—the training machine, the observation and the battle-plane.

The first is the style of machine America firs made and is now making. It is the cheapest.

"The observers machine, without which effective artillerying or any sort of ground fighting is useless, carries only a small machine gun. It is helpless before a battle plane. Its duty is to seek out enemy batteries, keep tab on enemy troop movements, direct artillery fire. During attacks it is only through the observation machine that the staff behind our lines can tell how an attack is progressing. We need thousands more of them. They do their talking to the ground by wireless; they receive instructions via a sort of wig wag system.

"But observation work is impossible without battle planes. It would be the battle planes with which we would invade Germany. We must have thousands and thousands more of them to do it. By using two battle planes to protect each observation-plane we can save the reconnaissance planes, but they won't give us air supremacy. To get this supremacy we must put together great bombing squadrons and send them for into Germany territory."

NEW PRINCIPAL FOR QUEEN'S.

S. W. Dyde, of Edmonton, Will Return to Scene of Former Labours.

EDMONTON, Alta., June 25.—Principal S. W. Dyde, of Robertson College has been offered the principalship of the Theoretical College of Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., and will probably accept.

Principal Samuel Walters Dyde will succeed Principal Gordon, who in May, 1916, submitted his resignation because of ill-health. Principal Dyde was born at Ottawa in 1869, and graduated from Queen's in 1887 (B.A. and gold medal in classics). He was professor of mental philosophy and lecturer in German classical literature at Queen's, 1899, 1911, when he became principal of the Edmonton College. In 1903 he was chairman of Kingston Board of Education.

HUGE SHIPMENT OF BASEBALL GOODS

NEW YORK, June 24.—That baseball will not occupy a very prominent part in the activities of the United States troops in France is recognized by the National War Work Council of the Young Men Christian Association International Committee. In a statement tonight the committee states that preparations are are being swiftly made for a huge shipment abroad of baseball paraphernalia, which will be sent to ports of debarkation and to the American concentration camps in France.

That the council has carefully studied the needs the American soldiers in the field is evidenced by the variety of articles to be included in the first cargo, which ranges from 5,000 baseballs to one hundred moving-picture machines. In the baseball outfit are five hundred gloves and four hundred bats. "Information gleaned from contact with the men on the battle front," says the statement "convinces us that men who engage in outdoor sport make the best soldiers. That has been exemplified beyond question by the ball players, lacrosse players and oarsmen of Canada, and the cricketers and footballers of Great Britain. The baseball needs of our men who go to fight that democracy may continue to live will be amply cared for."

WHEN YOU CAN'T SLEEP
YOU SHOULD USE
MILBURN'S HEART and NERVE PILLS

Sleeplessness is caused by the nervous system becoming deranged.

Perhaps too much worry has gotten on your nerves, perhaps you have overworked yourself, or have been excessive in your use of tobacco, but whatever the cause, the nervous system must be built up again before restful sleep can be assured.

Those whose rest is broken into by frightful dreams, nightmares, sinking and smothering sensations, who wake up in the morning as tired as they went to bed can have their old, peaceful, undisturbed, refreshing sleep back again by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. John Sloan, Haley Station, Ont., writes: "Over a year ago I was very nervous. I could not sleep at night, and I would faint at the slightest fright. I tried several doctors, but they did me practically no good. I noticed your advertisement, and immediately tried Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I am proud to say they cured me."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box or three for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

GERMANY FINES ROUMANIA

JASSAY, Roumania, June 25.—Germany has imposed a fine of 250,000,000 francs on the occupied territory of Roumania.

Cocoanut Oil Fine For Washing Hair

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Don't use prepared shampoos or anything else, that contains too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain, mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfills that purpose as nothing else can.

British and Canadians Closing In on Lens

PRESSURE ON GERMANS IS INCREASING

HAIG'S FORCES STEADILY DRIVING ENEMY OUT OF LENS STRONGHOLD

British Field-Marshal's Tactics Has Hindenburg Guessing --- British Are "Biting" Into the German Lines and Harassing Enemy at Many Different Points --- Every Day Sees Local Battles Won by the British

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

(By William Philip Simms, P.P. Staff Correspondent.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 27. — Field Marshal Haig has Hindenburg guessing. Shifting like a master boxer, hitting with his right and then with his left—and then sharply upper-cutting in the centre to the chin—the British Commander keeps his Prussian opponent not only puzzled but on the defensive, with his back against the ropes. There isn't any doubt that Prussia, as President Wilson says, "shows signs of weakening." The fighters here approve that statement. And they add, in effect, "Its up to the Allies now to hit hard." Throughout to-day Haig continued his tactics throughout the length of the British front, harrying the enemy everywhere. While the enemy anxiously watches some spot where the German commanders think they have detected a little heavier artillery fire than elsewhere—apparently signallising preparations for an attack—Haig slams forward somewhere else. Every day threatens Lens more. Every day sees local battles; and local retirements by the enemy. Further north the same strategy is gaining for the British. The weather is hot and sultry. Air fleets flock the blazing sky, the Prussian machines conspicuously avoiding battle whenever possible.

LONDON, June 27. — The next few days may bring a crisis in the Spanish situation, according to advices received here. It was believed here that martial law would either result in strengthening the Government's hands, or else bring about an immediate coalition of all the elements of discontent, probably in such strength that the monarchy cannot survive.

WASHINGTON, June 27.—That King Leopold of Bavaria, commanding the eastern German forces, has conspired with the Russian agitator Lenine toward getting a general peace without annexation or contribution, was the deduction from a State Department message received to-day.

LONDON, June 27.—Norway has reached a crisis in her relations with Germany. Judging from information reaching here to-day there is reason to believe she will not submit tamely to Germany's arrogant demands and plots to smash her commerce and shipping, desuite Norway's desire to maintain peace.

PETROGRAD, June 27.—The Congress of Workmen and Soldiers today decided to send a delegation of six members shortly to Stockholm, Britain and France, for the purpose of urging a peace conference at an early date on the basis of the aims announced by workmen and soldiers.

Probably this is in line with the conference called at Stockholm a number of weeks ago by the Russians to which French Socialists gave their acceptance.

LONDON, June 27. — Field Marshal Haig did not reveal any of his operations in the Lens sector in his official report to-day.

"Northwest of Croiselles our artillery prevented development of another hostile attack early this morning," he said. "West of Oppy we successfully carried out a raid at night, taking a few prisoners. Southwest of LaBassee our fire stopped the enemy in an attempted raid."

WASHINGTON, June 27.—Convicted of obstructing traffic in militant demonstrations at the White House, six suffragists of the National Woman's party, to-day declared they would serve an alternative of three days in the workhouse rather than pay $25 fines. All have been long prominent nationally in suffrage work.

(By John Grandens, U.P. Staff Correspondent.)

BERLIN, via London, June 27.—Agitation for the immediate liberalization of Germany is growing daily. Even newspapers of heretofore strongly Conservative tendencies are urging reforms. A number of leaders of German thought heretofore reactionary, apparently now favour greater reforms. Such newspapers as the Vorwaerts (The Socialist organ), the Tageblatt and the Vossische, are pointing the way. But most significant was the statement issued to-day by the historian Prof. Otto Huntze. He said: "We Prussians cannot stand alone in the midst of Germany, of Europe and the whole world, and resist liberalization. We are threatened with dangerous isolation from the world's people." The greatest importance was attached to Prof. Huntze's declarations, since he has heretofore never given evidence of any liberal tendencies.

The Reichstag will re-open its sessions July 5th, and on that date the so-called constitution committee will make its report. The constitution committee, headed by the pro-Government Socialist Leader Schiedemann, is dominated by pro-Government forces, that, by the Chancellor and the autocratic German machine.

MARTIN MAKES CLEAN SWEEP IN SASKATCHEWAN

Liberal Government Wins More Than Fifty Out of the Fifty-nine Seats in the Legislature

RETURNS INCOMPLETE

REGINA Sask., June 26.—The Liberals swept Saskatchewan almost clean in to-day's elections, and will have more than fifty of the fifty-nine seats in the Legislature, a greater majority than was accorded the Scott Government in 1912. Of the seven Conservatives in the last House only two are definitely known at midnight to be re-elected, W. B. Willoughby, the Opposition leader, and Lieut.-Col. Glenn, who was not opposed by the Liberals in South Qu'Appelle, but was opposed by an independent. The only other Conservative elected is Donald MacLean, in Saskatoon. The Liberals wrested Lumsden, Moose Jaw county, Prince Albert and Willow Bunch from the Opposition, while returns from Maple Creek are still so incomplete as to give no indication of the result.

Premier Martin was elected in Regina city by a majority of 926 over his opponent, Brig.-General Embury. Hon. J. A. Calder is leading in Saltcoats constituency by 200, and the remaining polls promise to increase that lead. In Lost Mountain constituency, S. J. Latta, Liberal, has a majority of 624 in twelve polls out of forty-one, and his strongest support is still to be heard from. W. G. Robinson, the Liberal candidate in the district of Francis, is 75 votes behind his Independent opponent, M. Brennan, but twenty-seven polls are still to be heard from in that riding.

The total vote, including for the first time in a regular Provincial election the ballot marked by the women of Saskatchewan, was very large, and its numbers will far exceed the record of any previous election. Owing to this additional representation in the electorate of Saskatchewan the returns are slow in reaching Regina to-night, and it will likely be a day or two before the exact results will be known.

Story of the Bulletins.

Standing at 9.30 p.m.:—
Elected—Liberals — Regina City, Last Mountain, Weyburn, Prince Albert, Yorkton. Conservatives—Moose Jaw City. Independent—None.
Liberals carry Prince Albert by 600, and expect to increase this to 800.
Saskatoon City—McLean, Conservative, elected by 658 over McKenzie, Liberal, and Eddy, Labour.
Moose Jaw City— All polls give Liberals 1,339; Willoughby, Conservative leader, 1,600; Independent, 1,109.
South Qu'Appelle—With one poll to hear from, Glenn, Conservative, has 436 majority over Railton, Independent.

MOOSE JAW, Sask., June 27.—W. B. Willoughby, leader of the Conservative Opposition in the Saskatchewan Legislature, admitted this morning that he could not see where he would have a dozen supporters in the next Legislature.

Latest returns indicate that Hon. W. M. Martin's Liberal Government, which, however, was supported by all important Conservative papers, has carried 49 constituencies and the Opposition six. Three are still in doubt, and there are two members still to be elected by the soldiers' votes in England and France.

Further scrutiny of returns this morning indicates that the women voters turned out well and voted strong for the government, which gave them votes and abolished the liquor traffic.

WAS KILLED BY SHELL

Private Robert Donaldson of the 93rd Battalion Met Death While on Guard in a Captured German Trench, Writes Chaplain

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

KILLED ON GUARD.

Mrs. R. E. Donaldson, 367 Burnham street, has received the following letter from a Canadian Chaplain giving the particulars of the death of her husband, Pte. Donaldson of the 52nd Battalion, formerly of the 93rd Battalion:

52nd Battalion, Canadians,
B. E. F., France, 29, 5, '17.

Dear Mrs. Donaldson,—I have very sad news for you. I am sorry to say your husband, Pte. R. E. Donaldson, has made the supreme sacrifice. He was killed while on guard in an old German gunpit we were using as headquarters; a shell struck near the entrance and killed and wounded several others, as well.

Thank God he never knew what happened to him. The end came instantly. I have just buried him with three companions in the same grave at night when it was dusk enough for the burial service to be observed.

He is laid to rest in a Corps cemetery near where he was killed.

God comfort and sustain you in this great trouble. We all grieve for him, for he was a faithful soldier and a kind and gentle companion. We are proud to have had him for his loss, but that he has given his best for the great and righteous cause, and has set us a grand example of duty and sacrifice for others to copy.

A Cross shall be placed over his grave as soon as possible. It will be easy to find it in future. May God give him joy and peace and happy service in that sphere of life where now he lives.

We had many pleasant little chats together when he would be on guard at the entrance of headquarters.

It's hard to see those we know and love go from us daily. Yet we would not have it do otherwise than that which is greatest and grandest in life.

Yours sincerely,
R. [illegible]GEWAY,
Chaplain, Battalion.

OTTAWA, June [illegible] returns just received by the Military Hospitals Commission from the director of medical services in London show that in the week ending June 1 the number of Canadian sick and invalided in the United Kingdom fell from 22,592 to 22,482, after a series of weekly increases. A further of the total shows that the number of our men in non-Canadian hospitals was reduced from 12,160 to [illegible]. In the same period the number in Canadian hospitals rose from 9326 to 10,861. The number of cases for tuberculosis remained stationary, 76, on May 25 and June 1.

LONDON, June 26.—[illegible] for Canadian officers and men of the overseas forces have been issued for Dominion Day by the [illegible]ian Young Men's Christian Association, and the military authorities, the Red Cross Hospital inmates, many noted athletes are competing. The residents of each town are planning to make the occasion a gala character. Regimental bands will attend. Substantial prizes are offered.

London, June 26.—The Royal Flying Pay Corps beat the Royal Engineers at cricket, 200 for eight wickets, against 69. North Middlesex, the Canadian Medicals 215 for seven wickets, against 86.

NEW YORK, June 26.—A recruiting party for the Clan MacLean has been received from headquarters of the British recruiting mission in this city. About fifty or sixty men, Macleans preferred, are wanted to fill the vacancies in the ranks of the 236th Battalion of Canadian overseas forces, which the British Government

Peterboro Boys in Germany Are Well Looked After

The Young Men of Any City Are Its Greatest Asset

BY THEIR LABOUR—They create wealth.

BY THEIR CHARACTER—They make morals.

BY THEIR STANDARDS—They determine our citizenship.

BY THEIR PROGRESS—They determine our future.

The city that does not regard its young men as its greatest asset is apt to find them its heaviest liability.

The Y.M.C.A. is the community's agent for conserving its young manhood and making it of highest value to home, church and state.

WHAT IS YOUR SHARE OF THE $10,000 REQUIRED BY THE LOCAL ASSOCIATION AT THE PRESENT TIME?

Y. M. C. A. Campaign for $10,000 Starts With Splendid Swing

Citizens Willing and Ready To Give—First Day's Campaign Results in Over Half of Objective Being Obtained;— Several Large Probable Contributors Still To Be Heard From

Total Objective	$10,000
Subscriptions end of First Day	5,237
Still to Be Raised	4,763

Never has the Y.M.C.A. stood as high in the esteem of the citizens of Peterborough as at this time. The great work it is doing at home and which has made possible the splendid "overseas" branch of its activities among the boys at the front is making its influence felt in the hearts of the people.

The result is that all over Peterborough people are willing and anxious and pleased to contribute to the funds of the Y.M.C.A. in the special Campaign for $10,000 that is now under way. This was shown yesterday by the splendid reception that was extended to the workers who yesterday started out on their first day's work. Everywhere they went they found the people ready for them, and in most cases with their minds made up as to what they could and would do. This saved their own time as well as that of the workers, and helped on the work materially.

The work is full of interest. Even before the campaign started one gentleman who expected to leave the city Monday night, called on one worker and handed him a subscription for $25.00, which was just two and one-half times his usual subscription. He said that owing to his expected absence he did not want to be considered "out of it," so was doing his part early.

One large business firm which did not give anything last year has given $500 this year. Another firm which never contributed over $100 before yesterday, when canvassed mentioned $200 as their contribution, but to encourage other firms to give more, increased the amount to $250.

One manufacturer when called on asked what the canvassers thought he should give. They handed him a card made out for $100. He took and signed it and sent his visitors off happy.

Everywhere there is a readiness to give that is most encouraging, and that makes the work a pleasure, as it shows how much the Y.M.C.A. is valued in Peterborough.

In one store a young woman told her employer that when the canvassers called she wanted to see them. He passed the good word on and the young woman did "her bit" by the nice contribution of $15.00.

MORE WORKERS NEEDED.

The great need for the next couple of days is going to be to get enough workers to cover the field. Could 15 or 20 more workers be enlisted, hundreds of dollars and possibly a $1,000 or more could be collected that now may be missed through the inability of the workers to get around and see all who would like to be visted. Here then is a suggestion. Will all those who would like to have the privilege of contributing to this great work, and who have not yet been seen, send in their amounts or 'phone ('phone 246) to have a canvasser call. This will help wonderfully and save time and energy on the part of the canvassers.

LOCAL BOY INJURED IN AIR BATTLE

Lieut. Romeyn Stevenson Has Thrilling Experience in Fight With Hun Raiders on June 8

IS NOW IN HOSPITAL

Lieut. Romeyn Stevenson of Peterborough, formerly of the 93rd Battalion, and now attached to the Royal Flying Corps, is at present in Colchester Military Hospital, recovering from a painful wound in the leg, which was received in the air raid on England, June 5th. Lieut. Stevenson was acting as observer with a young Australian pilot and they were the first up and at the height of 15,000 feet met the German squadron, who opened fire on them. They remained in the fight till their engine was damaged, and they were forced to descend.

Lieut. Stevenson owes his life to the fact that he was not strapped in. The machine, on descending, struck the hangar, throwing him a distance of fifty yards; it then struck the ground, turned upside down, and the engine crashed back over the pilot's head, landing in the observer's cockpit. The pilot was so badly injured that he has since died. The Germans lost ten aeroplanes in the raid.

"Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

Wednesday, June 27, 1917

SASKATCHEWAN.

The expected has come to pass in Saskatchewan. It was anticipated that the Liebral government would be returned by an increased majority. The standing as a result of yesterday's election is 40 government members out of a House of 59. The reasons of this large popular confidence are not far to seek. The policy of the government, as has been its practise, is the promotion of the interests and welfare of its people. It stands, as it has stood, for good government; and outide of administrative function, it pledges its influence for agitation for reforms, in a strict sense, not within the constitutional competence of the Legisalture itself. Its appeal to the people is based on several points of policy the government is committed to, or committed to advocating. Among these are:

A continuation of the fight for free agricultural implements, reciprocity, wider markets and lower tariffs.

Cheaper farm loans on more satisfactory terms.

An early renewal of railway construction, if necessary by the Government itself.

The acquisition and settlement by the Government of lands now owned by speculators.

Improved facilities for the marketing, sale and storage of livestock products.

Municipal control of Government expenditure for roads.

Better schools, better school attendance and more suitable high schools for rural children.

CREDITABLE TO UNCLE SAM.

We shall have greater hopes of a victorious termination of the war, and soon, if the United States matches its star-spangled "silver bullet" supply with a star-spangled force of fighting men, adequately equipped with munitions as Uncle Sam's liberal supply of money makes possible. The United States has been reproached with being a money-grabbing nation, an idolatrous nation in its worship of money. Our Yankee cousins are, however, credited with the compensating quality of spending their money freely. And that has splendidly come into play in their new alliance with the champions of civilized freedom. Congress has voted money by the billion. Four million people have subscribed a three billion dollar "Liberty Loan." Six hundred million dollars are to be devoted to providing for aviation equipment, and now we are told that the United States has contributed a hundred million to Red Cross work, a rather remarkable thing when it is recalled that Great Britain and the Empire in the appeal for the Red Cross last October, gave a total of only about three millions.

But it is to be remembered, as can be done without any disparagement of the splendid liberality of our neighbours, that they are paying out from a full store—just beginning—whereas Britain and the Empire have been spending money at a magnificent rate for thirty-three months. Great Britain's expenditures on war waging amounts to the tremendous figure of thirty-seven million dollars per day—more than a million and a half per hour; $17,000 a minute, nearly $3,000 per second, or at the rate of 13,500 million dollars a year. Great Britain has already voted the enormous sum of nearly 25,000 millions, devoted to financing her own fighting in half a dozen different areas, and helping her allies finance their war activities.

Great Britain has done all this, and is still doing it on a greater scale. Though the war is not of her own making, nor was she directly menaced, she went into the war for an idea, the idea of standing by the underdog in the fight, the idea behind the principle of preserving the integrity of smaller nations, and thereby saving the liberty of the world.

The United States came in at a later—let us hope, almost the last moment—but she came in with the same high motives of principle, and is doing her bit bravely. She has begun well with money contributions and provisions; she is doing splendidly in handling the food situation, so vital to win success, and in providing means of transportation; and if she "comes across," or goes across, with a corresponding military force, the doomsday of militarism and frightfulness will speedily, or more speedily, come.

Canada has done well in war work, but her biggest call to duty comes now—the call for more men to relieve the trench-worn Canadians.

IS THERE ANOTHER WAY?

If sense of duty will not move the Canadian young man eligible for military service, to join the ranks, a sense of pride should influence him. When a young man reads—if the "slacker" reaches that stage—of the splendid doings of Canadian soldiers in France, he should be fired with the ambition to be in such splendid company. His spirit of sportsmanship should also be aroused to the point of getting into the war game with his fellow Canadians, who have come to the point of needing help and reinforcement. He should also be tempted by the fact that the Canadian forces in France are all Canadian — Canadian in loyalty to great principles; Canadian in personnel of soldiers from Canada led by a Canadian officer.

The first message home of General Sir Arthur Currie, the new Canadian commander-in-chief, was an appeal for more men. "It is imperatively necessary," he said, "that steps be immediately taken to insure that sufficient drafts of officers and men are sent from Canada to keep the corps to its full strength."

We should be able at once to meet the demand in part. According to figures furnished by the government, Canada has enlisted—"signed up" for overseas service—a total of 420,000. Of these 330,000 have been sent overseas or are under service in Canada. At least 250,000 have gone to the front, leaving 80,000 to draw upon for immediate filling of the depleted ranks of Canadians, reduced to about 135,000, in the fighting zone. But 80,000 men won't last long sent in the required drafts. We must if possible provide more reserves, and the material of these are not being provided rapidly enough by the voluntary enlistment of 6,000 or 7,000 per month.

We have by the conscription proposal abandoned voluntary recruiting, unless the suggestion of Mr. Pardee, the Opposition Whip, is adopted. In speaking in Parliament, in opposition to the referendum, and in favour of the principle of the conscription bill, he said:

Whether the conscription bill will pass I cannot tell. I have concluded to ask this government a thing which is dear to me. * * The Prime Minister has asked members on this side of the House for suggestions. May I meet that request by earnestly urging the national advisability of preceding the operation of the conscription bill by a last big and sincere appeal to the patriotism of young Canadian manhood to voluntarily come forward and back their brothers at the front.

That suggestion may not be adopted, or, if adopted, may not work out as desired. It has, however, all the better chance of succeeding, because it is a notorious and admitted fact that the principle of voluntary enlistment has not been given a fair chance, under proper conditions; under official control and leading. It is not denied that the government has taken no official interest to promote voluntary recruiting; only leaving it to private organisation and enterprise, judicious or unjudicious, wise or unwise. We have not had direct and real government leadership in the matter of recruiting. Mr. Pardee thinks that "such an appeal, backed by an earnest educational campaign, and conducted in the true spirit, would, I verily believe, result in the coming forward of the 100,000 young men required, and more." There is all the more hope for Mr. Pardee's suggestion bearing fruit; for there is the proposal of conscription; its imminent and ultimate application in default of desired results from a voluntary enlistment campaign, would doubtless influence many who are holding back; and a wise handling of an enlistment campaign officially conducted, backby government interest, would give the voluntary spirit an education and impulse it has not yet felt. If, as stated, the present rate of voluntary enlistment is 7,000 per month, would not a systematic official government campaign, effectively organized and enthusiastically conducted, be likely to treble the present rate of voluntary enlistment, and increase it from 7,000 to 21,000 per month, in which event, five months would round out Canada's lacking quota of 100,000?

A newspaper man, Frederick Palmer, has been given charge of the Intelligence Department of the United States war establishment. The Ottawa government is informed that Sir John Willison is free, having retired from the editorship of The News.

MR. A. K. MacLEAN AND DR. CLARK SUPPORT CONSCRIPTION MEASURE

OTTAWA, June 26.—With words moderate in tone and gripping in their sincerity, Mr. A. K. Maclean, Liberal member for Halifax, tonight steadied a Parliament which, during the earlier part of the day, threatened to forget the gravity of the issue confronting it and besprinkle its patriotism with the corroding acid of partisanship. Mr. Maclean lifted the debate again to a high pitch. He gave earnest recognition to considerations of national unity and sturdy war-winning. He gave credit to all sincere Parliamentarians for their convictions, and expressed his own.

The party system of politics had been dubbed the "madness of the many for the benefit of the few." "Yet," said Mr. Maclean, "it is only when one finds himself differing from the majority of his party associates that he realizes the strong ties and the warm affections which bind members holding the same party faith together." He paid feeling tribute to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his singleness of purpose and his intense patriotism. "The announcement of the Liberal leader, asking his followers to act upon their own convictions, was neither sought nor asked for," said Mr. Maclean. "It came freely and spontaneously, and was truly characteristic of the man, and truly reflects his sterling Liberalism." Mr. Maclean added that he understood and appreciated that repugnance to conscription was not confined to one Province, and counselled Parliament to give leadership by winning respect and confidence, and give it without arrogance and without dogmatism. Mr. Maclean expressed regret that in certain speeches which had been delivered during the afternoon there "had seemed to be a regrettable coloring of spirit, which, at this time, I do not care about."

Lieut.-Col. James Arthurs, Parry Sound, who recently returned from France, was the first speaker of the day. He pleaded the case of the boys at the front, but unfortunately permitted himself to be led into a specific and somewhat acrimonious assault upon the French-Canadians, which tended toward bitterness.

Dr. Michael Clark, Red Deer, who followed, marred an otherwise eloquent and patriotic deliverance by an uncalled-for and none too temperate criticism of his distinguished leader and such fellow-Liberals as did not see eye-to-eye with him. From his sentiments other Liberals who favoured the principle of the bill, included Messrs. Graham, Parhastened to disassociate themselves hastened to disassociate themselves. Dr. Clark left the Chamber as soon as he concluded, amid Conservative cheering, and was met at the entrance by Hon. Robert Rogers, who warmly patted him on the back and clasped his hand in congratulation.

Mr. O. Turgeon, Gloucester, N.B., in an earnest speech, championed the course of consulting the people by referendum.

Donald Sutherland of South Oxford, following the lead of Colonel Arthurs, dilated at considerable length upon the necessity for conscription because of Quebec's attitude. He noted that the Indians of Canada, with a population of 105,000, had given 2,500 men to the colours, thus setting a good example to Quebec. Mr. Sutherland thought that Premier Borden should achieve coalition in spite of Laurier.

Hon. Jacques Bureau reviewed again the constitutional argument against the passing of the conscription bill without an appeal to the people, emphasized the greater need of food production as a war measure and quoted the British Minister of Agriculture to the effect that the war would be won on the plow lands of the American continent.

Voice of The People

Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The management of a charitable Society recently were considering the sad case of a widowed mother and her two children—a son of 18, and a daughter of 16. The son was in jail for theft and the daughter an inmate of a house of sin. The conclusion reached was that nothing could be done, as both were already so far gone in sin that anything short of a miracle would fail to redeem them.

Eight years before, when the boy was 10 and the girl 8, the newly widowed mother applied to this same Society for help. After investigation, it was discovered that the woman was able to earn a living for her children if she went out to some form of service. Accordingly her application was rejected, and she secured work to keep her children from bodily starvation. But when, she was asked why she let the children go to ruin morally, her answer cut the consciences of the members of the Managing Board to the quick: "What could you expect? I had to leave them every day while I went to work. How could I take care of them?"

Considering only the bald financial phase of the question, it would have been much cheaper to have paid that mother $500 a year to support the household, and leave her at home to care for and train the children, rather than bear the expense of dealing with her son as thief, and her daughter as a notorious character, perhaps, for the full length of their lives. He is hard-hearted, indeed, who, when the mother's anguish is put into the scales, does not feel the terrible mistake of making her forfeit the children's souls in her effort to save their bodies.

A mothers' pension for all women crowded into such a dilemma is the smallest measure of social obligation toward the problem. Starr J. Murphy, Counsel for the Rockefeller Foundation, said: "No woman can support and the same time mother a family of children and be a breadwinner for them."

Co-operation Will Relieve Car Shortage and Expedite Coal Movements in Canada

Representatives of the various boards of trade and the railway companies are to meet in Ottawa on July 3rd, to outline a plan for revising the existing car demurrage rules. If an agreement can be reached, the Railway Commission will be asked to ratify the new regulations immediately. It is felt that if the present rules are not changed car shortage will become more acute month by month.

"The public should have a clear realization of what is aimed at in the revision of these demurrage rules," said Mr. J. E. Dalrymple, Vice-President of the Grand Trunk yesterday. "The situation is unprecedented. In every territory on the continent there is a demand for cars that cannot be fully met. It is useless to look to the car builders for relief. They have more work now than they can handle. If the situation is to be improved, or at least prevent from becoming more serious there must be the greatest possible co-operation between the shippers, the consignees and the railway. Every car available must be kept moving and every car must be loaded to its capacity. That is without doubt the only way out of the present difficulties. Any measure that may be adopted to prevent the undue holding of cars for loading and unloading will, therefore, be of national advantage. Rules that were probably equitable under normal conditions are to-day hampering the efficiency of transportation."

"The coal supply of Canada," continued Mr. Dalrymple," will be largely controlled by the number of cars available. The railroads have exceptional opportunities for knowing just how serious the fuel problem is. No Canadian coal can be obtained for use. Supplies of Nova Scotia coal hitherto entering on our line at Montreal and Portland can no longer be procured, and as we can only get a limited quantity through Depot Harbour and through Midland, Ont., we are obliged to rail our coal from the Pennsylvania mines. Not only are we obliged to do that, but we have to send our own cars down there for service between the mines and tidewater on the lakes, that is to furnish foreign roads with equipment of Grand Trunk ownership for the movement of coal for railway use."

"The increased mileage we are called upon to perform, by reason of this abnormal condition, at the four points mentioned is equal to 132,406,000 ton miles. In order to bring these figures down to something we can all understand I may say that the extra service the Grand Trunk will be called upon to perform this year, over and above the increased cost of five million dollars on the purchase of coal, is equal to one freight train a day for 330 days between Montreal and Toronto."

"That is the situation as regards railway fuel. If the railways cannot master sufficient cars to keep a supply of coal on their lines for locomotive purposes their operation will be interfered with, and that would be a national calamity at the present time. Precisely similar difficulties face the country in connection with a general fuel supply for commercial and household purposes."

"It will be clearly seen that every available car must be used to the fullest advantage, and that no individual is entitled at this critical period, to hold a car for a day or for an hour when it might be released. It is the duty of every user of coal to obtain his winter supply, as far as possible, immediately and not wait until bad weather comes along, bringing with it transportation difficulties and the always pressing demand for fuel."

"Surely this is a time for mutual effort and broad co-operation. New demurrage rules will help to bring pressure to bear upon the delinquents who selfishly hold up cars and thereby hurt every other shipper. With all cars loaded to rated capacity and every car kept on the move, as far as practicable, the facilities at the disposal of the nation's business will give a good account of themselves."

Youthful, Beautiful Skin Easy To Have

You may be as healthy as a bird in the air and still have a poor complexion. Changing seasons and temperatures, winds, dust and dirt, are apt to injure any skin, even though the general health be good. When these external influences spoil the complexion, the natural thing is to remove the spoilt by external means. Ordinary mercolised wax will do this. It will actually absorb the weather-soiled film-skin, a little each day. In a week or two you'll have a brand new complexion, a new skin. The exquisitely beautiful and youthful complexion thus acquired, comes so easily, without harm or discomfort, there's no reason why any woman should not adopt this simple treatment. Get an ounce of mercolised wax, at any drug store, apply nightly like cold cream, washing it off mornings. This will not fail in any case.

To quickly remove wrinkles, signs of care and age, bathe the face occasionally in a solution of powdered saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in a half pint of witch hazel. The result, which is instantaneous, will surprise you greatly. The ingredients are, of course, perfectly harmless.

SAYS CHIEF'S CAR HAS NO ROOM FOR PULMOTOR

Ald. Dobbin Will Investigate and Report at Council Meeting.

A ten dollar cheque to pay for the license for Chief Howard's new runabout was ordered by the Council last night to be paid to Mr. Wm. Lytle. Incidentally, Ald. Duncan said that he understood the car did not provide proper accommodation for a pulmotor, the transportation of which was one of the considerations when the truck was proposed. Ald. Dobbin replied that he would investigate the report.

Contract Let for Footbridge Rail

Wm. Hamilton Company's Tender of $625 Accepted

An iron railing for the C.P.R. footbridge is yet a dangerous deficiency. Ald Dobbin stated last night that he had seen many men cycling over the walk with nothing to guard them against a plunge into the river. Tenders for iron pipe were received as follows: The Wm. Hamilton Co., $625, delivered at the bridge, and White and Ackford, $785, delivered and erected. The Hamilton company's tender was accepted, and it is expected that the bridge will be in place within five weeks. Some one suggested that a wire cable be stretched along the outside of the bridge, as a form of protection, but Ald. Smith remarked that it would be but a temptation to youngsters to swing on it, thereby increasing the element of danger. The new iron bridge will be 42 inches high and composed of three stretches of iron railing.

Preparations at Rye's Boathouse

The usual season's activity round Rye's Otonabee boathouse has begun. The small craft lying all along the front of the boathouse, has weathered the winter well under the watchful care of Mr. Rye. Owners of motor and steam boats have been busy preparing for trial trips, Dominion Day outings, and for camp service.

Mr. Rye has his boat livery all ready for the summer service and the racks for canoes and skiffs are well filled—some 115 boats being registered on the roll of the boathouse. Everything appears orderly and well kept, and the convenient facilities afforded make these headquarters quite popular with boatowners.

LORRIES DAMAGE ROAD.

Leonard Construction Co. will be asked to use Lansdowne Street.

The Leonard Construction Company will be requested to use Lansdowne street or Romaine street for their gravel-carrying motor lorries, following Ald. Saunders' statement, last night, that Romaine Street was being cut up and a sewer threatened by the excessively heavy loads. Ald. Smith suggested that the Company might be asked to repair the extreme east end of Brock street, where, it was stated, the roadway has been pulverised.

NEW TRAFFIC RULE REACHES THE POLICE

The Council's traffic amendment, "that the horseman or vehicle on your right, has the right of way," has been passed on to the police force, where the men have been debating its feasability in rush hours at a busy corner. "This sounds good enough for the automobilist approaching a corner, but a traffic policeman is supposed to keep the vehicles moving, and he should be governed by his experience, common sense, and the exigencies of the traffic."

Very Smart
Middy Blouses
and Wash Skirts

Again this year novelty joins hands with comfort in the unique effects revealed in Middy Blouses and Skirts, whose lines are not only decidedly smart but also certain to yield becomingness to the wearer—a woman will have to admit that it's true when she looks at these entirely exclusive and new examples which are very distinctive.

In them is the charm that arouses enthusiasm and around them clings the atmosphere of the outdoor days of July and August.

There is a wide range of Middies and Skirts for the girl in her "teens" as well as for the woman of more mature years.

ATTEMPTED INJURY ENGLISH HOUSE

Anti-Conscriptionists Publish False Story About Semi-Ready Co., in Montreal

Henri Bourassa's paper in Montreal published in a recent issue under scareheadings, a story to the effect that several of the large manufacturers in that city were discharging hundreds of men with the avowed purpose of forcing these men to enlist.

This was followed up by a specific charge against the Semi-ready Company, who are among the few English firms still in the clothing trade in Montreal. On the day after speakers at a public meeting in Maisonneuve, a suburb of the city, advised that French-Canadians boycott the English firms.

The President of the Semi-ready Company at once denied that his directors had even contemplated such an injustice to their employees and stated that whilst many of their employees, and also one of the members of the firm, were fighting for the freedom of France, they would not undertake to enforce the functions of government, nor would they be foolish enough to forestall conscription.

The publisher of Le Devoir apologized, and stated that the informant of the writer of the article had skedaddled to New York. The clothing trade of New York and Chicago is controlled by Germans and their descendants. Before the United States threw down the gauntlet to Germany these men sent spies and agitators to Montreal, and caused a great deal of trouble among the clothing shop employees there. Defeated by the quick public diagnosis of their purpose, the men returned again and again. It was one of these fellows who, divining that it was the Semi-ready organization which had defeated his purpose, sought to vent his spleen by taking full measure of the prejudice which such a statement might cause to the detriment of an English firm in French Canada. He no doubt thought to bring the riotous element in play against the Semi-ready stores and factories.

The editor of Le Devoir stated in his paper: "Le Devoir published in its issue of June 1st the above information about which Mr. Nelson speaks. It was done in good faith and without any idea of doing any harm to Semi-ready. We were misinformed, and beg to apologize for any error or detriment to the above house."

New Fire Chief for Lindsay

The Lindsay Warder says: Alderman Baker informed the council last night that he had selected a new Fire Chief, Mr. Beadle, who had been with the company for over a year. He did this after due consideration and a lengthy convention with the members of the brigade.

The men were all unanimous in their opinion that Mr. Beadle would make a suitable leader, and promised their hearty co-operation with him in the discharge of his duties.

On motion, the appointment was confirmed, and the new Chief will assume duties on the 1st of July. His salary will be $700 per annum, with an increase of $50 in six months' time if his services are what is desired.

NO REDUCTION IN PRICE OF FORD CARS

Mr. Dunn, Ford dealer, for this district, has received a letter from the Ford Motor Company, stating positively that there will be no reduction in the price of Ford Cars on August 1st as in former years.

This letter also states owing to the increased price of material and other conditions in connection with manufacturing, that instead of a reduction there will probably be an increase.

DE LAVAL COMPANY HAS SEWER CONNECTION

Septic Tank Has Been Emptied and Filled In.

The septic tank temporarily provided for the De Laval Company, has been filled in and connection made with the Park Street sewer. The work has just been completed. Those who have passed the De Laval plant recently have surely been delighted by the beauty of its level, sweeping lawn, the flower beds, with their red geraniums in striking relief against the deep green of the sward, and the general neatness and richness of the splendid front of buildings and grass plot. Such a factory deserves a better prospect than that which immediately confronts it.

BUILDING PLANS MUST PASS ENGINEER HEREAFTER

For Buildings and Alterations Within the Fire Limits.

Plans and specifications for new buildings or alterations within the fire limits must be submitted to the City Engineer in future before a permit is issued. This decision was passed at the Council meeting last night following the discussion of the fireproofing of the stairs and balconies on the south side of the apartments over Bennett and Goodwill's offices. These will be sheeted with galvanized iron and the rest of the wood coated with fireproof paint.

A SEND OFF TO REV. R. G. PEEVER

Many Friends Gathered at the Station To Say Goodbye

A hearty send-off was given to Rev. R. G. Peever and Mrs. Peever, this morning, on their departure for London, Ont., where Mr. Peever will enter into the work of his new field at the First Methodist Church. The Trustees and official Board, the Epworth League, Ladies' Aid Society, and other organizations of George Street Methodist Church were largely represented at the station, while many friends from the congregation were on hand to say good-bye. Rev. and Mrs. Peever will be greatly missed by the congregation of George Street Church.

A Treat for Music Lovers

The Goodwin recitals, which will be given in the Conservatory of Music, one on Friday evening and one on Saturday evening of this week, promise to be of an exceptionally high class character. They are being conducted under the auspices of the Otonabee Chapter, I.O.D.E. Mr. Goodwin, who is a wonderful baritone, will be assisted by Florence Austin, violinist and Samuel Quincy, pianist. A well chosen programme will be given on each evening and no doubt those two recitals will be well attended.

Allies Win Two Games From C. G. E.

Last night a great match was witnessed by many bowling enthusiasts at the Water Street Alleys, when the Allies took two out of three games from the C. G. E. The Allies won the first game by a margin of 181 pins, and also the second game by 23 pins. The last game was a hard-fought battle, the C. G. E. pin spillers winning out by a 30-pin margin. Halliday, for the Allies, came in for high three games, with a 452 total, and also rolled a 230 count in the first game. Cowles, for the C.G.E., was replaced by Jackson in the third game. Following are scores:

MILITARY NEWS

ment will be asked to designate as the MacLean Highlanders of North America. Already the United States is represented on the rolls of the battalions for which Lieut.-Col. Percy Guthrie, who will command it in France, is here seeking recruits.

In the last ten days a total of 1,301 British subjects have enlisted here for service in France.

FLYING FIELDS.

The establishing of flying fields in various parts of the Dominion under the direction of British officers of the Royal Flying Corps, has made an opportunity for ambitious young men of good standing to become flying officers. Commissions of this character are much coveted by young men, and are only granted to those who are between 18 and 25 years of age. According to officials of the Aero Club of Canada the training of the young men who enter as cadets is delightful, refined and educational. The Club referred to is taking an active interest in aviation and through its members is assisting the flying corps. Aviation is now the senior branch of the service and in view of the great future foreseen for aviation, the opportunity offered by the Royal Flying Corps at this time is most unusual and doubtless will be taken advantage of by the ambitious. The general headquarters of the corps is in Toronto, as is also the Aero Club of Canada, and young men wishing application forms will receive them by addressing either organization.

Punishment for the Mesopotamian Blunder Demanded

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 27.—Britain generally approved to-day the fiercely bitter words of denunciation voiced in the report of the investigation committee on the first Mesopotamia expedition.

All the Northcliffe newspapers demanded adequate punishment for the high officials charged with responsibility.

In the House of Commons Chancellor of the Exchequer Bonar Law said the government was considering immediate action against those held

PARIS, June 27.—So thoroughly complete was the French victory of yesterday in the Hurtebise sector that to-day the Germans did not attempt the usual counter attacks, to-day's official statement related. An artillery duel progressed, but there were no infantry actions.

"Enemy positions captured," the War Office stated, "include the Dragon's Cave, a formidable stronghold from which counter attacks had been launched. A large amount of material was taken.

"In the Champagne there was a successful French raid on Maison de Champagne."

PROVIDENCE, R.I., June 27.—Automatic steel arms which reach out from German submarines and push them away from the Allies' trap nets are saving the German U-boats and increasing the undersea menace, according to "a statement from a British Government official," published by the Providence Journal to-day. "The increasing gravity of the U-boat menace is everywhere admitted in inner circles of the British Admiralty," says the statement.

PARIS, June 27.—Grand Admiral Von Tirpitz, Germany's apostle of sea ruthlessness, is critically ill of diabetes at a Black Forest resort in Switzerland, according to word received here to-day. The former German Naval Minister resigned in March, 1916, on account of ill health.

LONDON, June 27.—The sinking by a German submarine of the American sailing ship Galina, from Rouen to New York, was announced in an Admiralty statement to-day. There were no casualties. Fifty survivors reached Brest to-day. The submarine sank the ship off Usbant with bombs.

American Troops Arrive in France

A FRENCH PORT, June 27.—The first detachment of American fighting troops have landed on French soil.

The voyage was without incident.

The troops are Pershing's regulars. The voyage from an American port was made safely without untoward incident. This is the first to be published regarding the American troops despatched to France though their departure was known to press associations and newspapers.

LONDON, June 27.—German troops are falling steadily back into Lens and preparing to make desperate resistance to the British assault on that city. Every front despatch to-day emphasized the steady encroachment of the British lines around the chief coal city of France. Field Marshal Haig has so far not utilized a general assault movement to achieve his gains about the city, since the general British offensive brought his troops within striking distance. Instead, he is adopting the plan of "biting away" with small, local attacks, here and there all around the city, each "bite" taking a little more ground. Throughout, the British artillery is raining shell. This type of attack has resulted in amazingly insignificant losses to the British. The German commanders have been preparing for relinquishment of Lens for a month, realizing sooner or later a general mass attack by Haig would sweep them out. A systematic plan of destruction of the city's factories, coal mining plants and shafts nearby was put into operation weeks ago, according to the reports of aviators.

LONDON, June 27.—The total of British ships lost during the past week by submarines, will show an increase over last week's figures, according to announcement to-day, in advance of to-night's official statistics.

Germans Retreat Into Avion Village

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 27.—German defenders of Lens retreated to-day into Avion, behind the so-called "Avion Mericourt Switch Line," established in the ruins of th eLens suburbs, as the British continued their enclosing movement.

Here behind railway embankments and slag heaps the Germans have established machine gun fortresses. British patrols are keeping closely in touch with the retreating enemy in all this section south of the city.

West of Lens, the difficulties in the way of the attacking British forces are tremendous, but prisoners are pouring back in a steady stream to-day and declared the defenders are sorely pressed and fear the worst.

The British now hold all high ground in the entire Lens salient.

Enemy airmen are striving frantically to solve the riddle of Haig's ogensive where he will strike with his next attack. It is plain from their efforts they cannot figure whether it wil be at Ypres, Messines, Lens, Arras or Bullecourt.

A document taken on a prisoner to-day and exhibited at headquarters, confessed that the German planes have nearly all been stopped by the British flying corps before they were able to get over even their own front lines. A few, however, seem to cross every once in a while, and there are numerous hot battles in the air as a result.

Canadian Aviator Brings Down Zepp

TORONTO, June 26.—The identity of the aviator, who brought down the Zeppelin L-22 off the east coast of England, May 14, has been disclosed in the award of a Distinguished Service Cross to Flight Sub-Lieut. Robert Leckie, of Toronto, formerly of 141 Sunnyside avenue. The report of the act for which the gallant airman has been decorated is as follows:

"News was received early that the L-22 was approaching the coast. A squadron of naval aircraft went in pursuit. The Zeppelin was attacked by a battleplane, which overtook it and the L-22 was seen to burst into flames. Two members of the airship crew jumped into the sea, and the others disappeared with the burning Zeppelin."

Lieut Leckie, who is a nephew of Mr. John Leckie, is 26 years of age. He received partial training as an aviator at the Island in September, 1915. He went to England the following December, where he was attached to the Royal Naval Air Service. For about a year he has been acting as an aerial patrolman around the English coast. Before taking his course in Toronto, Lieut. Leckie was with the firm of John Leckie and Co.

THREE MONTHS' JAIL FOR KEEPER OF DISORDERLY HOUSE

As keeper of a disorderly house at 255 George street, James Haggit, one-armed and formerly of Detroit, was sentenced to three months in jail by Magistrate Dumble this morning. Mrs. Edith Hinckley his "co-respondent" who admits having a husband in Troy, N.Y., was found guilty of sharing with her paramour of yesterday the responsibility and the guilt of "keeping" this particular house. Sentence was reserved in her case to give her a chance to communicate with her husband with a view to a reunion. Mrs. Hinckly stated in court this morning that she had left her husband because of his attentions to other women. Thus, every way you look at this outfit appears the brand of "damaged goods."

A young girl who was held on a charge of being an inmate was given her liberty and a chance to get out of the path that leads to the Mercer or some such institution, or, to an end infinitely worse.

Such was the clean up at 255 George street, not forgetting the two Deline women who received a year apiece in the Mercer yesterday morning. The reports of this case were almost incredible, revealing a degree of depravity, or at least, loose-living that would be unimaginable to the average decent citizen.

If the police overlooked anything it was not readily immediate. Apparently they cleaned out the entire household with a thoroughness that indicates how well prepared they were for the raid that waited only the signal for its execution.

Captain Beer at the Temple To-night

Captain Beer who was the late Bandmaster of the Temple Band arrives in the city to-day at 5.30 to do a busy special meeting at the Temple to-night, and will be greeted by old and new friends alike, heartily.

COCCHI THREATENS SUICIDE IN PRISON

Close Watch Kept Over Slayer, Who Greatly Fears Extradition Here.

BOLOGNA, Italy, June 26.—Alfredo Cocchi, self-confessed slayer of Ruth Cruger, the New York school girl, is being carefully watched in prison here, as he has several times expressed the intention of committing suicide "to finish it all." For this reason he is not permitted to have in his cell towels, suspenders, bed sheets or metal knives, forks and spoons.

His jailers assert that on one occasion he attempted to dash his head against the wall, although he soon became calm when the keepers threatened to put him in a straight-jacket.

Cocchi's moods vary frequently. Sometimes he is so cheerful that he sings, but he often is plunged into deepest despondency, with periods of hysteria, in which he expresses the fear that the Italian Government will permit his extradition to the United States, where capital punishment prevails.

On most Ontario farms there are too many fences. On all too many there are found fences out of repair, and in such a condition as to be simply temptations for live stock to get over in the adjoining fields to destroy crops and make trouble.—Farmers' Advocate.

PETERBOROUGH TO STONEY LAKE

On Friday June 29, 1917, Steamer Manita will leave the George St. Wharf at 9 a.m. and connect with the noon train at Lakefield with Passengers and freight for Stoney Lake

Will Try To Secure Aeroplane for the Holiday Events

"If we could only get Vernon Castle with an aeroplane, there would be no doubt about the size of the crowd at Monday's celebration," remarked Ald. Worth last night at the conference of the committees that are boosting the holiday event.

Those present included the members of the Council, Peter Victor, Robt. Muir and John Coppock of the G.W.V.A., and the following representatives of the Sports Committee of the Greater Peterborough Association: R. Denne, C. G. Graham, R. M. Glover, T. H. Hooper, A. C. Kay, R. L. Dobbin, J. Brooks, R. J. Munroe, W. A. Haslam, G. H. Roper and others.

Members of the flying corps at Desoronto have come all the way to Bewdly, on Rice Lake, and it was stated last night that there would be no difficulty in making the remaining eighteen miles to Peterborough. The members agreed last night that an aeroplane would prove a big attraction, and that Peterborough should receive some consideration if the matter were taken up through the local military authorities and militia department.

The idea hasn't passed the embryonic state of a wish or a hope, but there is at least the possibility that a machine and flier may be here for the holiday.

RECEPTION AT 2.15

The reception to the returned soldiers will take place at the Exhibition Grounds at 2.15 o'clock.

In the morning there will be a review at Central Park of the returned soldiers, the veterans of '66 and the men in uniform here. It is understood that this will be a purely military affair. Band concerts will be held in the parks at night.

The motor parade in the afternoon terminating at the Exhibition Park will include the big C.G.E. truck that has been loaned for the conveyance of the band.

SALVATION ARMY BAND BUSY ON THE HOLIDAY

Will Play at Celebration and Also T. A. S. Picnic.

The Temple Band has been invited to provide music at the T.A.S. picnic on Monday next, July 2nd, and have heartily accepted the invitation to do so, after taking their part in the automobile parade for the Health Association to the Exhibition Grounds.

TICKETS FOR FAMILIES OF RETURNED MEN AND WAR WIDOWS

At the joint meeting of the Great War Veterans, the Citizens' Committee having charge of the details of the demonstration at the Exhibition grounds, on Tuesday next, and the City Council, final arrangements were perfected with regard to the part assigned to the returned men from service in the day's proceedings.

In order that all the men returned, with their families, should enjoy the day, admission tickets will be issued to all who apply. Tickets have already been sent and given to the wives and children of men on service. Returned men, or their wives are asked to come or send to the Patriotic Fund office, any day, or on Saturday night for tickets If personal application is not convenient, a messenger may be sent.

Also widows, in receipt of pensions and who care to attend during the afternoon will find tickets at service for themselves and children. Application at the office will ensure tickets being supplied.

Please be so good as to send promptly, or call.

How To Destroy the Dandruff Germ

BY A SPECIALIST.

That the dandruff germ is responsible for nearly all the diseases to which the scalp is heir, as well as for baldness and premature gray hair, is a well known fact, but when we say that it is also indirectly responsible for many of the worst cases of catarrh and consumption, we appreciate the importance of any agent that will destroy its power. We are therefore particularly pleased to give herewith the prescription which an eminent scientist states he has found, after repeated tests, to completely destroy the dandruff germ in from one to three applications. It will also almost immediately stop falling hair and it has in numerous cases produced a new hair growth after years of baldness. This prescription can be made up at home, or any druggist will put it up for you: 6 ounces Bay Rhum, 2 ounces Lavoma de Composee, one-half drachm Menthol Crystals. Mix thoroughly, and after standing half an hour it is ready for use. Apply night and morning, rubbing into the scalp with the finger-tips. If you wish to perfumed, add 1 drachm of your favourite perfume. While this preparation is not a dye it is unequalled for restoring gray hair to its original color.

Council Finally Decides on Grants of $300 to Each Band

Another Exhaustive Discussion on a Contentious Question — Some Aldermen Disapprove of 57th Band's Action

LAST FRIDAY NIGHT

The Council passed the band by-laws last night granting $300 each to the Salvation Army and 57th Regimental Bands. At the outset there was a little hesitation about introducing the question. Alderman Stratton, who previously had moved that the $600 appropriation for music be evenly divided, was absent, and Alderman MyIntyre intimated that consequently he would refrain from voting, thereby paring with Alderman Stratton.

The by-law to give the Salvation Army Band $300 was presented first, and in the recond reading, with Alderman Smith in the chair, Alderman Weir moved an amendment, seconded by Alderman Langford that the grant be $200, leaving $400 for the 57th. When the vote was called, only Mayor Duffus supported the amendment. Those opposing it were Aldermen Saunders, Taylor, Dobbin, Duncan and Worth. The by-law was then passed with the voting reversed. The second by-law followed without comment.

Thus, however, the Salvation Army Band may use its grant, and it has been stated that it will be contributed to some patriotic object, it receives $300, and, however, the 57th may need $600, and it has been stated that this sum is at least $100 insufficient, it receives $300. The fifty-fifty has prevailed.

A Recurring Problem.

In contrast to the essential feature of music, this question which was finally disposed of last night, has rifted the Council's lute on more than one occasion. It may be regarded as one of the most contentious matters of those which are presented annually for the Council's consideration and decision. Not that the discordance is so pronounced, but there has ben a lack of complete harmony that should be the regnant note of music itself.

57th Disappointed Citizens.

The familiar arguments of former discussions on this question were heard again last night with a new complaint against the 57th. Alderman Duncan remarked that had they played their concert last Friday night and then approached the Council for a larger grant, he might have taken a different view of the situation. But, without any notice they remained away, thus disappointing the large crowd of citizens who had assembled as usual.

Alderman Smith — Did the 57th notify the Council or any person previous to last Friday night.

Mayor Duffus—I don't know.

Alderman Taylor stated that the trouble with the 57th was that people didn't know the band was in Peterborough. "We hardly ever hear them."

Alderman Duncan said that the Salvation Army Band intended to turn their grant into some Patriotic fund. It was only right and fair that the Council should give them $300.

An additional $100 to the 57th was suggested by Alderman Dobbin, but the Mayor quoted various figures to show that the appropriation of $600 must not be exceeded. A motor truck for the Board of Works Department meant $500 or $600 unprovided for, the street oil tank and other unforeseen expenses considerably swelled the total of the demands that threatened an overdraft.

The Mayor's Attitude.

The Mayor added that his attitude might be misconstrued. The 57th was a public band, and its grant had been gradually reduced until it was now only $300. The financial aid they formerly received from the officers of the regiment was not now available, and with an allowance of only $300 it was impossible for them to turn out and play during the season, to purchase music, etc. The Salvation Army Band had given their services freely at all times and deserved every credit and recognition, but the Mayor believed that had the Council granted them the same sum as last year there would have been no objection whatever, The 57th Band had no other source of revenue, whereas the Salvation Army Band was supported by other means than the city's contribution.

Alderman Weir—Neither band has asked for an increase. Why give it?

Mayor Duffus—When I suggested at the time we were fixing the appropriations that we support only one band, I was thinking only of the finances of the city.

Alderman Dobbin—I accept that suggestion.

Alderman Duncan—If they won't accept $300 each, cut it out altogether.

Alderman Saunders stated that the 57th Band had promised to give a concert in King Edward Park last year. An expectant crowd had gathered, but the band failed to appear.

Mayor Duffus said he did not recall the occasion, to which Alderman Saunders replied that ex-Alderman Edgar had made the arrangements.

That the two bands play in alternate weeks at Victoria Park was Alderman Smith's suggestion.

Alderman Langford—"We are here to spend the money in the way that suits the public. If you go to the concerts you find that on Tuesday nights the benches are scarcely filled. On Friday nights there are crowds.

Alderman Duncan—Friday night's the best night.

Alderman Dobbin proposed a motion that only one band be supported and that the entire $600 be given to the 57th.

"That's the other extreme," commented Alderman Weir.

"We shouldn't fail to recognize the other band," said the Mayor. "If the grant was the same as last year, everybody would be satisfied."

Alderman Worth said he didn't think the 57th Band was organized as before. And in any case they might have acted in a more gentlemanly manner last Friday night. Replying to Alderman Weir's remark that the band was an advertisement for the Salvation Army, Alderman Worth referred to their world-wide work. "They are the most practical organization in the city from a religious point of view. We see it in what Adjutant McElhiney and his wife are doing. The city ought to be proud of them."

Thus, the Council individually spoke its mind, and in the subsequent vote their words were transformed into acts on the more popular basis of "fifty-fifty."

Alderman Smith had provided an interlude remarking that a 57th bandsman told him they had played during June, but that the Salvation Army Band had not, and ostensibly because they were waiting to see if they were going to get anything.

Alderman Saunders—Was the Salvation Army Band asked to play? I am sure that had they been asked, they would have done so.

Mayor Duffus—If you are alluding to me, I haven't asked either band, directly or indirectly.

Mannschafts, Teuppennburysplaz.

Six parcels of food and 25 lbs. of bread are sent every month to every Canadian prisoner of war.

The parcels alone cost three pounds, or calculating roughly in Canadian coinage, fifteen dollars for each man. The Society pledges itself that these parcels are faithfully despatched, but it is beyond the power of the Society to guarantee that every man will receive all his parcels.

We know, too well, that these parcels are all that stand between the men, who have fought for us, and starvation, so even at the risk of feeding some Germans, through the stealing of parcels, there must not be the least slackening on our part in the sending of them. We must be able to look the men who are spared to return to the homeland in the face, feeling satisfied in our hearts that we strained every effort to feed, sustain and help them in their weary time of exile.

Only some of the citizens realize how great a strain the sending of $500 every month to feed our Peterborough men, is upon the financial resources of the local branch.

The local society has made few appeals to the public, apart from its monthy subscribers feeling assured that everyone who realizes the tremendous magnitude and splendid character of the work being carried on, not only by the National Society, but by the local branch, would if able to do so be moved to help generously.

What would be the result if we always followed the advice we give to others?

The Young Men's Christian Association Is Your Steward

Giving makes every giver bigger and richer.

Stinginess and miserliness impoverish a man.

All of us are richer because of the generosity and bigness of heart of others.

Sharing burdens is the easiest way to carry them.

When we share each others burdens we can carry bigger burdens.

A Burden Which Peterboro Carries

Carrying on the work of the "Y" is a burden. Many carry it, and so many are happier and enriched.

You give away something—for your own good reasons. But not always are you sure that your givings are well used.

When you give $5.00 or $10.00 or $100 to the "Y" work, you are not in any doubt.

You can see the "Y's" Balance sheet any time.

You are always welcomed at the "Y" where you can see with your own eyes and hear with your own ears just what the "Y" is doing with the money it has received from you and others.

The war has taught us all to give more. Others are giving their lives. Many lives have been accepted by the Great Reaper. Many have given limbs. Many have given up their jobs. Many have given up their homes and everything they hold dear, and many have given up careers and all their future.

While we who have remained have given only money—perhaps.

The singular—the joyous—thing is that they who have given most are readiest to give.

And now the citizens of Peterboro are to have one more opportunity to give—to do the thing that enriches them and others.

When we go to you this year to solicit your gift for the "Y" we go in Confidence, because so many have learned the joy of giving—the cheapness of giving.

The gift we ask of you is for the building up of the lads who remain—to build up their bodies, to keep their minds and lives clean, to teach them to have strong wills and to be manly all through.

We are doing a work not being done by any other organization.

Build Yourself Into Other Lives

So multiply your own life.

What is $10,000 for all Peterboro?

And what better use would you make of the money if you withhold it?

Money kept back for self-indulgence works hurt in the man who thinks that he is saving it.

The glory of Canada these days is that she is giving so magnificently.

And in Peterboro we have a chance to give—and to contribute to our country's greatness of spirit and of esteem the wide world over.

And this time we give the money for use in our own city—among our own boys.

REMEMBER ALL THIS WHEN WE CALL ON YOU FOR YOUR CONTRIBUTION.

Thanks for your Anticipated Generosity,

G. A. GILLESPIE, President Y. M. C. A.
THOS. BARRIE, Chairman Finance Committee

WEDDING BELLS

BENNETT—MAXAM.

The wedding was solemnized at St. Peter's Cathedral at 7 o'clock this morning, Rev. Father O'Brien officiating, of Raymond H. Bennett, to Mary Ellen Maxam, both formerly of Kingston. Miss Violet Bennett, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, and Mr. A. D. Collins of Lindsay, supported the groom.

Mr. and Mrs. Bennett left on a wedding trip to Kingston, and on their return, will reside in Peterborough.

HARVEY—DAVIDSON.

A quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. Jas. Davidson, 563 Park street, this afternoon, when Miss Lillian Davidson was united in marriage to Mr. Joseph H. Harvey. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Robt. Pogue of St. Paul's Church in the presence of the immediate friends. Mr. and Mrs. Harvey left this afternoon on their honeymoon. They will reside in Toronto.

OBITUARY

MARGUERITE STEPHENSON.

On Monday, June 25, Marguerite, the only child of Mr. and Mrs. E. Stephenson, 310 Edinburgh street, passed away, after a few days' illness, aged 19 months.

The funeral will be from the residence at 3 p.m., Thursday, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

MRS. JOHN MASON.

Eliza Brown, wife of John Mason, died this morning at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Nill, 10th Line of Cavan, aged 75.

Mrs. Mason was born in Hastings and resided the greater part of her life in Finella and Roseneath, later moving to Cavan, where she spent the last four months of her life.

She leaves to mourn her death, besides her husband, two sons, John of Baillieboro, and Walter of Roseneath, and two daughters, Mrs. Nill, of Cavan, and Mrs. Margaret, Toronto.

The funeral will take place on Friday afternoon at 1.30 from Mrs. Nill's residence. Rev. Mr. Thompson, of Hastings, assisted by Rev. Mr. Clarke, will officiate.

Congratulations are due Halliday Crane and Beaufort Boucher, two pupils of the Collegiate Institute who have been successful in their examinations to enter Royal Military College.

At the delightful recital given by the talented pupils of Miss Florence Scott and Miss Harriet Pierce at the Conservatory last night, the general success of the evening was augmented by two splendid solos by Miss Georgie Cuffe. The large number who attended the recital were enthusiastic in their praise of the work of Miss Scott and Miss Pierce, the skill of the pupils reflecting the greatest credit upon their training.

Trinity Church Choir Excursion to Clear Lake

Trinity Methodist choir, about 35 strong, held yesterday what was undoubtedly the most successful picnic of the day.

They boarded the morning train, then the boat, and spent the earlier part of the day at Mr. John Crane's cottage, Gladhalken, Clear Lake, where a delightful picnic lunch was served, after which the party left for South Beach.

Here the afternoon and evening were spent in sports and music. A baseball match, in which some fancy stunts in pitching and catching were carried out by the ladies who undertook this branch of the game themselves, brought to light two of the coming twirlers of the day, Misses Greta Giles and Clare Pothick, whose clever handling of the ball prevented the man at the bat from making a single strike. The teams were chosen by Mr. Crane and Mr. Skitch.

After tea was served parties motored to South Beach and conveyed the choir home.

Big Excursion From Hastings

The steamer Stoney Lake brought a big excursion from Hastings to-day under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the George street Methodist church. There were 280 people in the party. They left for home at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Special Service Men Have No Claims on Patriotic Fund

TORONTO, June 27.—Sir William Mulock has sent a letter to the Mayor outlining the attitude of the Toronto and York County Patriotic Fund Association in refusing to grant allowances to the members of the Special Service Corps. Members of the corps have strenuously maintained that their families were entitled to the patriotic allowance. There were about 500 members of the corps at Exhibition Camp, previous to the opening of Camp Borden.

Mayor Church wrote a letter to Sir William Mulock about the matter, which has been the subject of considerable controversy for some time. The members of the Special Service Company are composed of men who enlisted for overseas service but who were found physically unfit to proceed overseas, were not discharged, but were transferred to the Special Service Company. Their duties are those of military policemen, guards around military property, carrying out fatigue duties at camps, etc. Sir William replies:

I have your letter of the 19th instant, enclosing a letter from Pte. W. J. Perkins to yourself.

You asked me: "How many men are in the city belonging to the Special Service Corps, and what policy would be necessary re making some compensation to these men as special cases."

I have no information as to the number of men in the city belonging to the Special Service Corps.

As to what policy would be necessary in order that compensation be made to Special Service men, I presume the first step would be to obtain an Act of Parliament authorising the Patriotic Fund to make allowances out of the fund to those men on their dependents. When that legislation is obtained it would be necessary, I think, to have the consent of subscribers before any of the funds heretofore subscribed could be so diverted.

The Canadian Patriotic Fund, according to the Statute, can only be distributed amongst "the wives, children, and depending relatives of officers and men, residents of Canada, who, during the present war, may be on active service with the Naval and Military Forces of the British Empire and Great Britain's Allies."

If a man enlists and the military authorities find that he is not militarily fit but retain him in the service to perform work that could as well be done by a civilian, it does not appear that such services are those of a soldier on active service with the "Naval and Military forces of the British Empire which is made requisite by the Act.

In the opinion of the committee, no soldier can be regarded as on such active service unless he has gone overseas or taken part in the fighting or at least in qualifying himself to.

Though the way a self-made man makes love may be absurd, the way he makes money isn't.

AMERICAN REGULARS NOW IN FRANCE

First Contingent Arrived on Tuesday and Second Yesterday —Are Given Enthusiastic Reception on Their Arrival on French Soil

Special to The Examiner:

A FRENCH SEAPORT, June 27.—The second contingent of American troops arrived and disembarked this morning. The troops landed amid the frantic cheers of the people, who had gathered for hours before in anticipation of duplicating yesterday's surprise.

Enthusiasm rose to fever pitch when it was learned that the transports and convoys had successfully passed the submarine zone. The port was speedily beflagged in honour of the occasion.

All the troops now arrived were transferred to-day to a camp not distant from this point, where Major-General William L. Sibert is installed. Thence they probably will go soon to a point near the front. All the troops are in excellent shape, enthusiastic over the successful trip and their reception ,and eager for action.

Major-General Pershing, the American commander, is expected to-morrow.

The harbour is dotted with convoys. The streets are filled with soldiers in khaki and with blue-jackets. Great numbers of trucks are transporting immense supplies to the camp in which the troops are concentrating.

All the Troops Are Regulars.

Washington, June 27.—It is entirely permissible to say that the troops which landed in France to-day are part of the force which will be under command of Major-General Pershing. The American troops will be an entirely independent command, just as are the British troops, working, of course, with the French at the head of operations as they are on French soil.

All the troops under General Pershing's command are regulars, and comprise the division which President Wilson directed to proceed to France "at the earliest possible time."

ST. VITUS DANCE

Even the Most Severe Cases Can Be Cured by Dr. Williams Pink Pills

Is your child fidgety, restless, or irritable? Are the hands shaky or the arms jerky? Does the face twitch? Do the legs tremble or drag? These are signs of St. Vitus Dance, a nervous disease which is confined chiefly to young children, but which often affects highly strung women, and sometimes men. St. Vitus Dance is caused by disordered nerves, due to poor blood, and is always cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which fill the veins with new, rich, red blod, strengthening the nerves, and thus drawing out the disease. Here is proof: Mrs. John A. Cumming, Lower Caledonia, N. S., says: "When my daughter Myrtle was about nine years of age she became afflicted with St. Vitus Dance. The trouble ultimately became so bad that she could not hold anything in her hands, and had to be fed like a child. She could not even walk across the floor without help. She was treated for some time by a physician, but did not show any improvement. One day a neighbour said that he had read of a case of St. Vitus Dance cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and we decided to give this medicine a trial. By the time that the third box was used there was some improvement in her condition, and we continued giving her the pills for about a month longer when she was entirely cured, and has not since had the least return of the trouble.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can be obtained from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

General Strike Will Be Used

One Method In Which Quebec Is Likely To Fight Conscription

MONTREAL, June 27.—A general strike will be declared in Quebec if the conscription bill is brought into force, according to some opponents of the measure here.

"Constitutional means will be taken to fight the measure," said Elie Lalumiere, secretary of the Constitutional and the Friends of Liberty, who announced the method to be used would be a general strike. He promised the opposition to the bill will be effective.

The signatures to the petition of the Patriotic League of Canadian Interests against the bill have reached 100,000.

Cattle Market Steady for Choice Quality

Union Stock Yards—Receipts 78 cars, with 1,030 cattle, 319 calves, 1,567 hogsand 521 sheep and lambs.

Market opened good and active, prices holding steady to firm on all choice lots of butcher cattle. Later there was a slowing down and prices for the medium qualities were not so firm. Butcher cows and bulls seemed to be not at all in demand, and prices on these went off 25c to 50c.

Among the small stuff, sheep and lambs are easier, the latter being 50 cents to 75 cents lower than the first of the week.

Hogs have come back, and to-day went up to $16 fed and watered and $16.25 off cars.

Grain Dealers' Quotations.

Wheat markets show further declines to-day, under the influence chiefly of the continuous stream of crop reports all showing favourable conditions in the wheat-growing sections. FARMERS' CONVENTION TO BE HELD HERE

Prominent Men in the Organized Farmers' Movement To Speak — Business Men's Luncheon Will Be Held

Arrangements have been completed for the holding of a district convention of the United Farmers of Ontario in the Public Library Hall, Peterborough, on Saturday afternoon, July 7. This is the first convention of the kind to be held in the city.

During the past few years this movement has been making great progress in Ontario and now has over ten thousand members. There are a large number of local clubs in the vicinity of Peterborough and adjoining counties. These were consulted as to whether or not they would like to see a convention held in Peterborough, and so many replied favourably that a convention has accordingly been arranged. The speakers will include Mr. R. H. Halbert of Melanchton, President; and Mr. J. J. Morrison, Secretary, of the United Farmers of Ontario, and Mr. John Kennedy, Vice President of The Grain Growers' Grain Company, Winnipeg, and a director of the Home Bank of Canada. Mr. Kennedy is considered to be one of the most notable speakers in the farmers' movement in western Canada, and is the Vice President of a farmers' company that does many millions of dollars' worth of business a year, and which last year showed profits of over half a million dollars.

The object of the Peterborough convention is to enable the farmers in the vicinity of Peterborough to meet with leaders in the farmers' movement and become better acquainted with the farmers' platform. While several hundred delegates attended the annual meeting in Toronto, at which this platform was adopted, there were thousands of farmers who were unable to attend and who desire to know more about it. To meet this situation the provincial officers have arranged for the holding of nine district conventions at central points throughout the Province. It is expected that it will be one of the largest gatherings of its kind ever held in the city. It is possible that a business men's luncheon may be put on in one of the hotels at noon in order to give our city men a chance to meet Mr. Kennedy. If so, only a few tickets will be sold as accommodation will be limited.

HELP FOR THE ARMY

Purchase of War Savings Certificates a Direct Form of Service

There are no luxuries for the men in the firing trenches. There should be none at home. The men and women of Canada should be worthy of their fathers and husbands, brothers and sons, who are fighting for them. The sacrifices involved in abandoning luxuries and exercising thrift is nothing compared to the sacrifice of the men in France, but it is essential to their comfort, their strength and their success. The cost of the army is tremendous. That cost can only be borne if individuals throughout the Dominion invest in War Savings Certificates. They can be purchased at any bank or money order post office. They are issued in three amounts, for three year periods, and bear interest at the rate of over five per cent. Twenty-one dollars and fifty cents will buy a $25 certificate. Those for $50 and $100 can be purchased for $43 and $86. The money can be withdrawn at any time with proportionate returns on the amount invested according to the period of investment. Serve by saving and invest in War Savings Certificates for your country's sake and your own. 1w-28.

POINTS TO CONSIDER WHEN PURCHASING A RAILWAY TICKET.

A Canadian Pacific Railway ticket does not represent merely a means of transportation between given points. It, in addition, provides the traveller with every comfort and convenience developed by modern railway science. "Safety First," with up-to-date equipment, unexcelled dining service, palatial sleeping cars, in a word, everything that a railway can provide for the comfortable transportation of its passengers, including courtesy.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"You have an unshakable witness in Miss Martin," said Furneaux, stabbing a finger at Grant. "Now, I will hurry off. You and I, Mr. Grant meet at Philippi, otherwise known as the crowner's quest."

Any benevolent intent he may have had in leaving these young people together, was however, frustrated by Doris, whose composure seemed to have fled since her statement about the mirror. She resolutely accompanied the detective, and Grant had to follow. All three passed into the post office, Doris using the private door. Mr. Martin looked up from his desk when they appeared and requested his daughter to check a bundle of postal orders. The pretext was painfully obvious, but Grant was not so wishful now to clear up matters with Doris's father, as the girl herself might be trusted to pass on an accurate account of the affair from beginning to end.

He was about to reach the street quick on Furneaux's heels when the little man turned suddenly.

"By the way, don't you want a shilling's worth of stamps?" he said.

Grant smiled comprehension, and went back, where Doris herself served him. She did not try to avoid his glance, but rather met it with a baffling serenity oddly at variance with her momentary loss of self-possession in the garden.

When he entered the street the detective had vanished.

He walked down the hill at a rapid pace, disregarding the eyes peeping at him through open doorways, over narrow window curtains, and covertly staring when people passed in the roadway. The sensitive side of his temperament shrank from this thinly veiled hostility. He was by way of being popular in Steynholme, yet not a soul spoke to him. Before he reached the bridge, the other side of him, the man of action of cool resource in an emergency, rose in rebellion against the league of silly clodhoppers. Back he strode to the post office, and dashed off a telegram. It ran:

"Walter Hart, Savage Club, Adelphi, London. Come here and help to lay a ghost."

He signed it in full, name and address. Doris was gone, but her father received it, and read the text in a bewildered way.

"I find myself deserted by my Steynholme friends so I am trying to import one stanch one," said Grant almost vindictively.

Martin murmured the cost, and Grant stormed out again. This time, passing the Hare and Hounds, he looked at the door and windows. He caught a face scowling at him over a brown wire blind bearing the words: "Wines and Spirits," on it in letters of dull gold. It was a commonplace type of face, small featured, ginger-mustached, and crowned by a billy-cocked hat sat at a rakish angle. Its most marked characteristic was the positive hatred which glowed in the sharp, pale-blue eyes. Grant wondered who this highly censorious young man might be. At any rate he meant to ascertain whether or not the critic was susceptible to satire at his own expense. He walked up to the window, elevated his eyebrows at the frowning person within, pretended to read the words on the screen, looked again at the man inside, and shook his head gravely in the manner of one who had accurately determined cause and effect.

Fred Elkin was quick-witted enough to appreciate Grant's unspoken comment. He was also unmannerly enough to put out his tongue—then Grant laughed and turned on his heel.

Mr. Sickle, quietly observant of recent comings and goings, was standing at the door of the shop, and missed no item of this dumb show. He raised both hands in silent condemnation of Elkin's childishness, whereupon the horse dealer jerked a thumb toward Grant's retreating figure, and went through a rapid pantomime of the hanging process. His crony disapproved again, and went in. Now, both of these men were on the panel jury, so to all appearance Grant would be judged by at least one deadly enemy, whose animosity might or might not be fairly balanced by the chemist's impartial mind.

The tenant of The Hollies actually dreaded the loneliness of his dwelling now, though it was that very quality which had drawn him to Steynholme a year earlier. Work or reading was equally out of the question that day. He sought the industrious Bates, who was trenching celery in the kitchen garden.

"Have 'ee made owt about un, sir?" inquired that hardy individual, pausing to spit on on the handle of his spade.

"No," said Grant. "The thing is a greater mystery than ever."

"I'm thinkin' her mun ha' bin killed by a loony," announced Bates.

"Something of the kind, no doubt. But why are the little less dangerous loonies of Steynholme united in the belief that I am the guilty one?"

"Ax me another," growled Bates.

"Who is spreading this rumor?—Robinson?"

"'E dussen't, sir. 'E looks fierce, but 'el'll 'old 'is tongue. T'super will see to that."

"Someone is talking. That is quite certain."

"There's a chap in the 'Are an' 'Ounds—kem 'ere last night."

"Ingerman?"

"Ay, sir, that's the name. 'E's makin' a song of it, I hear."

"Anybody else?"

"Fred Elkin is gassin' about. Do 'ee know un? Breeds 'osses at Mount Farm, a mile that-a-way," and Bates pointed to the west.

Grant hasarded a guess, and described the face of condemnation seen at the inn. Bates nodded.

"That's 'un," he said. Then he drove the spade into the rich loam. "They do say," he added, apparently as an after thought, "as Fred Elkin is mighty sweet on Doris, but her'll 'ave nowt to do wi' un."

Grant whistled softly. This explanation threw light on a dark place.

"The plot thickens," he said. "Mr. Elkin becomes more interesting than he looks. Are there other disappointed swains in the offing?"

"What's that, sir?"

"Has Miss Martin any other suitors?"

"Lots of 'em 'ud be after her like wasps around a plum-tree if she'd give 'em 'alf a chance. But you put a stopper on 'em."

Bates was blunt of speech, though a philosopher.

"Elkin is my only serious rival, then?" laughed Grant, passing off as a joke a thrust which was shrewder than the gardener knew.

"'E 'as plenty of brass, but I reckon nowt on 'im," was the contemptuous answer.

"Well, he is not a likely person to kill a woman he had never before seen. Miss Martin will marry whom she chooses, no doubt. The present problem is to find out who murdered Miss Melhuish. Now, had I been the victim you would be thinking hard, Bates."

"I tell 'ee, sir, it wur a loony."

Nor was Bates to be moved from that opinion. He held to it through thick and thin for many days.

Grant wandered into the front garden. His eyes rose involuntarily to the distant post office, and he noticed at once that the dormer window was closed. Yet Doris shared his own love of fresh air, and that window had always been open till that very hour. Somehow, this simple thing seemed to shut him out of her life. He walked to the river, and gazed at the spot where the body was drawn ashore. In the absence of rain the water ran clear as gin, and the marks made by the feet of Adelaide Melhuish's murderer were still perceptible. If only those mis-shapen blotches could reveal their secret! If only some Heaven-sent ray of intuition would enable him to put the police on the track of the criminal! Theoretically, a novelist and essayist should be a first-rate detective, yet brought face to face with an actual felony, here was one who perforce remained blind and dumb.

Yet he was not blameworthy for failing to solve a mystery which was rapidly establishing a record for bewildering elements. Wherein he did err most lamentably was in his reading of a woman's heart.

No answering telegram came from his friend in London. The day wore slowly till it was time to attend the inquest. He found a crowd gathered in front of the Hare and Hounds. Superintendent Fowler was there, and quite a crowd of policemen, whose presence was explained when a buzz of excitement heralded Grant's arrival. He decided not to stand this sort of persecution a moment longer. Before the superintendent could interfere, he leaped on to a set of stone mounting steps, which stood opposite the door. Instantly seeing that he was about to speak, the angry murmuring of the mob was hushed. He looked into a hundred stolid faces, and stretched out his right hand.

"I cannot help feeling," he said in slow incisive accents, which carried far, "that a set of peculiar circumstances had led you Steynholme folks to suspect me of being responsible in some way for the death of the lady whose body was found in the river near my house. Now I want to tell you that I am not only an innocent but a much-maligned man. The law of the land will establish both facts in due season. But I want to warn some of you, too. I shall not trouble to issue writs for libel. If any blackguard among you dares to insult me openly, I shall smash his face."

He knew when to stop. Superintendent Fowler's nudge was not called for, as the orator simply met the scrutiny of all those eyes without another word.

Curiously enough the sense of justice is inherent in every haphazard gathering of the public. Grant's soldierly bearing, his calm defiance of hostile opinion, the outspoken threat which he so plainly meant, won instant favour. Someone shouted "Hear—hear!" and the crowd applauded. From that moment he had little to complain of in the attitude of the community as a whole. There were subtle and dangerous enemies to be fought and conquered, but Steynholme looked on, keen to learn of any new sensation, of course, but placidly content that the final verdict should be left in the hands of the authorities.

Was Anaemic
FOR OVER A YEAR

Anaemia, or blood turning to water, is caused by the heart becoming deranged, and if the heart becomes weakened it cannot pump the blood as it should. As a result the blood becomes impoverished, and it loses its nourishing qualities. The face becomes pale and thin, and the lips bloodless. There is a weakness, tiredness and loss of weight.
When those suffering from thin or watery blood start taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills they can see a change from the outset.
Every dose introduces into the blood those vital elements necessary to make it rich and red. The pale cheeks take on the rosy hue of health, the weight increases, and the whole being thrills with a new life.
Mrs. E. J. Grey, Fredericton, N. B., writes: "When I was a girl working at general house work I overtaxed my strength and became completely run down. For over a year I was very bad with anaemia. A friend told me to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills so I got a box and when it was done I decided to get six more. When I had taken them I gained not only in strength, but in flesh and colour, and best of all was good health."
Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. a box; three boxes for $1.25 at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Cincinnati authority tells how to dry up a corn so it lifts out

You corn-pestered men and women need suffer no longer. Wear the shoes that nearly killed you before, says this Cincinnati authority, because a few drops of freezone applied directly on a tender, aching corn stops soreness at once and soon the corn loosens so it can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.
A quarter of an ounce of freezone costs very little at any drug store, but is sufficient to take off every hard or soft corn or callus. This should be tried, as it is inexpensive and is said not to inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue or skin.

FRAGILE GERMAN PLANES

British Aviators Tell How Easily Enemy's Planes are Damaged

British pilots have remarked how easily German aeroplanes break to pieces in the air soon after being attacked. A case in point was that of a British pilot who flew at an enemy machine head-on, manoeuvring at the last moment just in time to avoid a collision. One of the wings of the British plane, however, scraped one of the German's wings, whereupon the latter began to fall. The British pilot dived after him and was startled to see the German's damaged wings fly completely off while the tail dragged as if its back were broken. Whether faultiness in so many German machines is due to the speed with which the Germans have to turn them out to meet the British offensive or to the lack of suitable material is a matter of no concern to the Allies.

DIED FOR SCIENCE

Doctor Wanted to Study Sensations of Airmen

An inquest was held in Norfolk, Va., on Captain James Fermaux St. John Annesley, R.A.M.C., and Second Lieutenant Charles Leslie Beamont, R.F.C., who were killed while flying in an aeroplane. Captain Elliott said Captain Annesley told him it was very difficult to judge the effect of flying on the nerves until one had had personal experience. He asked if there would be any objection to him going up as a passenger, and was told that there would be none, as he would be doing it in his official capacity. Captain Annesley was a doctor, 52 years of age, and had formerly practised in Ireland. It was stated by an air mechanic that the machine did a right bank which developed into a spinning nose dive. On going to the wreckage he found the doctor thrown clear, but Captain Beumont was pinned underneath the machine. A verdict of accidental death was returned.

KING ALBERT'S FAMILY

The great-grandfather of King Albert of Belgium in the direct male line was a German prince, whose eldest son, Duke Ernest of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, was father of Albert, Prince Consort of Great Britain. A daughter, Victoria, married the Duke of Kent, and was mother of Queen Victoria, who, therefore, was a first cousin of her husband, Prince Albert. Leopold, younger brother of Duke Ernest and uncle of Queen Victoria and of her husband, married, in 1816, Princess Charlotte, daughter of King George IV., heiress-presumptive to the British throne, and was created Duke of Kendal. She died the following year without issue. In 1831, Leopold was elected sovereign of the newly-formed Kingdom of Belgium, and in the following year he married Princess Louise d'Orleans, daughter of Louis Philippe, King of the French, who abdicated in 1848 and escaped to England, where he died in 1850. He was the eldest son of the Duke of Orleans ("Philip Egalite") who was guillotined in 1793. Albert, King of the Belgians, is eldest son of Philip, Count of Flanders, who was a younger son of King Leopold I., the eldest son being Leopold II., of infamious memory.

NICKEL MODERNIZES WAR

Dreadnoughts and Giant Guns Impossible without It

One curious property of nickel is that when finely divided and applied in a certain way it has the effect of solidifying vegetable oils, such as cotton-seed oil, and hence we are indebted to this metal for an increasing percentage of our lard and margarine butter. Nickel when added to aluminum so hardens, toughens, and increases its strength that the nickel-aluminum alloy is indispensable in many machines. Nickel has, in fact, made feasible, not only the automobile, but the machine that enables a man to mount into the sky or safely plunge into the ocean. Not only is the airship as well as the submarine the offspring of nickel and its alloys, but without it the German guns would have battered vainly against the fortresses of Liege and Namur, and there would have been a different tale to tell in Gallipoli and on the Russian front.
Without nickel the modern dreadnought would have been impossible. To get the strength now possessed by the dreadnought without nickel, would involve such an increase of material that the effectiveness of the ship would be decreased in three ways: She would have less coaling capacity, less net tonnage, or carrying capacity, and less speed; while all the electrical and munition-handling apparatus would be heavier and more cumbersome. Moreover, the guns would be increased in weight and weakened in striking power. In short, if nickel were withheld, the whole machinery and equipment of modern armament on sea and land would go back with one slide almost to the days of Nelson and Napoleon.

HIGH PRICE DURING WAR

Pasturage and Stock Kept Very High in Britain

An English correspondent in 1917 reported really good three-year-old steers selling in England at $200 and best working horses at around $500. Some grass land in England was bringing a rental of $75 per acre at that time, while at a sale of Yorkshire breeding hogs in England, an average of $105 was made on 100 head. At a sale of pedigreed Shorthorn cattle under the auspices of the Penrith Association of Shorthorn Breeders, 33 females averaged $600, and 107 bulls $190.

Poultry as War Savers

A writer estimated that poultry in the United Kingdom produced between eight and nine million pounds' worth of eggs and flesh from feed which the birds rustled for themselves in fields, and that but for the poultry all this food would have been wholly lost. This was in one year, 1916.

Major David Davies, M.P., gave £25,000 to the Welsh war relief fund for Welsh war heroes.

Little Boy Had Eczema

On Face and Hands—Local Doctors Treated Him in Vain—How Cure Was Finally Effected.

Trenton, Ont., May 31.—This letter will interest all mothers of young children, because it tells of the best means obtainable of overcoming the annoying and torturing skin troubles which come to so many children.
Mrs. Waldron had several doctors treating her boy for eczema, but all in vain. Finally she heard about Dr. Chase's Ointment and her letter tells of the wonderful results obtained by the use of this soothing, healing ointment.
Mrs. Samuel Waldron, George street, Trenton, Ont., writes: "About four years ago, my little boy had a rash on his face and hands which the doctor called Eczema. He gave us a wash for it, and some ointment, which we used, but without benefit. I think we tried all the doctors here. Finally we tried Dr. Chase's Ointment and gave it a good trial. We could see that it was gradually healing. At first it appeared to burn the skin, then this skin would peel up, finally he got rid of it entirely. During the winters of the next two years we noticed a symptom of the disease under the skin. Each time we used more Dr. Chase's Ointment curing it both times. For the last two years he has not had any return symptoms at all, so we think that he is now entirely cured."
Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60c a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Part Played by Miss Dudley

It Did Not Result Exactly as Was Expected

By ETHEL HOLMES

A motorcar drove up to the porte-cochere of a country house overlooking beautiful hills and the valleys between them. A girl alighted, and another girl came out of the house and took the new arrival in her arms; then, each encircling the other's waist, they passed into the house.

Later they sat on the porch together. The newcomer said:

"Well, Clara, I'm here. What can I do for you?"

"I want you to act a part."

"Are you to give up your place for a movie play? Surely the pictures will be beautiful."

"No movie play; the real thing."

"Go on. You interest me."

"You know that I am very rich."

"I certainly do, having experienced many a taste of your fortune."

"We rich girls when it comes to marriage are at a great disadvantage."

"I thought it was we dowerless girls who suffer in that respect."

"You know very well that I mean we wish to be loved for ourselves and we are usually loved for our possessions."

"That's better than not being loved at all."

"Stop your nonsense till I have finished. What I have to say is serious. Of course marriage in the case of a girl who has a fortune necessarily becomes something of a commercial matter. She is expected to get an equivalent from the man she marries."

"Inclined, you mean."

"I suppose so. A match has been arranged by mutual friends whom I met in England between me and Lord Edmonston. He is heir to the title, but there is no estate; at least it is largely encumbered."

"The commercial part of it all is that you are to go into a matrimonial partnership, he to furnish the title, you the wherewithal to keep it up."

"Bluntly but truthfully stated. Nevertheless we women prefer to be loved by the man we marry. Edmonston and I have never met. He is coming tomorrow to make my acquaintance and will remain here so long as he likes. Now, I wish you to be I while I am you. I shall try to win his heart, he supposing his interest is in you. Do you see?"

Ruth Dudley looked serious.

"Yes; I see plainly, but suppose you fail to induce him to give up the rich girl for the poor girl? Where will I be? Your mother from the time I was a baby saved me from poverty and all that means to a child in its future station in life. This she did by using that fortune you now possess. You ask me to do that which in case your plan fails will lay me open to a charge of base ingratitude."

They were sitting side by side on a wicker bench. Clara Kimball put an arm around her friend's waist, drew her to her, kissed her and said:

"Ruth, dear, if my plan fails I shall rejoice to greet you as Lady Edmonston."

"Thank you, Clara. I have no ambition to marry a man with something to live up to and nothing to do it on."

But Miss Dudley was persuaded to do that against which her inclinations as well as her judgment rebelled. It was the obligation that compelled her. She accepted the situation, resolving that if she could antagonize Lord Edmonston she would certainly do so.

Mrs. Kimball, Clara's mother, was the only person in the house besides these two, excepting the servants, and she was in her daughter's secret. She was to keep out of the way except so far as she would be needed as chaperon. Lord Edmonston arrived, and Ruth received him as his prospective fiancee. There are good men in the British aristocracy and there are men who do not deserve to be classed as men. Edmonston belonged to the former class.

Edmonston did what would naturally have been expected of him under the circumstances—he showed a preference for the girl he supposed to be the heiress. Ruth treated him, to say the least, without cordiality. Clara did her best to please him. Edmonston appeared to accept the situation and showed himself disposed toward the company of Clara. It must have been evident to him that he had not made a good impression on the supposed heiress, but that her friend was quite pleased with him. What he really thought or felt neither of the girls knew. When the first day of his visit ended the girls before going to bed held a conference and the real Ruth congratulated the real Clara on the way the plan was working.

"It bids fair," said Ruth, "to be a very pretty romance with a delightful denouement."

"You shall come and live with me at Edmonston castle," said Clara.

"Ruth," said Clara one morning, "this is downright selfishness on my part. If I am to have a coronet and a fortune you should have at least a fortune. I have written Duncan Swift to come up for the week end. Set your cap for him. He's very wealthy and a fine fellow. He indicated to me once that it would be a good plan to unite our fortunes, but neither loved the other, and I declined. Besides, it has always been my ambition to marry a nobleman."

"At any rate," replied Ruth, "another man in the house will be conducive to carrying out your plans."

"How?"

"Why, I shall show Lord Edmonston that I am for your friend, Mr. Swift. Edmonston will accept the inevitable and be better satisfied to take you without the fortune since he can't get it through me. But, Clara, Mr. Swift, knowing you to be Clara Kimball, will give the plan away."

"Not at all. I shall let him into the secret."

Affairs of the heart are prone to take their own course. Mr. Swift came and, as Miss Kimball had arranged, devoted himself assiduously to Miss Dudley. But the pleasant relations that should have existed in this quartet were marred by an antagonism on the part of the two men, which showed itself at once and developed with amazing rapidity. This the girls could not understand. Edmonston was devoted to Clara, and Swift's attentions to Ruth were very noticeable. Why then should the men be antagonistic to each other?

It was not long after Swift's arrival that Edmonston, seeing Ruth alone in the garden, went out and joined her.

"Miss Kimball," he said, "I think this visit, which has not resulted in what it was intended for, should come to an end."

Ruth looked up at him surprised.

"When I came here," he continued, "as soon as I saw you I said to myself there is the woman I would wish for my wife irrespective of her fortune. From the first you have shown that you have no such feelings toward me. There is no necessity for me to remain longer. I leave at once. I have the honor to bid you goodby."

"But," stammered Ruth, "you have been devoting yourself to my friend."

"A ruse de guerre. I hoped to pique you."

Ruth stood a picture of conflicting emotions. What she had feared but what in her heart she had wished had happened.

"Lord Edmonston," she said, "don't go today. There is something that needs to be explained to you."

"I should be pleased to listen to the explanation."

"Not now, tomorrow."

Edmonston looked at her inquiringly, then consented to remain till the next day.

Ruth went at once into the house to find Clara, intending to break to her the news of this lamentable failure of her plan. As she passed the library she saw Swift and Clara there in earnest conversation. She passed on to her own room to wait till she could see Clara alone. After what seemed to Ruth from voices in the library below an earnest conversation there was a lowering of voices and presently silence. In due time Clara's footstep was heard on the stairs, and she entered Ruth's room. Ruth was still a volcano of emotion, and Clara seemed not less perturbed.

"Oh, Clara!"

"Oh, Ruth!"

"What I feared when you announced this plan to me has happened."

"And what I have feared since has happened."

"What's that?"

"When Duncan Swift proposed to me I supposed it was simply to unite our fortunes."

"Well?"

"He says it wasn't that at all. He loves me. As soon as he came here and found Edmonston here he was wild."

"What did he do?"

"Why, he says that—oh, Ruth, I can't say it—do you love him?"

"Go on."

"He says he devoted himself to you to pique me."

Ruth stared at her friend, but said nothing.

"Are you crushed at what I tell you?"

"Do you love Swift?"

"Yes; I have accepted him. But heavens! How am I to break the matter to Edmonston?"

Ruth went to her friend and embraced her.

"Never mind Edmonston," she said. "If he wants a fortune he'll have to find it in another. These two men have been playing the same game."

"What do you mean?" asked Clara.

"Edmonston, in order to pique the heiress, has been devoting himself to the heiress' friend."

"He loves you?"

"Probably he loves the fortune he supposes I possess."

"That remains to be seen."

"Which of us shall confess?" asked Ruth.

"I will confess for both," said Clara.

Edmonston was still pacing in the garden when Clara found him there.

"Lord Edmonston," she said, "I am not Miss Dudley, as you have supposed. I am Miss Kimball."

Edmonston looked astonished.

"Before uniting any fortune with your title I desired to win your love. I have not won your love nor have you won mine. I have this morning accepted a lover from whom I have been separated by a misunderstanding. As for my friend Ruth Dudley, you may settle your affairs with her direct."

"Where is she now?"

"In her room. If you desire to speak with her go into the library. I will send her to you."

That same evening the two girls were in Clara's room in dishabille comparing notes as to the events of the day. Both were happy.

"What did Lord Edmonston say to you, Ruth?" asked Clara.

"What did Mr. Swift say to you?"

"Oh, it would sound flat at being repeated."

"My case exactly. The only real love scenes, Clara, are at the end of a movie play. When they kiss you know just how they feel."

Miss Dudley is now Lady Edmonston. Her husband got a fortune through an uncle. He didn't have to marry it.

AVIATION ILLNESS.

Peculiar Distress That Comes to Many Aerial Navigators.

FLIERS SHOULD BE ROBUST

They Should Also Be Young, Resolute and Cool Headed, With Sight and Hearing and Nervous and Vascular Systems Perfectly Sound.

Those who are up into the air in flying machines as well as those who go down to the sea in ships are troubled by peculiar and unpleasant physiological disturbances which may at times be of grave moment. This is especially true of aeroplane pilots or passengers and to less degree of those who ascend in balloons or dirigibles. The tremendous importance of aviation in war lends this subject peculiar interest, and Larousse Mensuel (Paris) devotes a special article to the topic. The author, Dr. Laumonier, states that the symptoms vary according to the period of ascent, of descent and of landing.

In ascending an acceleration of the respiration and pulse are frequently noted at from 1,200 to 1,500 meters altitude, accompanied by a slight headache located in forehead and temples and by indefinable discomfort without vomiting or nausea. At 1,800 meters there is a diminution in the keenness of hearing; at times there are hallucinations and finally an "asthenic" condition which prevents the muscles from obeying the will with adequate rapidity.

On descending the palpitations of the heart become violent and are accompanied by a sensation of anguish, the headache is intense, the aviator has an increasing sensation of heat of the skin, especially of the face, and a desire to sleep, which is sometimes so strong that the eyes involuntarily close as he approaches the earth, in spite of imminent peril.

Strange to say, on landing these troubles are augmented. Besides the headache and the somnolence, hyperemia of the conjunctive (conjunctivea) is observed, with cyanosis of the extremities, acceleration of the pulse and constant increase of arterial pressure. The aviator often falls asleep as soon as he lands, and this sleep is troubled and nonrefreshing, while the headache may persist for many hours or even several days.

The ascent symptoms recall those of "mountain sickness," but are produced at a less altitude, because of the nervous tension, the cold and above all the relative rapidity of ascension. But what distinguishes aviators' sickness from mountain sickness is that the symptoms persist during descent and are aggravated after landing. There are besides vasomotor reactions with hypertension which are peculiar to this malady and give it, according to Cruchet and Moulinier, a sort of nosographic autonomy. However, these troubles are not felt with the same intensity by all aviators. Some find they diminish with experience, as in the case of seasickness. It appears to be true that their intensity depends principally on the rapidity of the descent.

The causes to which are ascribed these symptoms include cold and physical, nervous and moral fatigue. While cold may provoke the imperious need of sleep, it cannot be the sole cause, since the somnolence increases on descending into warmer air and after landing. Analogous objections are made to fatigue as a cause.

The most important of the determining causes, according to the authorities quoted above, is speed, not horizontal, but vertical speed, which causes rapid decompression and recompression in ascending and descending. At Pau Legagneux ascended to 8,200 meters in twenty-eight minutes, whereas it would have taken an Alpinist eleven hours to ascend the same distance on foot. At Varenne-sur-Allier Vedrines descended in three minutes from a height of 3,000 meters. The difference of gaseous tension is too great for the organism to regain its equilibrium in so short a time.

Since these symptoms are not morbid they disappear naturally in a few hours or at most a few days, their cessation being favored by rest, sleep and moderate warmth. Nevertheless they are of grave importance because of the dangers to which they expose aviators.

Hence it is highly advisable that fliers should be young, robust, resolute and cool headed men, with sight, hearing, nervous and vascular systems perfectly sound. And there should be rigorous elimination of candidates who have a tendency to heart trouble, epilepsy, tuberculosis, hardening of arteries, nervous troubles, etc. They should have methodical and progressive training, a diet nourishing, but not bulky, and as little fermentable as possible. They must abstain from alcohol and not abuse tea or coffee.

The clothing must be very warm, but not heavy enough to restrict movement. The wearing of goggles, putting cotton in the nostrils and greasing face and hands will be sufficient protection against cold. Finally they are advised to mount as slowly as possible and to descend even more slowly.

Large Power Easily Controlled.

In some cases a 1,000 ton or 1,500 ton press may be controlled by one finger upon the clutch lever, so that the ram will rise one-eighth of an inch or so at a time. More often, however, a press is set so that the ram will always stop at the top of its stroke, and the control of this condition is usually made by a foot treadle, although sometimes with a handle also or with a handle alone. Generally such presses are arranged for continuous running. This is often practicable with long, slow strokes.—Oberlin Smith in Engineering Magazine

"KITCHENER'S" GOOD AND IN GOOD TIME

Veterans of Mons Awaited Their Coming Eagerly, but Doubtfully—Discipline the Test of Quality

Kitchener's army came just in time, wrote a veteran campaigner of the "Old Contemptibles." The regular army and the special reserve had been extinguished, the territorial divisions were hanging on to their sectors of the line by the skin of their teeth; the frontage of each division was much too large; Amsterdam was daily sending news of an impending German offensive; youngsters with a few weeks' training were rushed out to us to fill up the gaps consequent on Hill 60 and St. Julien and were very far from satisfactory, and at the time of our relief we had held the line at St. Eloi without any kind of rest for fifty-six days.

Better Than Expected

The number of wooden crosses in our little graveyard behind the Rosendal Chateau had increased with disconcerting regularity, although nothing in the way of vigorous tactics had been employed by either side. Few can marvel at our joy on hearing the news, "I have seen Kitchener's Army in the flesh."

A few days later I had the opportunity of visiting Ballieul. I saw, and was mightily impressed. Home papers, containing the opinions of great generals, had prepared us for something rather better than the ordinary. While hoping for the best we were inclined to be skeptical, but I confess that our hopes were more than realized. It was a Highland Division I saw first—stout, brawny lads, the Highlanders of history minus their beards. Clean as new pins, they stepped the streets of Northern France with the air of conquerors, and sainted their officers in the manner of guardsmen on Constitution Hill.

Saluting and Discipline

From time to time one reads of a desire to abolish or curtail this military obeisance. It is considered Prussian, denounced as Zabernism, degrading to the soldier, undesired by the officers themselves, irksome, undemocratic, and all the rest. I cannot agree. To me, there is a distinct connection between the right hand salute and the successful attack on a German trench. It is the foundation of discipline, and some more discipline in our land would help us along mightily. Most of the battalions of Kitchener's Army had it, and they were proving its worth at Loos a very few weeks later.

KORMANN STOOD TEST

When Lieut.-Col. Rorke was ordered to proceed overseas with whatever nucleus of the 248th (Grey Country, Ontario) Battalion it had been possible to raise, he found he had nine lieutenants and only needed three. He called the nine lieutenants in, laid the facts before them, and asked if any of them would go as privates. Lieut. Claude Kormann stepped forward. He said he had recruited the boys from Hanover to go to the war, and he proposed to go with them, if not as a lieutenant, then as a private. "Lieut. Kormann," said Col. Rorke, "you go overseas as one of my officers."

RUSS SOLDIER'S FRIEND

Madame Brussiloff's Noble Work Among Millions of Soldiers

"The Little Mother of the Russian Soldiers" was the term affectionately applied to Madame Brussiloff, wife of the heroic general whose brilliant succession of victories over the Austrians and Germans gained him world-wide renown. It is a name which fits her well, for from the start of the war she occupied herself unceasingly with works for the good of the Russian soldier, and there is not a soldier in the Russian army who would hesitate to write to her about his troubles. Every day she dealt with hundreds of letters not only from the soldiers, but from their wives and their children, too. Clever, graceful, and accomplished, the wife of the famous general belongs to a family not only distinguished in rank and in military tradition, but in the realms of intellectual achievements as well.

RICHEST FRENCHWOMAN

Germans Stole $725,000 and Left Her Rich

Mme. Lebandy, who lost securities to the value of $725,000 when the Prins Hendrik was captured by the Germans, could not be very seriously inconvenienced by her loss. In pre-war days her fortune was estimated at $40,000,000, so she was the richest woman in France, and, next to Frau Krupp von Bohlen, the richest in Europe. Mme. Lebaudy lived under an assumed name in order to avoid publicity. Her residence all the year round was a small flat in Versailles, where the domestic staff consisted of one servant, who was assisted in the work by her mistress. Mme. Lebaudy distributed in charity nearly the whole of her income, most of her donations being made anonymously.

Many Socks for Soldiers

Ladies' Patriotic Society Meets at Keene

KEENE, June 26.—The Ladies' Patriotic Society held a sewing bee at the town hall last Wednesday afternoon. Two quilts were quilted and sold for three dollars each. Mrs. Cunningham, regent of one of the Toronto Chapters of the Daughters of the Empire, was present, and gave the ladies a very interesting talk on Red Cross work. One hundred and ten pairs of socks were shipped by the society to headquarters at Toronto, to be shipped on to France. The president (Mrs. Harrison) requests that all finished or unfinished sewing out, be sent in as soon as possible to the receiver, Mrs. Marshall Weir. After the meeting was held tea was served, and an hour spent socially by the ladies present.

Mrs. Andrew Rennie and son, Roland, were in Peterboro on Saturday.

Misses Josephine Kennedy and Pearl McCann, motored to Peterboro on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. George Simpson of Smith, Mr. Herbert Gilgour and sister, Miss Nina, of Peterboro, were calling on friends in Keene and vicinity last Wednesday.

Miss Anna Wilson, who has been spending the past two months at the home of Mrs. William Nelson, returned to Toronto, last Friday.

Mrs. Wm. Hamilton and Mrs. P. Roche, were shopping at Peterboro last Wednesday.

Mrs. George McCartney and Miss Kathleen are visiting Miss McCartney's mother, Mrs. Peter McNeil.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Sutton and son, motored from Cavan on Sunday, and spent the day with Rev. and Mrs. A. K. Edmison.

Miss Kate Nixon has returned to Toronto after a pleasant visit with her sister, Mrs. Rev. Harrison.

Mrs. William Nelson returned on Monday from Peterboro, where she spent the week-end with her daughter, Mrs. John Plunkett.

The Keene mills will only be running through July and August on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Bonised Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start today and take two or three tablets of Bonised Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent. stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. C. Weber dispenses it for Peterborough.

The wheat crop of practically the entire world has suffered serious reduction during the past year, and the prospects for the coming year promise little or no increase in the production of this essential cereal.—United States Secretary of Agriculture.

NORTH MONAGHAN COUNCIL MEETS

Number of Matters Are Dealt With at Monday's Meeting

The North Monaghan Council held their meeting in the Court House, Peterborough, on Monday evening, June 23rd, 1917. All the members were present, with Reeve Rye occuping the chair.

The minutes of the last two meetings were read and confirmed.

A communication from G. N. Gordon was read re John Armstrong, asking for a ditch opposite lot 6, concession 9, that it be cleaned out; also asking that a ditch opposite lot 3, concession 9, be cleaned out.

Moved by Mr. Henry, seconded by M. Dobbin, that the brush cut out of the way of the grader and thrown into the ditch opposite lot 6, concession 9, be removed from said ditch by the road commissioner.

Moved by Mr. Williams, seconded by Mr. Henry, that the road commissioner for Road Division No. 6 locate places in his division for piling gravel or crushed stone for repair work, and to deliver to the said places a sufficient quantity.

The following bills were presented for payment:

City of Peterborough, re Cross drain on Sherbrooke and Monaghan road, $13.12.

J. W. Fitzgerald, surveying the east end of Braidwood avenue and taking evidence, $24.70.

Moved by Mr. Henry, seconded by Mr. Bell, that those bills be passed and paid.

Moved by Mr. Bell, seconded by Mr. Bell, that the Clerk be paid a Houghton's application for permission to build a boat house on the Government reserve on the river be granted. Also that each boat house owner pay a nominal rental of 25c. each per annum.

Moved by Mr. Henry, seconded by Mr. Bell, that the Clerk be paid a salary of $320 per annum.

The following session of allowances and salaries were then directed to be made:

Moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Williams, that Foster Moncrief be paid $5.66 for man and team, putting in culvert on gravel road.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Dobbin, seconded by Mr. Bell, that the next meeting be held at the Court House, Peterborough, on Monday, July 9th, 1917, at 2 p.m.

The meeting then adjourned.

This paint will save you money now and next time—

Saves you money now because a gallon of Lowe Brothers HIGH STANDARD Paint covers a great deal more surface than a gallon of ordinary paint.

You will need fewer gallons of HIGH STANDARD

It spreads easier, enabling your painter to do a better job in less time.

It is a long-wearing paint, too. You don't need to paint so often.

Saves you money next time because HIGH STANDARD fails only by gradual wear after years of service, and leaves a good surface for repainting.

Canadians Half Mile From Lens

Currie's Men Capture Fleu Dit Leauvette

CANADIAN TROOPS SMASH STILL CLOSER TO LENS

Occupy the Village of Fleu Dit Leauvette, Half-a-Mile from German Stronghold --- Nearest the Allies Have Come to City Which Is Surrounded on Three Sides --- Violent Artillery Duel on French Front

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 28.—Canadian troops to-day occupied the town of Fleu Dit Leauvette, one-half mile southwest of Lens.

Their patrols, shoved ahead of the village, penetrated even further towards the coal metropolis of France.

ARTILLERY ACTIVE AT HURTEBISE.

PARIS, June 28.—A violent engagement to-day succeeded the infantry fighting in the Hurtebise and Cornillet sectors of the French front, according to the official statement. A German attack directed against the Wattmiller salient failed. A number of the enemy were taken prisoners.

GERMANS FEAR RUSSIANS WILL RESUME.

ROME, June 28.—The Central Powers are beginning to fear that Russia will soon be an active participant in the Allied plans of joint offensive operations. Word received from the front to-day asserted there were evidences there that a considerable number of Austrian divisions had been hurriedly withdrawn from the Italian front and transferred back north. Many of these were troops which were shifted from the northern fighting line at the height of General Cadorna's offensive to stiffen the weakening enemy front. At that time the Central Powers were confident of success of their separate peace plot against Russia, and had practically stopped all fighting on the Russian front by a deliberately schemed fraternization with the soldiers opposing them.

Canadians Advance All Along Line

Central Ontario, Manitoba and Nova Scotia Battalions Were Largely Engaged, Says Stewart Lyon in Describing Success That Brings Lens Within Grasp of the Allies

This is the nearest the British have yet come to the City of Lens proper. Mention of patrols pushing still further on, indicates a general retreat by the Germans and the abandonment of their positions under the tremendously strong constricting pressure which the British have been applying to this city.

Fleu Dit Leauvette is located half a mile beyond Lievin, where some time ago the Germans made a desperate stand against the British advance. Avion, where the Canadians last week made some brilliant advances, is about three-quarters of a mile due south of Lens, and about the same distance southeast of Fleu Dit Leauvette.

Lens is practically encircled on three sides now.

Central Ontario, Manitoba and Nova Scotian battalions were largely engaged in the great British victory which brought the much fought-for mining town of Lens within the grasp of the Allies yesterday and to-day, according to a cable from Stewart Lyon, special correspondent for the Canadian Press in Flanders.

The Canadians advanced all along the line, and bombed remaining Germans out of their dugouts as well as taking some parts of the position at the point of the bayonet.

The engagement included thrilling air fights in which airmen attached to Canadians worsted their German opponents at terrific heights.

Many German prisoners and equipment were taken and advance is continuing at all points, with Lens practically surrounded.

ATHENS, via London, June 28.—"After a few days I expect to have much to say to by beloved Athenians," was Premier Venizelos' salutation to a great crowd that demanded a speech immediately after he and his cabinet had taken the oath of office.

"It has been a long separation."

Venizelos was called to the balcony of his hotel repeatedly by cheering crowds. He was greatly touched by the reception. He and his ministers began their duties at once.

The Campaign for Funds for the Y. M. C. A.

This is a great civic enterprise for the men and boys of Peterborough. Every citizen who is alive to the best interests of the City can have a part. In fact, the success of this movement depends upon getting the help of every person who can in any way assist. If any person has been overlooked in the solicitation so far, it is not an intentional neglect.

The Y.M.C.A. needs and desires your assistance. As it is impossible to call upon every one, kindly fill out and mail to the General Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. the following pledge and so have a part in this most worthy undertaking. YOUR GIFT IS NEEDED.

CLOTHING CAUGHT IN MACHINERY AT C.G.E. PLANT

Mr. William Collins Had a Narrow Escape from Serious Injury While at Work Yesterday Afternoon.

NO BONES BROKEN

A few minutes before the six o'clock whistle blew last night, Mr. Will Collins, Perry street, employed at the C.G.E. works, met with an accident that fortunately missed serious consequences.

He was engaged in adjusting the machine at which he was working, and was stooping over it when some part of his clothing was caught from above. In a moment the revolving machinery had twisted it until some of the apparel ripped. At the same time Mr. Collins had shouted to those nearby to shut off the power. To release him from the machine most of the outer clothing was cut away.

Mr. Collins sustained severe bruises about the body and legs, but luckily no bones were broken. It was reported an exceedingly narrow escape, and Mr. Collins will be confined to his home for a few days.

Speculation On the Vote

Ottawa Correspondent Says Bill Will Go Through With a Majority of Sixty

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 28. —It is reckoned to-day that at the most 22 Liberal members will break with Laurier on the referendum issue.

From Ontario a number are yet to speak, but none are regarded as certain to break with their party. Duncan Ross and W. A. Charlton are mentioned as possibilities, but have made no announcement. A. B. McCoig and R. E. Truax will be with Laurier.

The Conservatives are not likely to lose any but their French supporters, and even of these they will retain some. This will barely counter balance the Liberal losses, so that the Laurier amendment for a referendum is certain to be defeated by the normal Conservative majority, which is in the neighbourhood of 30 or more.

The bill itself will go through with a record majority of perhaps sixty votes.

The sub-amendment to give it a six months hoist will poll the votes of only a handful of Conservatives from Quebec.

Milk Vendor Drove in Front of Street Car

The fact that his milk delivery waggon is enclosed and prevented him from hearing an approaching street car, was apparently the cause of an accident on Water street, this morning, in which W. Brown, a milkman living north of the city had a close call. He turned across Water street toward Inverlea street, passing directly in front of car No. 30. The motorman had no time to prevent a collision, but the impetus of the car was partially checked. The milk-waggon was overturned, some bottles broken and a considerable quantity of milk spilt. Somehow, Mr. Brown managed to hold fast to the lines and crawled out of the waggon without any serious damage to his delivery equipment.

IN A HURRY.

When you break your glasses, either the mount or lenses, and want them in a hurry, bring them to Dr. Elsey, he can duplicate your broken lenses exact while you wait, without prescription, and repair nosepiece or frame. 410 George street.

MILITARY FEATURES

Great War Veterans, the Veterans of '66 and Other Organizations Will Take Part in the July 2nd Morning Celebration

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The morning part of the Dominion Day celebration on Monday next will be largely marked by military features. The members of the Great War Veterans' Association, the veterans of 1866, and the members of the 57th overseas company, will all take part in a parade headed by the 57th Band. The members of the Trades and Labour Council, Greater Peterborough Association and other city bodies and organizations are asked to participate in this procession, which will assemble at Central Park at 9.30 a.m. After parading down town, the procession will return to the Park, where patriotic addresses will be given.

MONTREAL, June 27.—Lieut. William Wallace, M.C., who left his desk in The Toronto Star editorial department to fight the Huns, will arrive in Toronto shortly. He was gassed at Vimy Ridge on March 1, after nine months in the trenches, was invalided to England, and now to Canada. It was during the engagement in which he was subsequently gassed that he won his Military Cross, details of which have already been published in The Star.

Lieut. Wallace would not speak of his part in the war, but had something to say about conscription. Here are his views: "Men are needed now just as much, if not more, than they were when the Germans first started to overrun Europe. Every man in the trenches knows this, and it will prove the greatest sorrow of their lives if Canada's efforts in the war are to go no further.

"Some Canadian battalions have already been wiped out because of the lack of reinforcements, and there is grave danger of the same happening to others because the Germans are not sitting at home waiting for Canada to make up its mind whether to send more troops or not."

WINNIPEG, June 27.—At a special meeting called to discuss the Military Service bill the Bricklayers' and Masons' Union, the strongest labour body in Western Canada, last night rejected by a large majority an anti-conscription resolution submitted to the meeting by one of its members.

QUEBEC, June 27.—Former Lieut. Charles Rheaume, of the 167th Battalion, C.E.F. was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary by Judge Langelier in the Court of Sessions yesterday on a charge of having raised the sum of $14,503.95 by passing 98 forged cheques. Rheaume, when he fled from Quebec, went to New York, and afterwards to France, where he was captured.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Following excerpt from a letter written home by Sergt. A. Baber of the 38th Bn., will be read with interest by Lindsay people:

He says: "Several of us have been recommended for the military medal. Harry Lee, a fireman on the Grand Trunk, and myself, are two of them. At least we were so informed by the Major the other day, and the decorations are expected soon."

Both Sergt. Baber and Pte. Lee were employed with the Grand Trunk in Lindsay, the former going over with the 38th Bn. to Bermuda and later to France. They have been in several stiff engagements, including the one in which Pte. "Beno" Johnston was wounded.

Canadian Headquarters in France, June 27.— Sports held by the army with which the Canadian Corps is connected resulted in the re-discovery of Tom Longboat, the famous Canadian Indian runner. In a three-mile cross-country race Longboat romped home well in advance of some of the most famous British and Canadian runners without even extending himself. He had a great reception from his regimental comrades.

The tug-of-war competitions were won by a British Columbia battalion and the Canadian heavy artillery, with the English infantry and artillery teams in second place. The British won the artillery drive easily, a Canadian battery taking second.

Great War Veterans To Be Assisted by Ladies of City

Ladies' Auxiliary Will Be Formed and a Campaign for Suitable Headquarters for Peterborough's Returned Soldiers Is Planned

LAST NIGHT'S MEETING

The Peterborough branch of the Great War Veterans' Association are to receive most valuable assistance in carrying out their plans and aims in this city. At last night's meeting of the Veterans in their club rooms in the Barrie Building, a delegation composed of Mrs. W. R. Morris, Mrs. Knox and Mrs. Law representing the ladies of Peterborough, waited on the Veterans and expressed their desire to assist the G.W.V.A. by forming a Ladies' Auxiliary representative of the different women's societies in the city. This work will be taken up early in the autumn and one of its first objects will be the securing of suitable headquarters for the Association. The present rooms in the Barrie Building are cosy and bright, but the membership of the Veterans' Association is increasing so rapidly that the organization is outgrowing its quarters and when the cool weather comes around again the need of bigger rooms will be felt. Every steamer bringing invalided soldiers to Canada brings more members for the Peterborough branch, for this city is represented in every squad of wounded men that come over.

The kind offer of the ladies was enthusiastically received by the War Veterans. Their assistance will be invaluable, as has been shown in Toronto, where patriotic women, headed by Miss Church, were successful in securing for the Toronto branch of the G.W.V.A. their beautiful home at the corner of Carlton and Church streets.

At last night's meeting arrangements were made for the War Veterans' moonlight on Friday night, July 6, which promises to be the event of the season. It was announced that the Salvation Army band had offered its services and they will be gratefully accepted. Music for dancing will be provided on the lower deck of the steamer by an orchestra. There will be plenty of entertainment and refreshments and judging by the manner in which the tickets are selling, there will be a record crowd.

Members of the Great War Veterans are reminded that the semi-annual meeting of the club and the election of officers will be held at headquarters, Barrie Building, on Tuesday night, July 3rd. It is essential that every member of the Association should be on hand at this important meeting, when the officers for the next six months will be chosen. With the formation of a ladies' auxiliary, and the campaign to secure suitable headquarters the next half year will be a most momentous period in the history of the club, and the members are urged to consider this, attend next Tuesday's meeting and select their officers with judgment and care, realising the important matters that are to be handled.

WILL SPEAK ON TECHNICAL EDUCATION

The public is again reminded of the address to be given in the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall to-morrow, Friday evening on the value of technical education by Principal Howell, of the Hamilton Technical School. The meeting is under the auspices of the Board of Trade, and it is hoped that there will be a very large attendance as the subject is of the greatest importance.

Contributions for Y. M. C. A. Have Passed $7000 Mark

People Are Responding Generously — To-day's Contribution Will Determine the Results — Workers Are Delighted With Their Reception—Large Contributors Yet To Be Heard From

Tuesday Night's Total	$ 5,237
Last Night's Total	7,941
Total Objective	$10,000

A considerable number of possible large contributors yet to be seen, and many smaller ones.

The foregoing statement tells in brief the net result up to last night of the Y.M.C.A. special campaign for funds which was launched on Tuesday and which is expected to close to-night. The workers are delighted with the reception they are receiving. Several possible large contributors are out of the city and the executive committee have kept the telephone and telegraph wires busy with the result that several important decisions are likely to be received to-day or this evening. In the meantime the small contributors are responding generously and willingly, and in a manner that is delighting the faithful workers who are sacrificing their own business interests in order that the good work may be carried on to a successful conclusion.

Yesterday's subscriptions, composed very largely of small amounts, reached the very satisfactory total of $1,804.69. The largest contribution was $500 from those always good and dependable friends of the Association the Misses Dickson. It was much appreciated. The next largest subscription was one of $100 from the Henry Hope & Sons Company. A few subscriptions came in at $50, practically all the rest being for $25 or less. One worker reported that a man standing on the street and looking up at the Y.M.C.A. streamer hanging across George St. asked what the campaign was for. On being told he remarked that that was a good cause and he wanted to help it along and he handed over a dollar.

WORKERS MUCH ENCOURAGED.

At the workers' luncheon held last evening for the reporting of results much enthusiasm was shown and numerous incidents of the canvass were told. One report that was received from practically all was that the people are ready to give as far as their means permit, and thus it is easy to canvass them. Some complimentary things are being said about the advertising campaign that has been conducted. It evidently has given light on the work of the "Y" to a number of people and influenced them in the making of their contributions.

Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, manager of the De Laval Company, which has contributed $250, said that when he wrote to the president of his company recommending the making of a contribution he received back a most sympathetic letter approving of the giving of a contribution and speaking in the highest terms of the splendid work the "Y" is doing. The president's own son has given up a course in college to enlist with the United States naval corps, and when his father visited the training quarters recently he was surprised to find that the Y.M.C.A. already had their tents up and were engaged in looking after the welfare of his son and the many other young men as well.

One lady in making her contribution said that as soon as the "Y" will improve its swimming pool so as to ensure a better and more frequent supply of water she would give an extra $100. A manufacturing firm said that as soon as the pool was enlarged they would give $200. While the soldiers were in the city the privileges of using the swimming pool free, which was extended to them, was one of the most appreciated features of the work of the Association.

SEND IN YOUR SUBSCRIPTIONS.

In spite of the fact that a large staff of workers is at work it seems evident that it is going to be practically impossible for them to see all the people who would like to contribute before the campaign closes. Should there be any who are unintentionally overlooked they are asked to send in their contributions, no matter how small or large, to the Association or hand them to any of the workers whom they may happen to see. It is likely to be nip and tuck as to whether the $10,000 mark will be passed, and therefore every little will help and a considerable number of little lifts, especially with a few larger ones thrown in, soon helps to make a big total. Here's hoping the "Y" reaches its total and passes it by a nice margin.

A New Type of Liberalism

Manitoba Free Press Says West is Breaking Away from Both Parties at Ottawa

Special to The Examiner:

WINNIPEG, Man., June 28.—The Free Press, Liberal, the leading newspaper of the west, says editorially to-day:

"The Saskatchewan election result, following on three other Liberal victories in the west, means the Canadian west is breaking away from both political parties at Ottawa. A new and virile type of Liberalism is growing up. The Liberal party at Ottawa is disintegrating under successive shocks resulting from the war. The west recognizes no leader at Ottawa."

Continent a Unit on Food Problem

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, June 28.—The whole continent of North America, from the Mexican border to the North Pole, will henceforth be one unit in dealing with the food situation of the allies. This was the announcement to-day of Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canadian food controller, who has recently returned from Washington after an extended conference with Herbert C. Hoover, United States food controller. "Within two days," said Mr. Hanna, "a joint statement will be issued by Mr. Hoover and myself regarding our plans."

Some Summer Weaves

Effect Clothes Economy as Well as Bodily Comfort.

There is thrift in comfort when good Botany wool cloth costs as much as $3 and $4 a pound. If one can cut a few pounds weight out of a suit of clothes the saving is evident.

Semi-ready summer worsteds and tweeds are tailored from 12 and 14-ounce-to-the-yard cloth, whereas a winter weight cloth weighs as much as 22 ounces to the yard. On a three-and-a-half-yard length the difference is often two pounds, so those one is inclined to view with thrifty favour the purchase of one of the lightweight summer weaves in the Semi-ready store. These can be worn four to five months in the Canadian climate.

Frank L. Jenne says that he and Harry Thornton will be glad to show some of these splendid garments.

THE SELECTIVE AND THE SELECT.

The Ottawa Journal-Press deprecates what it calls the "meaningless clamour" for conscription of wealth—and suggests that it is the demand of a "partisan demagogic press," made chiefly for the purpose of discrediting the government. At the same time the Journal itself advocates the "income tax for present needs" and declares it is "losing patience with the dilatory tactics"—mark the word—"of the Finance Minister." Is it demagogic to demand, as the Journal does, an income tax; is it demagogic to criticise the Finance Minister for a hesitancy and indifference the Journal itself condemns—his "dilatory tactics" in giving no unequivocal assurance of meeting, or dealing with, the demand for the "conscription of wealth," which such a demagogic body as the City Council of Toronto, by a large majority, demands. They may be demagogic, but their demagogism is of the true-blue "Tory" quality, and not to be confounded with that of less worthy and less loyal people. The demand for the conscription of wealth is not "meaningless clamour." Everybody knows what it means, as he knows what conscription of manhood means. Conscription of wealth is a logical association of action and ideas with the conscription of manhood. Conscription of manhood takes all that a man has, his life, perhaps; or puts at risk and imperils his life.

The demand for service in this war, the demands upon the duty of Canadians is not confined alone to the eligible fighting men of the country, but to every element of our war resources. Sir Robert Borden has, in effect, time after time properly pledged Canada adherence to the war to "the last man and the last dollar." His conscription bill sizes the man but lets the dollar escape. In waging this war Canada incurs demand upon all her resources; upon her manhood, which is to be seized vi et armies; upon her womanhood, which needs no compulsion to be fully and freely in the fight to the extent of its abilities; upon her wealth, which is permitted to escape the demand of fullest employment and similar sacrifice as that to be imposed upon our manhood. The government admits that service, which, if not freely given or selfishly withheld, is to be compelled, is done in every other direction. It has by the appointment of a fuel controller, looked to the conscription of a necessity in the interest of the efficiency of the people; it has appointed a food controller, with the same object in view. It has proposed conscription of manhood as a necessary measure in giving effect to the national cooperation, but wealth is exempted from specific and authoritative demand, from joining in the common sacrifice which nearly every other element of national resource contributing to war-waging efficiency, is officially called upon to make.

As has been pointed out, the conscription bill has in itself enough elements of antagonism to the popular feeling to justify making it as acceptible or as little objectionable as possible, by making it fair in its provisions, as well as fair in its application.

If the conscription bill contained the express provision that the selective methods it embodies, was to apply only to a certain class, to men of a certain class, to the ordinary citizen, but that the man of wealth, the man of influence and standing was to be exempted, no end of a howl would be made by the most convinced conscriptionist. But what other thing than this is implied in the fact that conscription is apostolic, and that it merely fishes for men, and makes no provision that the swollen money bags of men who have grown rich out of the course of the war, shall be exempt.

A good deal of the hostility to conscription would be modified if the surplus of money as well as manhood were by parliament made subject, concurrently with manhood, to selective compulsion.

The German view through the Lens must at present represents looking through the small end of the telescope.

FORTUNATE AND UNFORTUNATE PETERBOROUGH.

One can't avoid admiring the splendid spirit and work of the order of the "Imperial Daughters of the Empire." Without reference to any other consideration than working effectively for the interests of the Empire, they pursue their way of work, quietly and persistently, undisturbed by the side issues of party passion or the demand of things that in normal times almost irresistibly appeal to the feminine interest. We know what splendid work they have done in Peterborough in strengthening the sinews of war and in providing an example of quiet, persistent, tireless industry in promoting war work, and war relief work.

It is not often in the third year of the war that the Daughters of the Empire turn aside from activities associated with the war, but in St. Catharines the I.O.D.E. is to celebrate the Golden Jubilee of Confederation by presenting the city with land for a park. The Daughters of the Empire in Peterborough don't do that, because there is no need for such an action. Peterborough has a splendid and almost sufficient supply of parks, which, practically speaking, didn't cost the citizens a dollar except for a little furbishing. Other places are less fortunate than Peterborough in this regard. For instance the Imperial Damsels of St. Catharines have to turn aside from exclusive devotion of attention to the almost exclusive need—war work—to work for land for a park.

Peterborough has had her parks virtually presented to her, but our City Fathers don't—some of them—seem to appreciate the significance of their possession. The St. Catharines Daughters of the Empire, and the generous citizens who must have responded to their solicitations, feel that the recreation, the pleasure, the amusement of the citizens, are important enough to be associated on equal terms with the liberties of the people as involved in winning the war. We have our parks as practically a free gift, yet there is a question as to providing a little money to make them yield the greatest enjoyment by park concerts.

The aldermanic indifference to the musical enjoyment of the people is unintelligible—the survival of the village spirit or the village outlook. The aldermen who may think it good finance to starve out the 57th band, seem to forget that in the fifty years of Confederation, Peterborough has outgrown the early days of her townhood. We have grown to a population of nearly a quarter of a hundred thousand; we have correspondingly increased in many other ways—in the condition of our streets and public places; in the magnitude and extent of our industrial possessions; in our schools and our churches, and in no other way more notably than in our love and cultivation of music. We have a thriving and well established musical centre, the Peterborough Conservatory of Music; and the reports of numerous recitals of pupils appearing daily in the press show that there is a general distribution of musical ambition and culture. Our churches, about twenty in number, have creditable choirs—some of them splendid choirs—of, individually, almost oratorio calibre. We have Peterboro artists, vocal and instrumental, that have provincial reputations.

All this argues that we are a music-loving people and have of recent years made great progress in executive proficiency and taste for, and love of, music; and when one reflects that our citizens have willingly spent thousands to reach our present musical status, it seems incongruous that with such a musical spirit abroad to be catered to and entertained, we have to have the music for the masses "syncopated" by reason of inadequate financial support.

The difference between a live city and a dead one, is that citizens of the one are always looking to the future, while the citizens of the other are looking backward—Canadian Municipal World.

AN IMPORTANT LECTURE

Some Extracts from the Speech of Mr. Frank B. Carvell

Delivered in the House Yesterday on Second Reading of Conscription Bill

Frank B. Carvell, perhaps the most outspoken critic of the Borden Government's management of Canada's part in the war, said in his speech in the House of Commons, yesterday:

"This war has been in my thoughts constantly, and I think it will remain there until the closing scenes of the great drama."

"I believe there is nothing in which Canada is so concerned as doing our full duty to bring the war to a successful conclusion in order that liberty, justice and righteousness may have a chance upon this earth."

"The Prime Minister, back from the front, tells us they need more men at the front. That is the cry gone forth over the world. I have not the nerve to say he is wrong, and I am right. I am willing to stand by him."

"I take off my hat to the 130,000 British-born who threw up their jobs and threw down their tools and joined the colours the day war was declared. Thousands have made the supreme sacrifice, and tens of thousands may come back maimed and disfigured."

"I admire British institutions, British laws, British sense of justice, British literature, the way the British do things in the world, for the ideals that have gone forth from the British Islands have been the foundation of the liberty of the world—but I am in this war because I believe, as a Canadian, we are but doing our duty to civilization."

"To the man who says, 'You are fighting for England in this war,' I say we are fighting for ourselves. I am convinced it is our duty to help to bring order of the present chaos. England didn't start this war. Germany did. We have a right to be in it."

MUSIC IN THE HOME

CHOIRS AND DISCIPLINE.

There is nothing democratic about a choir. It cannot be a democratic organism. Like an army its foundation is authority, its government is and must be autocratic. For that very reason many young people in Canada do not make good choristers. Their voices may be admirable, and well trained. But unless they have learned how to obey without question they are of little use. The average chorister must admit to himself or herself, first of all, that the conductor is competent to teach something worth knowing. If he has made that admission, he will not be inclined to resent sharp comment or critical remark on the part of the Conductor. The young man or woman who is looking for an opportunity to get huffy will have an infinite number of chances in a good choir. It is because of the languid young person who imagines that she confers a favour on the organization by her presence, that Conductors sometimes get a reputation for testiness and even bad manners. One Toronto organist had been cursed with a group of such singers, and had expressed himself at rehearsal with some freedom concerning inattention. One of the young women told a friend of the organist that she was determined to leave. Thereupon the friend sought the organist and said: "You are going to lose some of your singers. They say that you are too 'cross.'" The organist replied, "Well, what is a fellow to do with the silly little things?"

What, indeed? A choir is not a choir if one member misses an attack or overlooks an 'effect' carefully rehearsed. The efficiency of a choir depends not on the average of earnestness and good sense among the wise, but on the average of neglect or stupidity among the foolish. If courteous and delicate speech is not sufficient to arouse the trifler, perhaps the sudden outflow of satirical lava will make them "sit up." One remembers a choirmaster who had endured much in the course of a rehearsal. Pleading and rebuke were alike useless to stop the chattering of two or three young sopranos. Suddenly, he threw down the baton and said: "There is one anthem in particularly suited for the members of this choir that we ought to sing it at every rehearsal." By this time the chatterers were listening. "The composition I refer to," he continued, "is: 'Awake Thou That Sleepest and Arise from the Dead.'"

It is said that the young recruit in a military force finds it almost impossible for a time to turn to the right on the word of command. He instinctively turns to the left Yet he knows perfectly his right hand from his left. Why does he fail at the word of command? Because he has not yet 'sensed' the community feeling. He may be forced to 'form fours' ten thousand times before that feeling comes to him, but it will come at last. It is just as difficult for a young singer to become a valuable member of a singing organisation as for a recruit to become a soldier. He or she must cultivate the sense of responsiveness to outside suggestion. That demands attention of the most concentrated sort. At the same time the chorister must realize that the social side of the organization is of minor consequence. That no one wants to insult him or hurt his feelings, and that he would not have been invited to join the choir if the conductor "had a pick on him." Our young people, and even our older ones, often are supremely childish. The duty of a conductor is to mind his business all the time and see to it that all the members of the choir are assisting him in the task. Sometimes it is not just as easy as it is to catch a cold.

CHINA AND PIANOS.

Chinese music is not generally of a type to arouse much enthusiasm. Chinese instruments have a tone like an expiring cat which has died of a broken heart. A Chinese orchestra sounds like feeding-time at the Zoo. If a Chinese musician is asked for an explanation he probably will tell us that some four thousand years ago his people had explored all the possibilities of the diatonic scale and determined to avoid mere prettiness in order to express human moods. He might point to our modernists who, it seems, strive to write ugly music, and declare that they are merely following the example of Chu Ting Fong or some other personage contemporary with Abraham, who broke away from the shackles of musical convention. The great thing about a Chinaman is that he always can find an explanation—one which is designed to make the foreign devil go off and hide under the bed lest he might be compelled to apologize for his own civilization. It would be interesting to hear a Chinese explanation for the growth of Canadian exports of musical instruments to that land. Piano manufacturers in Canada have a great and growing market in the Orient. Many wealthy officials have realized that a one-stringed fiddle and a tom-tom lacks something in comparison with a Canadian pianoforte. The change of government in recent years has brought the Chinese into closer touch with the civilization of the West. A Pessimist might not be inclined to discover in this fact the reason for the piano shipments. He might imagine that the piano, taken by and large, offered infinite possibilities to the Chinese musical ear. By five minutes' work with a tuner's key, it would be possible to put a piano so desperately out of tune, that it would harmonize perfectly with a Chinese orchestra and set half a Province wiggling with pure delight. The Pessimist might ask: "Are they sending piano-tuners to China, as well as pianos?" The resultant No might give foundation for his utterances. Yet we must remember that a Chinaman is a quick learner. Piano-tuning after the well-tempered scale is possible to acquire even by a Chinaman. For that reason one is more inclined to take the optimistic view—that China has recognized the real beauty of a Canadian piano and may yet sit with the other nations at the feet of the great Masters.

PUTTING THE "US" IN MUSIC

To Enjoy Music You Must Make It Yourself.

In times of great strain music has the centre of the recreation stage. It has in the soldier's life. It has in the civilian's life. Yet the maximum of enjoyment and helpfulness is not secured until one makes music himself. It is all very well to be an Old King Cole and call for your fiddlers three. It is all very well to be on the getting side of the musical fence instead of the giving side. The extreme pleasure of listening to good music cannot be under-estimated but the pleasure of listening is greatly intensified when one produces music himself.

The principle being a fundamental one, works out in music as it does in other spheres. No matter how much one admires a game of tennis, the most interested spectator at the championship matches are tennis players themselves. The layman who watches a yacht race sees only a small fraction of the points that a man does who has his own dingy. The High School pupils who take up Shakespeare's plays are among the most enthusiastic in the audiences at the theatre when a good company arrives for a Shakespeare week. To enjoy music more you must know music more. To know music more you must make more of it yourself.

This phase is brought out in a breezy way in one of those Old Gorgon Graham letters to his sons for which George Horace Lorimer was responsible. The self-made millionaire porkpacker was telling of one of his employees Solomon Saunders. He said: "Sol started out in life to be a great musician. He had raised the hair for the job, and kept his fingernails cut just right for it; but somehow when he played 'My Old Kentucky Home' nobody sobbed softly in the fourth row. You see he could play a piece absolutely right, and meet every note just when it came due, but when he got through it was all wrong. Sol was a failure as a musician because while he knew all the notes, he had nothing in himself to add to them when he played them It's easy to learn all the notes that make good business, but a fellow's got to add the fine curves to them himself if the wants to do anything more than beat the bass-drum all his life." There is the point. It is the adding of the something in yourself, the putting on of fine curves yourself that makes for the keenest enjoyment. Therefore when we feel the desire to let our good spirits bubble over in music, or when we feel the need of easing a burdened mind with music we must remember that the best results come from making the music ourselves and not by proxy.

GERMANS AND MUSIC.

The War Has Struck the Boston Syphony Orchestra.

Col. Higginson, the chief supporter of that famous organization has withdrawn temporarily his aid having first demanded the resignation of Dr. Karl Muck, the eminent conductor. It appears that Dr. Muck is not only a German by birth but a sympathetic supporter of the Kaiser and all his works, a fact a little too strong for Col. Higginson to bear. Boston has loved its orchestra with a great love, but it loves "truth and honour, freedom and courtesy" a good deal more. It is probable, therefore, that many of the more eminent players of the organization will find themselves out o' doors. At the beginning of the war we in Canada realized that the visits of Teuton musicians and organizations even for artistic pleasure must come to an end. Fritz Kreisler, the Austrian violinist, for example was a reservist. He joined his regiment, fought against the Russians, was wounded, and came to the United States to resume his art work. Before the war he had been heard in Toronto. He and his manager realized that Canada was no place for him now. His success in Boston and New York was very great, not because the people admired the cause he fought for, but merely because he was human enough to fight, and sane enough not to become a propagandist. Yet to-day since the United States is in the struggle, a tour by Mr. Kreisler is highly unlikely. He has not ceased to be a great violinist, but he has become an Alien Enemy.

The Metropolitan Opera Company of New York is touring in the Southern States. In Atlanta, Ga., the advance sales amounted to $100,000, this for a week's performances.

DISSIPATING THE GLOOM.

Since the war broke out the Ladies' Colleges in Canada have not been as well attended as usual. The reason lies here. When a father and mother have seen one or two boys leave for the battlefront, they are so lonely that they cannot bear the thought of losing their daughter or daughters for three or four months at a time. Therefore the daughters give up the pleasures of boarding schools to enjoy all the pleasures of home, and to maintain at least a semblance of gaiety in the family circle. In these days when most young men have musical tastes or musical interests, the home is very quiet when they are gone, unless there is a phonograph at hand. Even then mothers do not play John's favorite records when he is slogging away in Picardy. A girl in the house may maintain the former atmosphere and keep the home fires burning by music and dancing. A Scottish dealer in musical instruments declared recently that in these distressing times the talking machine and its high possibilities for entertainment had greatly mitigated the gloom of the times. Perhaps similar testimony could be borne by the dealers of Canada. One thing is sure, that since the war the interest in the phonograph has grown in all classes of the community.

HUMOROUS INCIDENT IN TOSTI'S LIFE.

Frequently we see in the press that various associations are debating the question of the desirability of having a growing list of titles conferred upon Canadians. This recalls that the late Sir F. Paolo Tosti was knighted by King Edward, a fact, perhaps, not generally known, as Tosti was born and died in Italy. He spent most of his life in England from choice. He was a great favourite with the English people, both on account of his musical accomplishments, and his very charming manner. The frequency with which he was commanded to sing and play before Queen Victoria also indicated his standing in the Old Country.

An amusing incident is told of Tosti. On one occasion he attended a great reception in London. Upon entering a row of liveried servants began each in turn to bow most profusely to him. After passing a few, he muttered to the next flunkie an epithet in the Neapolitan dialect which in English would be something like "Darn fool." Again he used the same expression to the next servant, and the next, and so on until the fourth when dubbed "Darn fool" retorted "Darn fool yourself." Then Tosti knew he had struck one who understood the Neapolitan word.

Tosti will always be best remembered as the composer of "Good-bye," although there is a difference of opinion as to what is his finest work. "Beauties' Eyes," "Venetian Boat Song," "Ask Me No More," "My Heart's Delight," "For Ever and For Ever," and others all gained wide popularity. Tosti was loved by his pupils. He was a great teacher, and as one has put it, "He taught by personality." It has been said the reason he returned to Italy to spend his last years was to prove to his fellow-countrymen that his heart was still with Italy, his native land. To accept the honour of knighthood from the King of England he had to become a British subject. This is said to have been resented by some Italians.

For generations the Prix de Rome has had a special attraction for music students in Paris. The fact that Rome has ceased to be an important educational centre so far as music is concerned has nothing to do with the distinction of obtaining a travelling scholarship of such value and with such historic associations. Undoubtedly the Gouin Government of the Province of Quebec had the Prix de Rome in mind when they founded a scholarship providing for three years' European study for the most promising of the young musicians of the province. This scholarship is called the Prix d'Europe, and the examinations are to be held in Laval University, Quebec City, on June 30th next.

The fact that any Canadian Government extends any financial support to music whatever is in itself most satisfying. Still one may reasonably ask if the establishment of such a scholarship is the best means of encouraging music study. For the past ten years it has been brought home to our people that the custom of going abroad "to finish" was more a habit than a necessity. Except for the specialized study of opera singing there is little to be obtained by a European sojourn save that broadening of spirit which travel always brings. The system of piano and violin teaching has been fairly well standarized all over the world, and when experienced teachers can be found on this side of the Atlantic why would anyone go travelling? The possibility of building up our own institutions, developing the great opportunities which lie before us, and giving Canada a chance to build an artistic reputation, is recognized by many of our most eminent musicians.

Quebec is to be congratulated on what has been done by the Government, eyt as other provincial administrators begin to realise the importance of encouraging art, and art education, they stimulated home industries. It may not be wise to continue the tradition that all civilization and all culture are permanently settled on the other side of the ocean.

MUSICAL NOTES.

For the Musically Curious.

London's Covent Garden Opera House is being used by the British Government as a furniture repository.

Marshall Field & Co., Chicago, great department store, has a musical organization called the Marshall Field Choral Society, which gives to its home city a notable concert each year.

Mme. Clara Clemens-Gabrilowitsch, a daughter of Mark Twain, is an artist whose interpretive power is impressive. She is developing her exceptional voice under the direction of Mme. Delia Valerie, a teacher of Grand Opera singers.

Canadians are more eager for good music than ever before—so say the agents of the New York Metropolitan Company which is experiencing a great demand for its artists for concerts.

Axel Skovgaard, Danish violinist, and his Metropolitan Company gave in the latter part of April a series of concerts in various cities and towns of British Columbia.

The New York Community Chorus gave recently on a Sunday afternoon in the New York Hippodrome a concert after the manner of those it gave last year in Central Park—a concert in which the seats of the auditorium were filled by anybody and everybody wishing to enter the immense building and to join in the singing. Last Autumn in the Sunday afternoon "Sings" in Central Park, one hundred and twenty thousand people joined in singing with the chorus and orchestra; and in December assisted similarly at a presentation of Handel's "Messiah" at Madison Square Garden, admission to which was free.

The Elgar Choir, Hamilton, Bruce Carey, Conductor, will give a programme of American Compositions at the National American Musical Convention, to be held in Lockport, N.Y., September 30—October 6.

The prices charged by competent vocal teachers in New York range from $6 to $10 for a half hour lesson. $50 a week is about the minimum upon which a pupil can live in New York, study, singing, languages, acting, and this only when the greatest economy is used. This applies to those having grand opera ambitions. Listening to operas is part of the education, and must be counted as one of the expenses.

Yale University, New Haven, will be the first American University to establish (in October, 1917) a special course for normal training in music as taught in the public schools.

When company comes in, what do you do to entertain your friends? Can you imagine a more delightful way of enriching an evening's visit than by bringing out "Real Music" Recreated by the Wonderful New Edison? The J. M. Greene Music Co., Charlotte street.

You Are Paying For It Anyway

YOU have a hard day. Weary, nerves frazzled, you reach home. Nothing would suit you better than to stay right home.

But you go out.

You go to the cabaret. You eat when you don't want to eat. You are away from home when you want to be at home.

You try to satisfy your music hunger with a hand-out around the corner. That helps a little. What you really want, though, is a music feast in your own home.

In shirt sleeves, downright comfort, your own piano or player-piano or talking machine and the whole world of music from which to choose the music to fit your mood.

And don't think you can't have a piano or player piano or talking machine in your home. You're entitled to one. You're paying for it anyway. Yes paying for it—but not getting it.

That once or twice each week that you go music-hunting costs as much, maybe more, than it would cost to own an instrument.

A really good piano or player piano or talking machine can be purchased at a very reasonable price and the payments can be so divided that your music-hunting money will more than take care of them.

LIGHTING IMPROVEMENTS ARE BEING MADE

Delayed for want of materials the Utilities Commission have now got to work on the many alterations and additions to the streets lighting as asked for by residents and passed for action by the Council.

Despite the generally accepted idea that the Council is almost impervious to these requests for additional light, and that the members, especially those living in the well lighted districts are rather indifferent to the claims of the ratepayers on the outside the Council is just as anxious that all streets, within reason shall have light. One unpleasant matter is the growth of trees. A district, or street, that have been fairly lighted four years ago, is now in a state of gloom because of the growth of the foliage. To remedy this the old arc lamps are being replaced by the incandescent lamp where at all practicable. The taking over of the Otonabee Co.'s line facilitates this work, as it avoids duplication of lines in localities served in the past by the lines of that company.

A practical instance of the rejuvenated system can be looked at on Parnell street. Here was a thoroughfare, lighted by an arc lamp at the crossing of Park street. Then at the other end, which by the way is a "dead" end, there was an old arc lamp stuck up on a pole, shedding about as much light as the North Star, and not nearly as respectable looking. About equal in illuminating power to a switch signal lamp or other inoffensive luminary. This has all been done away with. Ten or twelve bulb lamps have been scattered along the street and the result is great. People of the district are pleased. Residents can come out of their houses at any old time of night and easily recognize neighbours. This street had been all torn up with the planting along its length of a sewer, and was as rough as the rock roads to Dublin. Now the citizens, wishing to cross the thoroughfare to borrow a grist of clothes pins and a little of baking soda, may do so in confidence and security.

It is understood that the claims and allowances for lights will have almost prompt attention. Things are on the move. A little patience will remedy the defects. Line men have to be trained. Not every man can do the work. There are just so many to handle it, and you cannot go out and get them, same as the accepted view that one may step out of the house any spring morning and pick a poet off the nearest tree.

So soon as other localities are lighted that are now benighted, some satisfaction will prevail. But the outlying districts will have careful and helpful attention. Nothing else is the aim and endeavour of the Council, no matter what the kickers and fault finders may aver.

New Pastor Is Welcomed

Rev. A. J. Thomas Who Takes Charge at George St. Church Arrived To-day

The hearty and cordial reception tendered by the large delegation who met Rev. A. J. Thomas, formerly of London, and who has come to fill the position of Pastor of George Street Methodist Church, at the C.P.R. station this morning, put the new Pastor very much at his ease and assured him he had arrived amongst enthusiastic friends. Some of those who were at the station to represent the church were Judge Huycke, Magistrate D. W. Dumble, Dr. Middleton, Mr. Adams, Messrs. B. Shortley, T. W. Robinson S. R. Armstrong, E. T. Robinson Charles Moore, Thompson, C. B. Smith, Rev. Mr. Whattam and Dr. Harvey. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas drove from the station to the parsonage where another hearty reception, tendered by members of the congregation, awaited them.

MAXWELL CAR TESTS SHOW EXCELLENT RESULTS

More Than Twenty-Nine Miles from An Imperial Gallon of Gasoline

Gillespie's Garage is holding a series of tests on Maxwell cars that have been sold by them in this locality.

Yesterday the car purchased by Mr. J. Thompson was tested out, and it showed results of 24.2 miles from an American gallon of gasoline. As there is about one-fifth less in the American gallon than the Imperial gallon this would give practically 29 miles from a gallon of gasoline.

Gillespie's garage is putting forth great claims as to what the Maxwell will produce per gallon of gasoline, and if the tests continue to give the above results they say their claims have been substantiated.

To-day, the car purchased by Dr. Middleton, and another by Mr. W. J. Baker of Lakefield are being tested.

MILITARY NEWS

Clappison, formerly of the 93rd Battalion:

Mrs. H. Clappison, Brownton P.O., Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Mrs. Clappison,—Will you allow me to try and express my deepest sympathy in the awful loss you have sustained in the death of your husband, No. 196050, Corporal H. Clappison? Words at such a time seem so hopelessly inadequate, either to express one's sympathy or to convey comfort. As you doubtless have been informed, he was killed in the big advance of April 9th. From what little I knew of him one can well understand something of the terrible nature of your loss. He always thought so much of you, and his chums say that you and his little ones seemed to be his whole interest and joy in life. Strangely enough he seemed to have some foreboding that he would not come out of that action, for, as the Battalion was going forward only the night before, he spoke of you to Pte. Cecil Armstrong (a runner in the battalion), and asked him to write to you should anything happen to him. I am glad to know that he was a member of the Pocket Testament League, and that his little Testament was in his pocket when he was killed. Surely such a sacrifice as his could not have been in vain, but has been accepted and united with the sacrifice of our Saviour Jesus Christ, in whom and with whom he now lives, as much alive—more alive—than ever, growing and developing his soul unto 'the perfect man.'

That God's own presence may be with you at this time, breathing His richest blessings of His companionship, hope and peace in believing, is my earnest prayer for you.

In respectful sympathy,
Yours faithfully,
A. G. EMMET, (Capt.).
Chaplain, 1st Brigade,
Canadian Infantry.

Pte. R. Wiltshaw of the 93rd Battalion, who has been home on special furlough, left this morning for overseas again. A number of the members of the 57th Overseas Company were at the station to say good bye.

George Street Sunday School's Annual Picnic

The annual picnic of George Street Methodist Church Sunday School will be held at Nicholls Oval Friday afternoon, June 29th, commencing at 3 o'clock. There will be games and races in the afternoon, and immediately after tea, at 6.30, the children will all be taken out for an automobile ride in the country. All the members and friends of the school are cordially invited to come and bring their baskets and enjoy the afternoon with the children.

COAL OIL KILLS POTATO BUGS

Practical Farmer Gives Information for Amateur Gardeners

Strolling into the drug store to buy a portion of Paris green, with which to assault the bugs climbing over the foliage of the Irish Cobbler potatoes, a man standing at the counter offered advice. His advice is born of experience.

The man was Mr. James Wilson, of Harvey Township. He owns a farm that displays two silos. Now, one silo is entitled to respect. Two, absolutely clinch the argument. That man's advice and suggestion is worth considering, for if it wasn't he wouldn't have two silos. That is a philosophical deduction that is apparent. It spells success.

Mr. Wilson says that coal oil is over fifty per cent. more destructive and efficient. His experience was gained in this way. Some one had been coal oiling the household watering can, and left some in the can. He was preparing to give the early bug—this was last season—a dose of deterrent. Filled up the can with water and was going to insert the Paris Green, when he noticed the oil. Decided, as the can was full of perfectly good water to sprinkle it on, at any rate. When he started to administer the green solution he commenced at another part of the patch, and did not finish that evening. When coming to that part of the patch, a night or two afterwards, that had been oiled he found no bugs in evidence. All had keeled over. He experimented further and decided that the remedy was excellent. Of course, like the bottles one gets from the doctor, the solution needs to be well shaken before taken.

Greater production people, of which just now there be many, may well try this idea of the oil remedy, and note results.. The decoction is cleanly to use, always handy and safe. Besides, it won't mess up the family irrigation can, and that is worth considering when flowers have to be watered from the same vessel.

Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—In the issue of the Examiner of June 27th you had a list of address of Canadian Prisoners of War in Germany. There are some slight mistakes in the writing of the different names, which might lead to confusion, and then the letters or parcels will never reach their destination. I will give you below the correct writing:

Instead of Wittemberg a Elbe, it should read, Wittemberg a.d. Elbe. Limburg a.d. Lahn, instead of Limburg a Lahn. Frankfurt a.d. Oder,, instead of Frankfort a Oder. Minden i W., instead of Minden 1 w. Munster i W., instead of Munster 1 w., and then Olton-Grabow, Mannschafts, Truppeniibungs, Platz, instead of Mannschafts, Teuppennburysplas.

Yours respectfully,
EMILE BAUMER

82 Admiral Road,
Toronto, June 27.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—As the Stony Lake Red Cross Association has held no general meeting as yet, for 1917, I have had no report to send you. The President, Mrs. Grahame, and the Toronto Executive held a meeting last month, at which it was decided to defer holding the annual meeting for the election of officers until July 6, and hold it in the Juniper Pavilion on Friday, at 3 p.m., July 6th, so that Peterborough members can take part.

Yours truly,
EVELYN L. ROBERTSON,
Secretary, S.L.R.C.A.

Want Alcohol Cut Down in Patent Medicine

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, June 28.— The Dominion government will be asked to prevent patent or proprietory medicines being made with more than two and a half per cent. of alcohol, and the Ontario government will be asked to vigorously prosecute "chiropractors," whose methods, the Medical Council claim, cause death or injury to many patients. These were the resolutions passed at this morning's session of the Ontario Medical Council.

Group of Citizens Fined $2 Apiece for C.P.R. Trespass

The Police Court mill was liberally fed with C.P.R. trespassers this morning who had previously admitted the offense and were fined $2 each. Constable George Greenham of the C.P.R. Havelock, spent a week end here a short time ago and the fodder gathered therein for the Thompson hopper is not yet exhausted. The citizens who were mulcted of their two dollars this morning were:

David Hartley; Ellsworth Jewell, 490 Parnell; Thos. O'Brien, Maria street; Florence Decarto, 548 Parnell; Chas. Wiggins, 249 Simcoe; A. J. Leonard; John Hamilton, 142 Maria; Joseph Hunter, J. H. Burrans, 596 George street; Arthur Nott, 296 George street; Harold Dunk, 269 Perry street; C. Asta, 545 Parnell; Ed. Connors, High street; James Weese, 474 McDonnel; Alex. Ross, 210 Stewart street; Wm. Rudkins, 185 King; Leonard Fallis; Percy Pammett, 271 McDonnel.

How Dominion Day Will Be Celebrated

OTTAWA, June 25.—Arrangements have now been completed for the celebration of the anniversary of Confederation.

The House of Commons and Senate have both approved and adopted the report which was made by the Joint Committee. A copy of this report and a topical pamphlet prepared in accordance therewith with two engravings showing the histrical meeting at Charlottetown in 1864 and the meeting of the Fathers of Confederation in 1867 at Quebec, have been forwarded to:

(a) All clergymen in the Dominion of Canada.

(b) The members of all Legislative Assemblies in Canada.

(c) The presiding officer of every municipality in Canada.

(d) The Canadian clubs and other associations in so far as they could be reached.

(e) Every newspaper in the Dominion.

(f) All Boards of Trade in Canada.

The Prime Ministers of each Province have been communicated with personally and all have signified their prompt and cordial co-operation in the purposes and recommendations of the Committee.

The Public Schools, in so far as possible, in the Dominion will incorporate in their closing exercises some services and allusions to the event.

All the clergymen and Sunday school teachers have been notified to make allusions to, or have services in connection with the anniversary on Sunday, July 1, in their churches and Sunday Schools.

All municipalities have been invited to co-operate in such a manner as seems best in each case.

The Provincial Governments will hold in each Capital appropriate commemorative exercises.

A service has been arranged for in London and Paris.

At Ottawa there will be a special commemorative ceremony on Parliament Hill in front of the Parliament Buildings at which it is expected the Governor-General will be present and perform the ceremony of uncovering the inscription upon the central column of the corridor of the new Parliament House and make some remarks appropriate to the occasion.

The Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition will make speeches commemorative of the event.

A miltary parade will be a feature of the occasion and a choir will render the National Anthem and other patriotic music.

The Boy Scouts and Girl Guides will be in the parade, and although the schools will have been dismissed before that time, the children and their parents have been invited to attend.

The GRESSMAN Company Limited

An Honest Endeavour to Simplify the Shopping Question Prior to The Holiday.

What Will I Wear On Monday?

You'll ask yourself this question. We guessed right did we not? But it wasn't a guess. We don't deal in guesses, we deal in facts. We knew that you and others would be perplexed, so we bought liberally of Holiday Attire.

We Speak Briefly, But to the Point

If a Palm Beach Suit is your desire we have them at $12.00, $13.50 and $14.50 and a right smart appearance they give a man.

If it's Light Outing Trousers you want we have them—plain white and striped flannel $4.00 to $6.00; plain, palm beach $3.50; Khaki ducks $1.50 to $2.25, Boys $1.25; white ducks $1.00 to $1.75.

Maybe it's a Straw Hat you require, if so our sailors are priced from $1.50 to $3.00. Panamas at $5.00.

Shirts, and here we make no idle boast when we say "we have the best the makers can offer." Prices from $1.00 up to the silks at $6.50.

Oftimes a man goes in search of summer footwear, but seldom he sees such as these. A white canvas outing shoe with leather inside sole and outer sole of rubber and heel of same, price $3.00; Tennis Oxfords at $1.25; high shoes for tennis $1.40 to $1.65.

Wash Ties and Soft Collars

"Just to my liking" you will say when you inspect the innumerable pattern in wash neckwear. Striped, paneled, and checked patterns developed in all manner of handsome designs. We rather pride ourselves on this assortment. Prices are 35c; 3 for $1.00; 50c and 75c.

This season has brought forth something new in the soft collar line and we are impatient to show them to you.

Let it be Friday or Saturday.

A Week-End Visit

Written by a Peterborough Officer in England

Bramshot Camp, May 16th.

ANTICIPATION.

For some months Captain has been expected to spend a week-end with his neice, Mrs. D. M., at Dudley, though a date was set time and again, something happened to make it necessary to put off the visit, at last he was successful in obtaining a couple of days' leave and very very kindly invited me to accompany him on the trip, this invitation was graciously seconded by Mrs. M. and I was most fortunate in being able to obtain leave at the same time.

Our leave was granted on Tuesday, May 8th and was from 3 p.m. Friday until midnight Sunday, the intervening time hung heavily on our hands and the trip was the sole topic of our conversation during this time. Many plans were discussed and vision dreamed. Neither of us had been on leave since last November and as we had been on duty practically seven days a week, this was a real holiday. Captain decided that he would purchase a camera, to take with us, this he did with the assistance of another Captain, as an expert, and what we will not know about amateur photography would not be worth mentioning.

The weather was discussed with every person we met and the man we loved was the one who predicted another week of fine weather, while the party who talked rain and other nasty species of English weather was our deadly enemy. At last Friday morning arrived and we scanned the sky for traces of sunshine. One of the worst features of the English atmosphere is that the early morning is very hazy and it is some hours before you are certain what brand of climate will be served up to you. During the morning we cleared our desks of all uncompleted work and handed over to a Captain to carry on during our absence.

REALIZATION

We were too much excited to eat our lunch, Capt. ——— especially who complained, for the first time, that the soup was too hot and the meat was too fat. We started out with our haversacks over our shoulders, for the Auto-bus station in Tintown. These busses as a rule run very well on time, but this day it was late and we had to wait about twenty minutes, though we had an hour or so to wait at the railway station and we fumed and fretted until we were at last away. We arrived at Haslemere station and after an hour's wait started for London. Away at last out of reach of any last minutes' recall.

GIRLS AT WORK.

The weather was beautiful and we were soon out in the country. Everything just now looks so clean and fresh. A large quantity of fresh ground has been plowed up and boys girls and women could be seen working away getting in the seeds. Very few men are left in this district. As we passed through Godelming we saw a number of wounded Tommies with nurses and women in row boats and in canoes. The latter made me think of home as, no doubt, they came from Peterborough. As we approached Woking we passed through a number of splendid market gardens and tree nurseries. There are a quantity of highly cultivated plots here and everything looks good. We passed an encampment of school boys who were cultivating a large plot of land under the direction of their master. They had their own tents and vans and seemed to be enjoying themselves hugely. We arrived at Waterloo Station at 4.33 p.m. sharp on time, and hired a taxi to drive us across to Euston Station. We passed over Waterloo Bridge and along Kings Way Southampton Row, past Russel Square and Woburn Place to Euston Station. We enquired as to the best train to our next stopping place Birmingham, and found that a fast train left at 6.55 p.m. We started out for a walk down Euston Road and Pentonville Road until we came to a "Lyons" restaurant (same as Child at home). We had a nice lunch of ham and eggs, scones, oatcakes and coffee, after lunch we continued our walk through a lot of slums also saw a street market where you could purchase everything. What struck me the most was the small children playing on the pavements. It is a sad thing that they have not greater opportunities to spend home happily their early days. We did notice several rows of model tenements with large wide court yards where the children were enjoying themselves thoroughly. I saw a number of women munition workers with coat and trousers, they certainly looked quite business like.

COMPARTMENT CARS.

We arrived at the station and had some time to spare and enjoyed watching the crowds. We secured two good seats in a first class smoking compartment and very private as there were only two other passengers in with us. The cars on this road, The London and North Western are very fine and compare favourably with our best cars. I have changed my views of the compartment cars and now like them very well, they are extremely comfortable, and the third class are are superior to our second class. We were soon dashing away into a new type of country. As we get clear of the houses we pass through a beautiful agriculture country, quite level with long rolling slopes, all in splendid pasture or in grain. We see lots of cattle and sheep but not as many as the land would support. The grain is skimpey in spots, probably due to the severe frosts of last winter. Here and there all along the route are narrow canals. These canals are a cheap means of transportation in this country, and illustrate what we could with our waterways some day. The canal boats are forty to fifty feet long and are six to eight feet wide and are hauled by a horse walking along the tow path. These horses are mostly driven by women or children and not a man is in sight. The Canals twist around back and forth under and over the railway, sometimes through tunnels. There are branches and basins to the factories along the way. They are experimenting with a motor drive similar to the Eversude motor and it is, I believe, a success. We pass several large places and every where seems to be very busy, the factories all working at night time, no doubt, in double shifts.

MEETS OLD FRIENDS.

It is the same old story, wherever you go you cannot loose yourself. After we left London I mentioned to Captain ———that I had to come this way again, to Rugby and Manchester. During the conversation I stated I was to visit the British Thompson Houston Works (General Electric Co.,) Rugby, one of the gentlemen in the compartment at once introduced himself and gave me his card. He was Mr. H. M. Sporborg, a director and Chief Engineer of the B.T.H. Co., he got very friendly and wanted me to stop over a couple of days at Rugby, he was acquainted with Senator Frederic Nicholls, Mr. Kynoch, Mr. Magiel and dozens of others I knew. As we pulled into Rugby he got off, and soon I noticed somebody waving frantically outside. I got off the train and it was Mr. A. Lingard, who is with the Export Department of the B.T.H. Co., 83 Cannon street, London E.C. You will remember him as a foreman at the Peterborough works. We had quite a chat and he asked for everybody including Mr. Nelson and Mr. Wm. Rogers. He looks very well and seems to have a good position. He was rejected from the army, but says he is busy on army work as all the output of the B.T.H. Co., is for the army and navy. Mr. Sporborg told me that eighty per cent. of their profits go to the War Excess Profit Tax, while twenty-five per cent. of the balance of their profits is taken by the Government as an Income Tax, but still they are doing better than ever in the history of the Company.

AT BIRMINGHAM.

We are now approaching Birmingham. It is a great manufacturing center and a beautiful city. We arrived at ten p.m., and was directed to the Midlands Hotel and secured a very comfortable double room. After a wash-up we started out for a walk to find a restaurant. All the streets are in darkness with a light here and there, no lights in the windows, and it was quite a task to get about, there was crowds of people on the streets. We could not find a restaurant open so returned to the Hotel. After some chase we found that we could get a meal as we were travellers. We had a nice supper of fried sole (fish) rolled in bread crumbs, bread, cheese and tea. We retired after leaving a call for six o'clock in the morning. I enjoyed a good sleep and awoke at six sharp, with the sun streaming in the window, we were dressed in a short time, had our breakfast and left for the station. We got a train at 7.45 for Dudley. The journey is full of interest. You are seldom out of sight of large factories, canals and railways, the district is one vast industrial center. We saw two completed tanks being tested out in a field. We are now in the so called "Black Country" and there are coal mines all over this part of England, they are all working to full capacity, on account of the high price of coal and the quantity required lots of mines that have been idle for years are now operating at a profit.

A SHELL FACTORY.

We arrived at Dudley shortly after eight o'clock and walked out to Mrs. ———, about three quarters of a mile from the station. We received a very warm welcome and after a short chat we went to the factory as Mr. ———had been there since seven o'clock. He received us very kindly and after he had finished his business he took us all over the Works. They employ about 15,000 hands and operate night and day. Everything has been built since the war started and it is a modern plant and one of the best laidout plants that I ever examined. The handling has been reduced to a minimum and very little material is lying about. A large number of women are employed even with the larger shells and they appear to be very keen at their work. It is a lesson to us at home to watch the operations and the manner they perform them when working under such good conditions. They manufacture shells here of all kinds, from little ones about two inches in diameter and eight inches long to fifteen inches in diameter and five feet long. Everything is completed here except loading the explosives. There are dining rooms at the plant to feed all the employees and this will be extended to feed their families as well in order to save food. Entertainments are held in these rooms and artists are brought down from London and other places. A large number of the employees are housed in a hut encampment similar to our military camps. The rent is quite reasonable from five shilling a week up. In addition large areas of good soil have been alloted to the employees and they have their own plots on which they work evenings and Sundays, they have an expert instructor to enable them to obtain the best results. Spotism shows up all about this plant and the results are twofold. The employees are contented and happy, no strikes here as in other parts of the country and the production has increased away beyond anything that was expected. I would just like to tell you the output each week, but, of course, that is not published.

Campers Like Lantic Sugar

Safe in the Carton and Always in Good Shape

Holidays bring such a feeling of satisfaction that the camper winks at inconveniences and passes them up with little or no comment. The city man does not look for everything "just so" at the lake cottage, he does not expect kitchen cabinets and moisture proof cupboards. Consequently we are not out to say "just what might have been" these: still, in pointing out ways and means of overcoming certain difficulties experienced by the cottage resident by the lakes we feel that we are not criticising but rather helping out. We have noticed that local grocers awake to every progressive step on part of manufacturers, are giving prominence to Lantic sugar in packages in their stores and windows. It struck us on noticing this handy pantry package that right here is the solution to sugar troubles at the summer cottage. Paper bags have little resistance properties, they are liable to breakage in a thousand different ways, and decidedly liable to moisture. Cottage supplies are best handled in the safest form, and surely this carton or little cotton sack is just the thing. Cardboard constitutes strength and a container of this material offers the ladies at the lake an opportunity to keep their sugar free from moisture and dust; in fact in such condition that it is really a pleasure to handle, no hardening or lumping. The corner of the carton can be snipped off with a knife and scissors, the necessary quantity poured out, and the balance laid away in safety for future use.

During a course of conversation recently with one of the Lantic representatives, the Examiner learned that all these packages are done up by machinery and weighed automatically, not a human hand touching the contents before they reach the home. There's an ocean of satisfaction in this. Besides, the high sweetening properties and sparkling fine granulation make this sugar satisfactory for all purposes, and should be tested by every Peterborough lady.

TOBACCO APPRECIATED

Gunner P. H. Hawke Writes Overseas Tobacco Fund

The local Overseas Club Tobacco Fund have received the following card:

Gentlemen—Your parcel of smokes have just arrived, and I can hardly convey to you the amount of pleasure the boys derive from these gifts. It is sometimes many days before we are able to get within hailing distance of a store, but we are thankful the postman is regular, and our friends at home are kind enough not to forget us.

NORWOOD'S COBBLER OFF WATER WAGGON

John Clark, of Norwood was fined $10 and costs yesterday when he appeared before J. L. Squire, J.P., and Reeve Squire on a charge of being drunk in a public place. Last December sentence for a similar offence was suspended at the request of Norwood citizens. Clark is the village shoemaker and had he been sent to jail the village would have been deprived of its one and only cobbler. But on June 15 the water waggon jolted and John fell off. Yesterday he paid the five and costs.

FAMOUS FOOTBALLER JOINS THE U. S. NAVY

BOSTON, Mass., June 26—Edward M. Mahan of Natick, captain of Harvard's victorious 1916 football team, was accepted to-day for enlistment in the Marine Corps. He will be sent to a training station with other recruits next week. In the fall of 1916 Mr. Mahan coached the football team of the University of California, and since has been employed by the New York Central Railroad at Buffalo, N.Y.

Supplies in France Almost Exhausted

"Supplies, after nearly three years of war, are almost completely exhausted," writes a worker in one of the smaller French hospitals.

"This hospital of 300 beds," writes one, "has been going since the war began. There is much poverty, the men arrive destitute and we have no little to give them. We need pyjamas, socks, and sweaters. The men from the invaded districts can of course, receive no help from home. Three are leaving next week without a cent of money, and scarcely any clothing."

In little Poietiers fifteen hospitals are trying to support their wounded on thiry-five cents a day per man. In peace this would be inadequate with war prices it is pitiable. Coal is $50 a ton, and food brings famine prices, and one nurse says, pathetically: "Could you send food to our wounded We have 175 beds, many of the men, severely wounded coming direct from the front and we are so poor."

U. S. Labor Men on Exemption Boards

WASHINGTON, June 26.—The laboring man of the nation will have a friend at court" on the Appellate exemption Board that sift out the men for America's armies, it was learned to-day.

On each of the district boards that hear exemption claims for occupational reasons, there will be one representative of the labouring man—in most cases a recognized leader of organized labour in the community.

In response to urgent appeals from national labour men the War Department to-day decided to give organized labour representation on each of the higher tribunals.

Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labour, and a member of the Labour Committee of the advisory board of the Council of National Defence, has submitted a list of nominations of prominent local labour leaders to the Appelate tribunals. The list contains the names of several acceptable men in each federal judicial district. Other leaders of labour have sent their suggestions.

With the exception of Maryland, Tennessee and Wisconsin, the personnel of the local exemption boards of the entire country was to-day complete. Telegrams to the governors carried the final draft of the lower boards.

PETERBORO BOY BAGS A HUN FLYER

Flight-Lieut. Leslie Stevens Shoots Down German Flight Commander in a Thrilling Air Battle in France

LINDSAY FLYER KILLED

Flight Lieut. Leslie Stevens, a Peterborough boy on duty in France with the Royal Naval Air Service in a letter to his mother gives some details of the death of Charlie Sutcliffe, a well-known Lindsay aviator. Incidentally Lieut. Stevens mentions a thrilling air battle in which he was engaged. His letter is as follows:

No. 6 Squadron, R.N.A.S., B.E.F.,
France, June 9th

I suppose you are having good summer weather there by now. It has been very warm here beautiful weather, too good for our jobs, for we have to work too hard.

I suppose you will have heard by the time this reaches you that Charlie Sutcliffe is missing or something. Well I could tell you all about it, but I can't as you know. He was out with us that morning. We had a tremendous fight and I saw Charlie go down in a spin, but couldn't follow him all the way. Too many Huns after me. During the scrap I shot down the Huns' Flight Commander. Hope to have a chance to tell you about it, sometime.

At present I am all in. Had a doctor to see me yesterday and am going to take a rest for a while, so don't worry over me. Write soon. Love to all.

Scot in France Tartan is Everywhere

It must be obvious even to the people at home, as, of course, it has been to the enemy; that very much of the hardest battling in the past four weeks on the British front has been entrusted to Scottish troops. Again they have come to the grapple doun and resolute as ever; again they have by their endurance and achievement, added to the martial lustre of their names. Well, may the Boche peculiarly detest them, writes Neil Munro in the London Chronicle. He has had of late samples of every variety of Army tartan, and every bonnet-badge in Scotland, more or less, all the time in front of him, and there are a great many more to come. For gallant deeds from the 9th of April onward, there will go to the North of the Tweed a shoal of battle honours. They have been well won; happier still it is to find that their cost in death and wounds has been considerably lower than in earlier battles which were much less devastating to the enemy.

The Army of Scotland—for it is really, in a sense, an individual and concrete part of the Imperial force—obviously satisfies every demand of the higher commands for a weapon that can be handled with assurance. This trust is something inherently dogged and durable in the soldier of the North now extends to the Territorials and New Army corps as emphatically as to any of the old first line battalions, with whom granite endurance, dash and nerve have been traditional since the earliest times when they marched with England.

The Scotsman has found this confidence in his powers sometimes diminish what he regarded as his fair share of the occasion for rest; but he has found consolation in the stimulating belief that he is, by virtue of his race, regarded peculiarly and officially as "d'elite."

He steps back at intervals from the fighting line with no illusions such as some flaring headlines would foster at home—indeed a little irritable at any suggestion that he is fighting a Boche of diluted spirit—50 under proof, so to speak—on the stubborn line east of Arras. For four weeks he has found the numerical strength, the physique, the resourcefulness, and the moral of the enemy confronting him quite worthy of his respect.

"Ye would think the silly bodies would see they're not a match for us; but, man, they're dour to shift!" said a bombing sergeant from Tayport to me yesterday. "Naebody need tell me they've run oot o' fat in Germany; wherever these chaps were afore they came here they were well wintered."

This wholly admirable disinclination to belittle the Boche and what remains of kick in him I find everywhere after a week spent exclusively among Scots troops who have sampled all varieties of Germans in many battles, on all parts of the line since war began. It is a delightfull instance of our racial caution and foresight; it stiffens us for hours of stress and will give us the more to plume ourselves on in the hour of victory.

Glorious sunshine, warmth, and moonlight nights, following upon the cold, bleak April weather, have added a thousand per cent. to the sense of relaxation with which the Scots alternately come out of the tension of the fighting line for a rest that, though still with its strenuous daily duties, is, as they declare, the best they have since they came to war.

These lines are written from a part of France, where, passing from village to village, camp to camp, regiment to regiment in recent days, I almost felt myself at home, so far at least, the the human aspect was concerned. It has been to the tune of "Johnny Cope" I have walked each morning in a different billet; each night the pipes have played retreat and filled the sauve French landscape with the hum or strider of old airs of Skye and Morven, strange ritefamiliar now to Northern France. A few old native peasantry, men and women, toil unremittingly in the widespread, exquisitely tilled fields, but otherwise the countryside is temporarily Scottish. There are "nane but Heilan' bonnets here," as the old song goes; more tartan is to be seen than all Scotland saw in forty years before the war—the tartan uncovered again, for the khaki apron is meanwhile in abeyance, and is dispensed with even in attack.

It is the accents of Argyll, Aberdeen, Lochaber, Sutherland, Edinburg, Clydesdale, Carrick, and the Borderland one hears upon the roads and throughout the villages; everywhere is "Jock" in every variety and breed of him—dark red and fair, lank or stocky and broad-backed, with a tunic weather-stained, though the buttons shine like gold, and a wonderfully enduring kilt that looks quite recently come from the Q. M. stores, though may have been through two years' battles. Day after day goes "Jock" to school again for a curriculum of arts, crafts and refined accomplishments that will hold him the more quickly to beat the Boche, and so tonic is the air and sunshine and the sense of peace immediately around that he displays a briskness, unweariedness, and intelligence amazed even to the officers who knew before how good a man he was.

"Hey Jock, are ye gladly listed?" lilt the duty pipes each day to the tune of "Blithe, blithe and merry was she!" Here and now there might seem but the cheeriest of answers to the question. Those young Scots, lowland Scots, lowlond and highland, kilted or breeched, who crowd the villages and throng the country roads, play on the green or sing about their tasks, might appear not yet to have realized the nearness beyond the pearly horizon. They might be careful, inexperienced, ardent, with all their trials of courage and endurance still to come. It is not so. They fought in Flanders, at Loos, at Neuve Chapelle, at Festubert, and through the wintry terrors of the Somme. They have faced death and seen it in all the ugliest of its aspects.

BICYCLE RACE FOR LOCAL BOYS ONLY

Open Events Getting a First Class Entry List

Owing to the high class nature of the riders entered in the open five and two mile bicycle races on Monday at the Exhibition Grounds, it is felt that a race in which local boys alone can enter should be put on the programme. The boys here are young and have had no racing experience.

Mr. Banks is arranging that a two mile race, open to boys of Peterborough county only, be added, and good prizes are being obtained.

GOOD ROADS SCHEME FOR ONTARIO COUNTY.

WHITBY, Ont., June 27.—A system of good roads for Ontario County under the scheme of assistance offered by the Provincial government, was adopted to-day by the Ontario County Council, after several years' deliberation and discussion on the subject. Several generations of councillors have argued the matter but not until now has the county body had the initiative to adopt the good roads system, despite the fact that for several seasons the roads through Ontario County have been the worst along the line.

The action of the Council is warmly approved by the majority of people. The council also took up the question of the Oshawa separation by-law, but it was decided to lay it over until the November session. This practically means that Oshawa will remain in the county, and will suspend its negotiations to withdraw.

New York Stock Market

Summary of To-day's Activities on the New York Stock Exchange

Closing stock letter from Bryant, Dunn & Co.:

Stocks showed a good deal of strength early in the day, but with noteworthy exceptions like Studebaker, which continued very weak. The higher level was based on an improving money situation, resulting from large Federal reserve deposits in the local banks and from Washington rumours that prices for steel sold to the Government had been agreed upon and that the figures were entirely satisfactory. Midway of the afternoon, stocks broke quite sharply, led by the rails with a current report that the increase in rates would not be so satisfactory as recently supposed. Union Pacific reacted about two points. At this time Studebaker fell again with a maximum decline of about six points. There was a recovery in the general market as call money rates declined to 3 1-2 p.c. This was the lowest call money in some days. There was some doubt as to the correctness of the rumor affecting steel prices to the Government. It is known that a corps of experts will examine into the matter very carefully and it is hardly likely that a decision can be reached so soon. On the whole, the outlook was better but trading in the Stock market was largely professional. Until the rate decision is handed down it would be risky drawing conclusions. In reference to Studebaker rumours persisted that the dividend may be reduced at the August meeting. Roubles again broke quite sharply with a loss of about 50 points and very slight rally. The stock market offers many good chances for trading. By buying on any moderate setback but using up turns for profits taking.

Address by Dr. Caroline Brown of Toronto — Other Omemee News

OMEMEE, June 28.— Mrs. Comstock, of Peterborough, was the guest of her friend, Miss Edith Robinson, during the past week.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Magee were in Lindsay on business last week.

Mr. Fred Taggart of Port Perry, travelling salesman for the Cockshutt Plow Co., made a business visit to town on Monday.

Miss Shields, who has been in charge of Mr. Charles Ivory's millinery department, has completed her spring and summer season and left for her home at Meaford on Friday last.

Miss Jean Johnston, of Orange Corners, spent the week end in town.

Mr. R. B. Murray is spending a week's vacation in Toronto.

Mr. John Sherin was in Peterborough on business last week.

Mrs. J. N. Thompson has returned to her home in Toronto after an extended visit with friends in town.

Mrs. Walker and son, of Coldwater, are the guests of the former's uncle, Mr. William Curry.

Miss Maye Fee was a visitor to Lindsay on Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Henderson, of Cavan, motored to town the beginning of the week.

Mr. A. E. Craig, of Cambray, was in town on business last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nugent are visiting their son, Mr. Fred Nugent, of Lindsay.

Mr. J. Weir was a visitor to Toronto during the past week.

Mrs. E. White is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Byers, of Toronto.

Mr. J. G. Shepard, of Peterborough, was in town on business last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson and son, of New Mexico, are visiting relatives in this vicinity, having motored all the way, a distance of about 900 miles.

Mrs. W. Rutherford was the guest of Peterborough friends last week.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Slugrett, Mrs. J. Wylie and Mr. L. Wilson motored to Toronto on Friday last.

Mr. P. A. Ferguson of Peterborough motored to town on Monday.

Rev. Mr. Stainton of Bethany spent the week-end in town.

Mrs. Sheckleton is the guest of her sister, Miss S. Magill.

Messrs. Arthur and Wm. MaCrea motored to town from Toronto on Friday and were the guests of their sister, Mrs. R. J. Mulligan, over Sunday. Mr. Wm. MaCrea intends going overseas shortly as a Private.

Mr. Cumamings was a visitor to Peterborough during the past week.

The annual picnic under the auspices of the Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. T. J. Parsons on Wednesday last. Dr. Caroline Brown of Toronto, was present and delivered her intellectual and inspiring address on "The Need of the Hour." Vocal solos by Misses Helen Johnson and Jane Earle were also enjoyed. In spite of the inclement weather about sixty members and friends were present, and a pleasant afternoon was spent. The July meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Wilbert Fee.

Mr. J. Johnston of the West, is the guest of his brother, Mr. Robt. Johnston.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Best of Mount Pleasant, were visitors in town on Tuesday.

The Masons attended divine service at the Presbyterian Church on Sunday evening. The preacher was Rev. Mr. McCullough of Port Hope, who is also a member of the Masonic Order, and he delivered a very interesting and helpful address to a large and attentive congregation. The Masons only numbered twenty-seven; quite a shortage when compared with the number that attended last year.

At the conclusion of the service the brethern marched back to their hall.

WILL NOT CELEBRATE.

BROCKVILLE, June 27. — At a largely attended meeting of L.O.L. No. 1, it was decided for economic reasons and conditions prevailing on account of the war, not to celebrate the 12th of July this year in a body.

A TALE OF TWO CITIES AT THE ROYAL

Last evening a good house greeted the picture at the Royal entitled "A Tale of Two Cities," which will be shown to-night for the last time. The story is as follows:

Charles Darnay and Sidney Carton are both in love with Lucie Manette, the beautiful daughter of Dr. Alexandre Manette, a French Doctor, who had been imprisoned in France for ten years and was a fugitive in England. Darnay, who was a French aristocrat, had renounced his title and left for England. He is saved from a spy's death by Sidney Carton, who resembles him to a marked degree. Darnay wins Lucie while Carton worships her from afar. The French Revolution starts and Darnay returns to France, where he is made a prisoner and sentenced to death. Carton, by a subterfuge, smuggles Darnay ont of prison, while he remains in his stead. Carton pays the death penalty so that he could return to the woman he loved, the man she loved.

A girl's idea of sweetness is about equally divided between love's young dream and mixed chocolates.

RUNNING AWAY FROM WORLD'S CHAMPIONS

Chicago Steals Detroit Twice, while Boston Loses to the Senators.

CHICAGO, June 27.—Tyrus Cobb continued to set the pace for safe hitting in consecutive games to-day in the American League, when he added two more to his string. His record now stands at 24 games, in which he has made one or more hits. He obtained one hit in each game of the double-header here, which his club lost to Chicago. The scores were 5 to 2 and 3 to 2. Chicago won the first game by bunching hits in the fourth. Murphy's double while batting in a pinch, gave Chicago the second game when two runs scored on it. Scores:

VILLA MAKES OFF WITH GRAIN CROP

Waits Until Carranza Government Harvests Crop, Then Takes Wheat For Bandit Army.

EL PASO, June 26.—After the Carranza government had supervised the harvesting of the wheat crop in the Conchos valley, of Chihuahua State, Francisco Villa and his bandits captured the ranches and confiscated all the grain. This information was received here to-day by United States government agents.

Practically the entire harvest of the Conchos Valley one of the richest in Mexico ,was confiscated by the bandit leader for his forces. The Carranza troops were left with practically no food after they had planted and harvested the crops. Villa was reported to-day as located on the Santa Gertrudis ranch with 2,500 men.

PRINTERS WIN TWO FROM EAST CITY

Last night the Printers took two of three games from East City in a League fixture. Both teams were a little off colour but the East City five took the first game from the Printers by a good margin, the Printers coming back and winning the next two games. Matthews had high count for East City with a 426 total, while Moore was high for the Printers with a total of 418.

SIR SAM REAFFIRMS IT

Insists That Mark Irish Tried to Restrain Recruiting.

OTTAWA, June 27.—In the House this afternoon Sir Sam Hughes, on a question of privilege, read a telegram from Mark H Irish, of the Imperial Munitions Board, denying that he had ever sought to restrain recruiting in the interests of the munitions industry. Sir Sam had made that statement in a recent speech in the House. He recalled it to-day, declaring that Mr. Irish had approached him "not once, but twenty times, until I told him he was a perfect nuisance."

How Britain Treats Interned Germans

FAMILIES GO TO SEE THEM

Men Play Billiards or Tennis and Work in Shops of Their Own Creation.

LONDON, June 27.—A Sergeant of police, three or four policemen, and a little barbed wire are sufficient to keep under complete restraint in one of the northern districts of London 750 German civilians. For two years Islington workhouse has been used as an internment camp, and in spite of the entire absence of sentries with loaded rifles and other proofs of military vigilance Sir Frederick L. Halliday, the camp commandant, is absolutely satisfied that none of them will try to escape.

This result has been obtained by subjecting the Germans to the minimum of discipline consistent with safe keeping and by permitting them to see at stated intervals their wives and families. They are all the husbands of British wives and many of them have lived in England for many years, and they appreciate the advantage of seeing their people once a week.

"If a man is troublesome, we turn him out of the camp," said Sir Frederick. They know if they are sent to the Isle of Man they will be cut off from their families, and the thought of that is quite sufficient to keep them on their best behaviour. Besides, I always think it humanizes them to have the women and children coming around the place."

The Government was fortunate when the internment of Germans became necessary—as much for their own safety after the Lusitania riots as for fear of any damage they might do—to be able to use a building like the Islington Workhouse and Infirmary. It was already fitted up with beds with comfortable spring mattresses, with a roomy kitchen, dining hall, and so on, and the Germans were installed in it with very few special arrangements.

Once in it the internal direction is left very much to the inmates. They are divided into squads and each squad has its own elected captain. The captains choose a chief captain, and he is the accredited representative of the inmates with the commandant. As it so happens he is a man who for seventeen years was the manager of one of London's big railroad hotels and receives a pension from a large British corporation.

He has used his experience in the management of the workhouse. The Government ration, which now is kept strictly within the limits prescribed for the general population by the Fod Controller, is handed over to him, and he sees that it is cooked in the German fashion and varied as far as possible. He, too, arranges for the drafting of newcomers into a squad, and arranges for those of a better social grade to consort with their fellows on the payment of certain sums for the privileges.

The interned, too, manage the workshops. These are absolutely voluntary, as the Government has no right, under the Hague Convention, to set interned civilians to work and puts no pressure on them to do anything. But, as a matter of fact, these civilians are very glad to get the chance to earn a little, and the authorities are equally pleased to see them busy. So there are brush-making and carpenter shops, rooms where crutches and various kinds of surgical scissors and implements are turned out, a laboratory where the most delicate of scientific glassware is manufactured. This last has been accomplished under difficulties, as the apparatus has, in a large measure had to be improvised, but the head of the workshop picked out one curious corkscrew shaped glass vessel and remarked with pride:

"This has to stand the test of a plunge into brine 30 degrees below zero and then to heat 100 degrees above, so we have to make it strong."

The interned civilians keep their own quarters clean and pay some of their number to perform such services as waiting at table. It is noticeable that the commandant makes a special point of that waiting, as he said, speaking with a long experience of prisons in India, that nothing is so terrible for the men under restraint as the everlasting standing in line.

The bedrooms hold from ten to fourteen beds, and each man has a share in a living room. Everything is, of course, of the plainest, but the men may play cards or chess, read the newspapers, and amuse themselves in any quiet way. Naturally, in a German camp there is a singing society and instrumental music. There is also a common recreation room, where are several billiard tables, hired by the men themselves, as well as gymnastic apparatus. There may soon also be moving-picture shows, as the ingenuity of one of the inmates has adapted the electric light to the cinematograph, and so the dangers of the ordinary acetylene gas may be overcome.

Naturally, the inmates are dissatisfied and probably all of them, in spite of their long sojourn in England, are hoping for the victory of Germany. It is noticeable, however, how many of them are studying Spanish, for they realise, the commandant said, that England is not likely to be healthy for them when the war is over, and they are looking to South America as a refuge.

Still, as they sat in the sunshine in the courtyards or played tennis on very fair dirt courts, and still more, as they greeted their families in the open space before the main building of the workhouse, they looked well enough off. They were confined and they resented it, but as long as they conducted themselves quietly and obeyed the obviously necessary regulations they were left to their own devices. The respect with which they treated the commandant at least showed that from him they had received every consideration.

Dr. Willoughby Is Held in Hamilton

HAMILTON, June 27.—"Captain" Percy Seymour De Willoughby who is wanted on charges of fraud in the United States and England, is still in Barton Street Jail. Meanwhile a legal battle is being waged to prevent his deportation to the United States by the Canadian immigration authorities as ordered last evening by Inspector Mitchell, of Ottawa. De Willoughby, at the enquiry, expressed his willingness to go back to England to stand trial, but hesitated at the idea of being deported to the United States. He declared that in England he had first faced a charge of fraud which had been later reduced to one of obtaining a commission by false pretences. T. R. Sloan, who is acting as counsel for de Willoughby, obtained Inspector Mitchell's permission to write to the Minister of the Interior, Hon. W. J. Roche, regarding the prisoner's desire to go back to Eengland. The inspector and the lawyer sens their reports to Ottawa yesterday and a reply is expected to day. If the reply is favourable to the accused, de Willoughby will leave for England, where he may be called upon later to face extradition proceedings. The enquiry Monday revealed the fact that de Willoughby had lived in Canada 2 1-2 years before the outbreak of the war. Had he remained six months more he would have been legally entitled to Canadian domicile, and could not be deported to the United States. He was employed by the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Montreal, and in other banks throughout the Canadian West. His seventeen-year-old wife, with whom he eloped only two weeks ago, has apparently taken no interest in her husband's arrest, as no word has been received from Syracuse, the home town of the girl.

ANNIVERSARY SERVICES HELD AT HASTINGS

Interesting Services in the Presbyterian Church

HASTINGS, June 27.—The anniversary services in connection with the Presbyterian Church on Sunday last, were well attended. Two excellent addresses were given by Rev. A. Thomson, son of the resident pastor, Rev. D. A. Thomson, while excellent music was rendered by the Church choir. A lawn social was on Monday evening, when a most enjoyable time was spent. Varied refreshments were served on the grounds, and ice cream and homemade candy on sale. Altogether the anniversary services were a success, and great credit is due the Committee of Management for the way in which all the arrangements were carried out.

It becomes our sad duty to chronicle the demise of an aged and respected resident of Asphodel in the person of Mr. Michael Walsh, who had reached the age of 73 years, and who had been in failing health for some time. A very large cortege followed the remains to the R. C. Church, here, on Monday morning, where service was held, after which the body was laid to rest in the church cemetery. To the widow and children is extended the sympathy of the whole community.

The annual excursion of the English Church was held to Peterborough on Thursday last, per steamer Geneva, and was well attended.

Rev. D. A. Thompson spent Sunday in Warkworth, preaching in the Presbyterian church, there.

Reeve Fowlds has returned from County Council, held in Cobourg.

Word has come to town that Pte. C. H. O'Reily has been wounded, and is seriously ill in the hospital, at the front. He is the son of Mr. Jas. O'Reilly of Percy, and his many friends here hope for him a speedy recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. English have returned from an extended visit with friends in Buffalo.

Dr. and Mrs. Sweeney have been visiting in Toronto.

The local Juveniles played a lacrosse game with the Norwood boys on Wednesday last. Score, 5 to 4 in favour of the locals.

Miss Isolde Menges, the gifted violinist, is expected to make her second appearance in the town hall on Monday, July 2nd.

Mr. and Mrs. John Armour of Percy are rejoicing over the birth of a boy.

Mrs. Archie Stewart of Toronto is visiting at the cottage of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Stewart.

Mrs. Staples of Bethany is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Staples of town.

Mrs. Jas. Stevenson and Miss Gladys spent Saturday in Peterborough.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones of the United States, are spending their honeymoon with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jones, town.

Miss Margaret Bailey of Hamilton is holidaying with her parents here.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Robb of Norwood were in town on Sunday.

Rev. Mr. Rolland of Norwood was in town on Monday.

Rev. D. A. Thompson is in Peterborough attending a meeting of the Presbytery.

Miss Carrie Angus of Warkworth was in town on Monday.

Arrangements are complete for a grand celebration here on Dominion Day. A large crowd is expected.

Miss Helen Chapman of Hamilton is home for the midsummer vacation.

FAVOR CONSCRIPTION.

MONTREAL, June 27.—A resolution favoring conscription, was passed by the French-Canadian War Veterans' Association to-day. It will be sent to Premier Borden.

NO FAMINE IN GERMANY.

Returning Doctors Say, However, People Have Been Hard Hit.

NEW YORK, June 27.—Dr. Frederick Hagler, of St. Louis and Dr. Robert Bowen of Chicago, who returned yestreday after serving for several months in one of the German base hospitals on the eastern front, said that Germany was not facing a famine. The people had been hard hit by the war, they said, and could not obtain rubber and many other things in common use under normal conditions. Automobiles were running on their wheel rims in the streets, and the military motor trucks were equipped with wire mesh tires.

They had no difficulty in getting out of Germany, the doctors explained, as their passports had been made out prior to America' entry into the war, and their papers were not questioned by the German officials at the northern frontier.

Frank L. Judd, an engineer of Buffalo, who arrived on the same liner from Petrograd, said that the Russian soldiers were beginning to realize that they had to go back to the treiches and fight instead of loafing about the streets in the capital. Transportation was the most serious difficulty the new Government had to contend with, he said. He saw 100,000 tons of food and munitions ready to be sent from Petrograd to the front, but only one half of the goods could be handled on account of the lack of railroad facilities.

OBITUARY

RICHARD CLEGG.

One of Wingham's most prominent citizens, Richard Clegg, answered the last call on Sunday evening. He had been confined to his home since the New Year, having contracted typhoid fever, which, owing to his having heart affection for some time, reduced his constitution, and he gradually sank. Deceased had been a resident of Wingham for twenty years, and was always active wherever the welfare of Wingham was concerned. He was one of those smart and energetic business men whose counsel was always sought on important questions. He is survived by his widow who has the deepest sympathy of a large circle of friends.

The late Mr. Clegg was highly respected by the employees of Walker and Clegg, who showed their esteem by their beautiful floral tribute representing a broken column. Other floral tributes were, a broken wheel, from the Hospital Board; gates ajar, from the Board of Trade; pillow, from Mrs. Clegg; crescent wreath, from the Nurses of the Hospital; anchor from Mr. and Mrs. J. A. MacLean; cross from Mr. and J. A. MacLean; cross from Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Walker basket of flowers from Mrs. Swartz; and also many beautiful sprays from other friends.

At the time of his death he was honorary president of the Board of Trade, and President of the Wingham General Hospital Board. To the latter he gave a great deal of his time and the success of the hospital is largely due to his untiring efforts. He was also a member of St. Paul's Anglican Church and a prominent Liberal.

The funeral was held from his late residence, Patrick street, on Tuesday afternoon to the C.P.R. station, from where the remains were taken to his former home, Peterborough, and interment took place from the home of his brother, Samuel, on Wednesday afternoon. The pall bearers were members of the hospital board, viz.: Dr. Irwin, Dr. Redmond, Dr. Kennedy, C. P. Smith, T. C. King and J. A. MacLean.—The Wingham Advance.

(By William Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 28.—Reduced to the necessity of fighting from the ruins of a burned city, their powerful trenches outside the town having been taken, the Germans' position in Lens became extremely critical this afternoon with fresh British advances. The Germans blew up a bridge over the Souchez River leading to the city from the outskirts of Avion, now in full possession of the Canadians.

Astride the Lens-Arras railway the Canadians are pressing further forward toward Lens as this cable is written. A portion of the Avion-Mericourt enemy "switch line" has just been captured — and with very light losses to the British.

The enemy in the coal mines between the forks of the Arras-Lens-Drocourt-Lens railways is bitterly resisting the British advance, but the British have the situation well in hand.

JAPAN DESIRES TO HOLD TSING TAO.

TOKIO, June 28.—Japan is making every effort to retain for herself the former German colony of Tsing Tao and other former German possessions in South Sea Islands, Viscount Motono, Foreign Minister, asserted in the Diet to-day. Viscount Motono, who was recalled from Petrograd, where he was Japanese Ambassador, declared that there was no danger of Russia making a separate peace.

RUSSIAN GOVERNMENT STRENGTHENING.

STOCKHOLM, June 28.—Confidence that Russia is "working out her own salvation" was expressed to-day by Emil Vandervelde, the Belgian Socialist and Cabinet member, on his arrival from Petrograd.

"The Provisional Government's authority is strengthening," he continued.

Social and Personal

Miss Droupe, formerly of the Agricultural College, and whose family moved recently to the city, has taken a position with the Bank of Commerce staff in Peterborough.

Mr. C. C. Parsons leaves this week to spend his vacation on a motor trip through the Province.

Mrs. W. A. Sanderson, Mrs. John Birnie and Miss Lenore Sanderson left this morning to spend the week end at their summer cottage "Belmont," Stony Lake.

Mrs. Norman Marr, Hunter street, left to-day to spend a month's vacation with her parents in London.

Miss Charlotte Ferguson left this week for a three-weeks' vacation in Hamilton.

Mr. F. M. Dela Fosse is in Lindsay to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. John Monerief announce the engagement of their only daughter, Hazel Bell, to Mr. Archie H. Beatty of Otonabee, the marriage to take place the first week in July.

Mrs. John A. McCoy, Madoc, announces the engagement of her eldest daughter, Kathleen Allen, to Mr. Frederick S. Brown, B.A., Lakefield, the marriage to take place on July 4th.

The engagement is announced of Delphine Anne (Dell) Baker, youngest daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Baker, to Mr. Leo Egan Rogers, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Rogers, both of Lindsay, Ont. The marriage will take place July 17.

Dr. W. T. Holloway will be out of the city until about the middle of July with friends in Clinton, Ont.

Mrs. T. J. Brooks and Miss Nellie left for Midland this morning to visit her uncle, who is dangerously ill.

Miss Helen McCarthy, Loretto Abbey, Toronto, is spending her vacation in the city.

Mrs. Allan Campbell and children are in the city visiting Mr. and Mrs. Peter Campbell, Hunter street.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St John's church held a most successful picnic on the grounds of Mr. and Mrs. Aylmer's home, Weller street, on Tuesday afternoon.

Rev. Mr. Spencer, curate of His Lordship Bishop Sweeney, Toronto, has been appointed rector of St John's church for the summer.

Mrs. A. H. A. Robinson, 497 Gilmour street, with Masters Arthur and Melville, left the city this morning to spend the summer with relatives at the seashore in her native province, Nova Scotia.

Among the graduate nurses at the Hotel Dieu Hospital, Kingston, was Miss Helen Redmond.

Miss Ada E. Graham has returned to her home in East City, having spent the winter months at Mount McGregor, N.Y.

Miss Marie Lambert, Hastings, is in the city visiting Mrs. Houdre, George street.

Mr. Paul, Montreal, is in the city visiting his mother, Mrs. Paul, Water street.

Mrs. M. Osbourne Lakefield and Miss Angela are in the city to-day visiting Mrs. Browning, Weller street.

Mrs. Arthur Lawless, Lakefield, was a visitor in the city to-day.

Mr. Regan, Dominion Bank, is in Lindsay to-day with the cricket team from Peterborough.

Mr. John R. Osgoode, Montreal, is in the city to-day on business.

Mrs. Herb. Stuart (Miss Grace Lillicrap), has returned to Lakefield to reside.

Mr. Harry Frowde, formerly of the Y.M.C.A., in the city, now a prominent insurance man in Nova Scotia, has been in the city for a short time. Mr. Frowde's parents have sold their home to Mr. Sydney Mitchell and will leave presently to reside in Nova Scotia.

NEWS FRAGMENTS

Three children of the Deline women, who are on their way to the Mercer, were committed to the care of the Children's Aid Society of Belleville this morning.

Henry Kellet Paid Fine

Aversion to Cigarettes

Henry Kellett, of Smith street, was fined $2 in police court this morning on a charge of having assaulted Evarist Heath. This was a case of the equivocation of appearances. A few days ago, Collett saw the plaintiff on the street smoking a cigarette. Supposing that the latter's stature was a register of his age, and therefore that the cigarette habit was an "accomplishment" he should be unaware of rather than actually parading, Collett grabbed the offending "coffin-nail" and threw it on the pavement. Heath picked it up, brushed it off and returned it to his lips. For that he received a cuff on the head, and shortly afterwards the admonition and blow were repeated, this time with a real sting in it. The plaintiff was about to enter a tobacco store, and Collett doubtless felt he was preventing a mere boy from going the befogged way of the smokers. The subsequent charge must have been a surprise to him when he realised that the little fellow he was moved to protect from cigarettes and tobacco stores was well over eighteen, with long "pants" a pipe and all the "savoir faire" of early twenties.

Butter Swindler Held in Stratford?

Chief Thompson believes he has located the man who worked the petty butter swindle through Peterborough and Belleville, for which a local man alleges he was falsely arrested and has entered an action against the local police.

Recently the Stratford police apprehended Clarence Baxter Carter, who is now being held for trial on a charge practically identical with the Peterborough episode. From Carter's record he specializes on the butter game. In 1913 he was sentenced in Bedford, Que., to two years in the St. Vincent de Poul Penitentiary, Montreal, and in 1915 he was fined $20 and sentence suspended in London, Ont. In each of these cases apparently Carter's procedure was similar to that which he employed in Belleville. He 'phoned to the Peterborough Creamery for a shipment of butter to be sent to Belleville, which he received, but disappeared without paying for it.

When Chief Thompson heard of the Stratford case he immediately sent for photographs and other particulars, and from certain information received from Belleville, is almost certain that Carter is the individual who worked the Peterborough Creamery for one case.

GORKY SEES IN SCIENCE CURE FOR RUSSIA'S ILLS

PETROGRAD, June 27. — Maxim Gorky, the author, is taking the lead in a widespread movement for political and economic reconstructon of Russian affairs on the basis of universal application of science to practical life. M. Gorky, in collaboration with other distinguished writers and men of science, is starting "the Free Association for Development and Dissemination of the Positive Sciences."

Since the revolution M. Gorky has been participating actively in politcs as the founder and editor of the extreme democratic newspaper, New Life. As a result of severe work and overstrain he had a return of his old lung complaint in April, but has recovered. The correspondent to-day interviewed the famous writer, who began with the announcement that he was abandoning politics and in future would devote himself to cultural and artistic questions.

"The reason is," he proceeded, "that I have formed the conclusion that the evils from which Russia is suffering have as their first cause our painful backwardness in scientific and technical knowledge. To that may be traced the present political instability of which you hear so much.

"In regard to politics, I will merely deny the stories circulated abroad that I am an adherent of the faction which desires peace even at the price of Russia's destruction. I am accused of being one of the 'Porashents,' a new term of derision applied to that faction. My position merely is that I condemn all wars, and expect the present war will be ended by the combined action of the world's democracies.

"As regards our internal condition, I advise you not to believe the talk about anarchy too readily. Undoubtedly anarchy exists temporarily, but its seeds existed long before the revolution. The fact is that under the conditions of the old regime of despotism, arbitrariness, cruelty, and falsehood, Russians could not develop a sense of order and justice.

"To-day many are disillusioned. I am beginning even to receive letters proclaiming that the revolution is ruining Russia. This querulousness is a natural product of our national passivity and is equivalent to crying fire without summoning the fire brigade. We must have a positive constructive scheme for curing our underlying ills. The medicine, I am convinced, is science. Nearly all the evils of our daily life spring from the absence of science.

"Through lack of science half our peasant children die before reaching the age of 5. From the same cause nearly all the peasant women suffer from women's complaints. The muzhiks cultivate the land so badly that the average yield is less than one-fourth the yield obtained in England or Belgium. Conditions in our cities are equally bad. We have no drainage anywhere. Our town soil is poisoned. We are choked with smoke and dust. Town children are rickety, nervous wrecks. Against such evils we need not sterile dreams, but science, technique, machines, efficiency developed industry.

"To assist in bringing this about there should at once be created scientific institutions; for instance, institutes of applied mechanics, chemistry, and biology, and the whole series of bacteriological, hygienic, and general medical institutions. If hereby we cleanse Russia physically and intellectually our anarchy will cease. Those are the ideas underlying my new movement, ideas which led to the foundation of 'The Association for Development and Dissemination of the Positive Sciences.'

"Soon anarchy will be uprooted by order. Believe me, Russia is not lost. I believe firmly in our nation's genuine aspirations to higher civilization. I consider our present troubles transitory and easily curable by means of the steady and fervent application of the two supreme principles—knowledge and work."

Probably many a purchase of farm implements has been postponed in the hope that price would be lowered before the necessity for their use became acute. All evidences point to such practice as dangerous procrastination.

The Capture of Lens by the British Only a Matter of Hours

Germans Expected To Announce Strategic Retreat — Canada in Forefront — The New German Line — Lens in Ruins

LONDON, June 29.—How much of a "strategic retreat" the Germans will announce after the fall of Lens, was occupying military strategists to-day, the fall of the city being accepted as a foregone conclusion. It was conceded that there will probably be some desperate fighting, prolonged over a number of days, before the coal metropolis succumbs to the British attacks, but reports to-day of further "bites" into the Teuton's positions west and south in the suburbs of the city, indicate steady progress. The belief here is that with Lens gone, Field Marshal Hindenburg will stage another "retreat to prepared positions along a line running roughly from Zonnebeke (fifteen miles north of Lille) down to in front of Lille thence to Cravin and connecting with the famous Drocourt "witch line" in front of Douai Cambrai and St. Quentin. From the Drocourt line south the Germans would continue over practically their present front.

The suggested German withdrawal to the north, however, would, it was estimated, release more than one hundred and fifty square miles of Belgian and French territory to the allies. The retreat would probably be explained away to the German people on the excuse that it would "straighten out the German lines." It would, without a doubt, since the lines around Lens have been broken by the British assaults of Vimy ridge and of Messines into an exceedingly jagged series of twists. Lens was reported to-day practically in ruins from both the German scheme of destruction and of the shells from the fighting forces on both sides.

U. S. EXPERTS SAY THAT FUEL FAMINE IS POSSIBLE

Must Have an Immediate Redistribution of Cars To Supply Demands of Miners—Coal Price Reduction Means Big Saving

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Fuel famine and untold suffering among the poor of the country is certain this winter unless the railways supply cars for coal shipment, according to testimony offered before the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission to-day. Blame was laid at the door of the railroads. C. E. Maurer, Cleveland, member of the Coal Committee of the Council of National Defence, and W. B. Colver, member of the Federal Trade Commission, both declared there must be an immediate redistribution of cars so as to supply the demands of the mines.

"The Federal Trade Commission protests against the use of the term 'car shortage,'" Colver declared. "We don't believe it exists, although there are insufficient cars at the mines. But we don't need new ones. We need the use of the cars we have. Coal cars are now being used to ship steel billets, sand for track work, and automobiles — pleasure cars. Coal cars have been and are being diverted to other uses."

Maurer declared "if we have ample facilities we can cover this country with coal. This will take care of freight prices. If we don't have ample facilities there will be a famine and vast discontent in the country."

There is a waste of about 20 per cent. in the use of railway equipment and rolling stock," Colver said. "The production of coal in this country can be increased 40 per cent., and if this were done there would be no coal famine or excessive coal prices."

Means Big Saving.

Washington, June 28.—The coal operators agreed to the immediate reduction in coal prices at a meeting here to-day after adopting a resolution by which coal prices would be fixed with the aid and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the Federal Trade Commission, and the Committee on Coal Production of the National Defence Council.

About 600,000,000 tons of coal were mined in this country last year, and Secretary of the Interior Lane, who has earnestly urged a reduction, believes that the saving to the American people will be enormous.

Creation of a national association of coal operators, with a central bureau at Washington for standardizing statistical and other information relating to coal production, marketing, and other matters was agreed to by the conference. It will serve as an intermediary for information between the coal operators and the government.

Use Wood Instead of Coal.

Regina, June 28.—That it will be impossible to secure a sufficient supply of coal to meet the requirements of this Province during the coming winter, even if all the Alberta coal mines are to resume operations at once, and that citizens should use wood in the early fall months and at all other times when weather conditions permit, are the outstanding facts contained in the report issued by Thomas M. Molloy, secretary of the government Bureau of Labour.

British Tactics in West a Perplexing Puzzle to Berlin Military Writers

Agree in Believing That General Haig Is Preparing Another Big Offensive, but Say They Are Uncertain Where the Next Blow Will Fall

THE RUSSIAN SITUATION

COPENHAGEN, Friday 29.—German military writers, with enlightenment furnished to them by the War Press Bureau, express the opinion that the British are preparing a new offensive, but Field Marshal Haig's tactics in striking now here and now there along the British front leave them in uncertainty as to the section on which the blow will fall.

Captain von Salamann writes in the Vossische Zeitung that the feints of the British commander in the last week evidently were to cover a regrouping of troops and a surprise attack which probably will be made like the Wytschaete offensive against a narrow front with an extraordinary heavy concentration of artillery and infantry. He believes the attack may come north of Ypres.

Lieutenant General von Ardenne, military critic of the Tageblatt, who has the same facts to go on, makes the guess that the British will strike in the Warneton region, at the southern end of the new defensive line taken up by the Germans after the Wytschaete defeat.

All the critics agree that no serious French offensive is to be expected at present.

General von Ardenne also declares a Russian offensive is entirely impossible a this time. He bases his opinion on contemptuously scathing criticism on the Russian revolution, its leaders and its troops, which is strangely out of keeping with the usually flattering references of the Tageblatt to the new Russia.

The General dismisses the convention of Workmen's and Soldiers' Delegates, which decreed an offensive, as "a meeting swayed by gold and alcohol," which was guilty of false pretenses in assuming to speak in the name of the Russian people. He says the army is impregnated with mutiny and disaffection and has been reduced to half its original numbers by desertions and illness; that officers are murdered, and that the inauguration of an offensive is beyond its power, even should the soldiers wish it.

MILKED COW IN BATTLE.

Women in Polok, in Serbian Mountains, Chased Bulgars with Stick.

Herbert Corey, writing in The National Geographic Magazine, says:

"Polok is hardly a hamlet. It is just a huddle of stone huts, stained by the ages, each crowned with a blackened and disheveled thatch. For weeks the Serbs attacked Chuke Mountain, in a dimple of whose shoulder Polok rests. Each day the village had been under bombardment. The artillery observers from their high posts could see a lone old woman going about her business. No other peasants were seen in Polok; but she milked her cows and drove them to water as though peace reigned in the land. Once she was seen chasing a group of Bulgarian soldiers with a stick as though they were a parcel of mischievous boys.

"Twice the hamlet was taken in hand-to-hand fighting and lost again. The third time the Serbs held it.

"The old woman picked her way down the cluttered hillside past the dead men and the wounded and through the shell holes and amid the ruins of the other huts until she found the officer commanding.

"'And who is to pay me for my cow?' she asked. 'What have I do with your war? I want pay for my cow that is dead.'"

Clergyman Has Recovered

WAS UNABLE TO FILL APPOINTMENTS AND GREATLY DISCOURAGED BY CONTINUED ILL HEALTH.

GANANOQUE, Ont., June — The many friends of Rev. George Alton are pleased to learn of his recovery after a long period of ill-health, from biliousness, stomach troubles, and severe headaches.

Mr. Alton had become very much discouraged over his inability to obtain relief, and thought he would have to quit the ministry, when fortunately he read about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and began their use. He tells the particulars of his case in this interesting letter:

Rev. George Alton, Gananoque, Ont., writes: "I had been suffering from bilious attacks for four years. I was very weak, had headaches, and my stomach was so bad that I could hardly eat anything without being troubled by it. I had tried many cures, herbs, pills and salts, and was under the doctor's care for some time but instead of getting better I seemed to get weaker. I was unable to fulfill my appointments on Sabbath, and had to secure help. I used to take dizzy spells and could not walk across the floor straight. I had almost given up all hope and my wife said that if I did not get better we would have to quit the work of the ministry. However, in looking over the 'British Whig,' the well known Kingston paper, I saw Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver pills had helped others who were troubled as I was. I resolved to give these pills a trial, and I must say that in a short time I obtained relief. I continued taking them for some time and now I am able to resume my work again. From the benefit I have obtained from these pills, I would recommend them to all who suffer as I did."

Rev. C. Cunningham, 124 First avenue, Toronto: "This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Rev. George Alton, of Gananoque, and believe his statement with reference to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to be true and correct."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25c a box, 5 for $1.00, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EX-CONVICT A BATTLE HERO.

Man From Siberia, by Bravery, Inspired Division to take Offensive.

PETROGRAD, June 28.—The hero of the army in the woody Carpathians is a former convict from Siberia who, by his example, inspired an attack by forces which heretofore had obdurately refused to charge.

The ex-convict, whose rank is sergeant, led fifty volunteers in a rush on a German blindage. The attacking party, confused by heavy fire, wavered, whereupon the sergeant alone climbed a breastwork and hurled a bomb among the enemy. Attacked by three Germans, he sabred and shot two of them. Then, with only eighteen followers, several stronkly-held blindages were rushed. This produced general panic among the enemy, and resulted in the capture of many prisoners.

The sergeant was given an officer's commission, two regiments invited him to take command and the whole of his division resolved immediately to participate in an offensive.

Collector—"But you said you would pay me if I came to-day." Mr. Bilfey—"Well, my friend, you know how it is—the best of us sometimes say things that we are sorry for."

Cattle Trade Dull and Prices Lower

Union Stock Yards—Receipts, 44 cars, with 385 cattle, 139 calves, 1,104 hogs, and 178 sheep and lambs.

The market was extremely dull and slow to-day, the demand for butcher cattle apparently almost down to zero. There were a few transactions at prices averaging about 25 cents lower than yesterday, but quite a few loads were left over, holders failing to secure bids. Butcher cows and bulls were also in the not-wanted class, and bid prices were 75 cents to $1 lower than earlier in the week.

Calves and sheep and lambs were in slower demand, with prices easier all round.

The exception to the general tone of the market was the hog market. This has steadily strengthened during the week, until prices to-day had again advanced to $16.25 fed and watered, or 25 cents over yesterday's price. While this was the general quotation, a few lots sold higher, it was said up to $16.50 fed.

Dunn and Levack sold 70 calves, $11 to $15; 20 lambs, $14 to $14.50; 15 sheep, $7 to $8; butchers' steers and heifers, $10 to $11; cows, $7.50 to $8.50; bulls, $8 to $9.75.

J. Dingle (Gunn's Limited) bought 200 hogs, $16.25, fed; 30 calves, $14.50 to $15; light sheep, $9.50.

Rice and Whaley sold: Butcher steers and heifers, $10 to $11; cows, $7.50 to $8.75; bulls $7.50 to $9; 1 bull, choice, $10.25.

Swift Canadian Co., bought 50 butcher cattle, $10 to $11; cows $8.50 to $9.50.

C. McCurdy bought 1 load butchers 950 lbs., $11.

Ben Kirk (Harrie Abattoir), bought 125 hogs, fed and watered, $16.25.

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

CHAPTER VII.

"ALARUMS AND EXCURSIONS."

The inquest was surprisingly tame after the stirring events which had led up to it. Indeed save for two incidents, the proceedings were almost dull.

The coroner, a Knoleworth solicitor named Belcher, prided himself on conducting this cause celebre with as little ostentation as he would have displayed over an ordinary inquiry. Messrs. Siddle, Elkin, Tomlin and Hobbs, with eight other local tradesmen and farmers, formed the jurors, and the chemist was promptly elected foreman; no witnesses were ordered out of court; the formalities of "swearing in" the jury and "viewing" the body were carried through rapidly. Almost before Grant had time to assimilate these details Superintendent Fowler, who marshalled the evidence, called his name. The coroner's officer tendered him a well-thumbed Bible, while the coroner himself administered the oath.

Grant eyed the somewhat soiled volume, and opened it before putting it to his lips. The action probably did not please the jury. Elkin nudged Tomlin and sniggered at the rest of colleagues, as much as to say, "What did I tell you? The cheek of him!"

Elkin, by the way looked ill. When his interest flagged for an instant, his haggard aspect became more noticeable.

Ingerman was there, of course. Furneaux sat beside Mr. Fowler. A stranger, whom Grant did not recognize, proved to be the County Chief Constable. There was a strong muster of police, and the representatives of the press completely monopolized the scanty accommodation for the public. To Grant's relief, Doris Martin was not in attendance.

He told the simple facts of the finding of Adelaide Melhuish's corpse. A harmless question by the coroner, evoked the first "scene," which set the reporters' pencils busy.

"Did you recognise the body?" inquired Mr. Belcher.

"I did."

"Then you can give the jury her name?"

Before Grant could answer, Ingerman sprang up, his sallow face livid with passion.

"I protest, sir, against this man being permitted to identify my wife," he said.

He was either deeply moved, or proved himself an excellent actor. His flute like voice vibrated with an intense emotion. Thus might Mark Antony have spoken when vowing that Brutus was an honorable man.

"Who are you?" demanded the coroner sharply.

"Isidor George Ingerman, husband of the deceased lady," came the clear-toned reply.

"Well, sit down, sir, and do not interrupt the court again," said the coroner.

"I demand, sir, that you note my protest."

"Sit down! Were you any other person I would have you removed. As it is, I am prepared to regard your feelings to the extent of explaining that the witness is not identifying the body but relating a fact within his own knowledge."

Ingerman bowed, and resumed his seat.

For some reason, Grant stared blankly at Furneaux. The latter did not meet his glance, but put a finger on those thin lips. It might, or might not, be a warning to repress any retort that he had in mind. At any rate, obeying a nod from the coroner, he merely said:

"She was a well known actress, Miss Adelaide Melhuish."

Mr. Belcher's pen hesitated a little. Then it scratched on. Undoubtedly, he was himself exorcising the restraint he meant to impose on others.

"You are quite sure?" he said after a pause.

"Quite."

"Thank you, Mr. Grant. Wait here until you sign your disposition. Of course you are aware that this inquiry will stand adjourned, and the whole matter will be gone into fully at a later date."

"So I have been informed, sir."

Ingerman was the next witness. He, like a good democrat, kissed the cover of the Bible. The coroner began by giving him some good advice. This is a purely formal inquiry, to permit of a death certificate being issued. You will oblige me therefore by answering my questions without introducing any extraneous subject."

Ingerman adhered to these instructions. Having already shot a carefully prepared bolt, he meant avoiding any further conflict with the authorities. His evidence was brief and to the point. The deceased was his wife. They were married at a London registrar's office on a given date, six years ago. His wife acted at the journalists's tact. "I'll order tea to be got ready while you are taking your pictures. By the way, what sort of a detective is Mr. Charles F. Furneaux?"

"A pocket marvel," was the enthusiastic answer. "Haven't you heard of him before? Well, you wouldn't, unless you followed famous cases professionally. He seldom appears in the courts—generally manages to wriggle out of givin direct evidence. But I've never known him to fail. He either hangs his man or drives him to commit suicide. If I committed a crime and was told that Furneaux was after me, I'd own up and save trouble, because I wouldn't have the ghost of a chance of winning clear."

"He strikes one as too flippant for a detective."

"Yes. Lots of people have thought thought, and they're either disappearing in quicklime beneath some corridor of a prison, or doing time at Portland. I wonder if Winter also is coming down on this job?"

"Who is Winter?"

The Chief Inspector at the 'Yard. A big, cheerful-looking fellow—from his appearance might be a gentleman farmer and J.P., wit ha taste for horses and greyhounds. He and Furneaux are called the Big 'Un and the Little 'Un, and each is most unlike like the average detective. But Heaven help any wrong-doer they set out to trail! They'll get him, as sure as God made little apples."

under her maiden name. There was no family.

The court was well lighted by four long windows in the eastern wall, which each witness faced, so Grant was free to study his avowed enemy at leisure. He thought he made out a crafty underlook in Ingerman which he had failed to notice the previous night. That slow, smooth voice seemed to weight each syllable. Such a man would never blurt out an unconsidered admission. The subtle malignancy of that well-timed outburst was proof positive in that respect.

The jury apparently attached much weight to his words. On some faces there was an expectancy which merged into marked disappointment when his evidence came to an end. The foreman alone displayed the judicial attitude warranted by the oath he had taken. Somehow Grant had faith in Siddle. The man looked intellectual. When spoken to in his shop his manner was invariably reserved. But that was his general repute in Steynholme—a quiet uninterfering person, who had come to the village a young man, yet had never really entered into its life. For instance, he neither held nor would accept any public office. At first, people wondered how he contrived to eke out a living, but this puzzle was solved by his admitted possession of a small annuity.

Dr. Foxton, general practitioner, who held undisputed sway in the district, told how he had conducted an autopsy on the body of the deceased. He found a deep, incised wound on the back of the skull, a wound which would have caused death in any event. The instrument used must have been a heavy and blunt one. Miss Melhuish was dead or dying when thrown into the river. The body was well nourished, and the vital organs sound. Undoubtedly she had been murdered.

Bates followed, and evoked a snigger by the outspokenness of blunt Sussex.

"I hauled 'un in," he said, "an' I knew it wur a dead 'un by the feel of the rope."

The coroner was not curious. He merely wished to put on record the time and manner in which Mr. Grant summoned assistance.

Then P. C. Robinson entered the box, and contrived to bring about the second "incident."

He told how, "from information received," he went to The Hollies and found Mr. Grant standing near the river with a dead body at his feet.

"One side of Mr. Grant's face was covered with blood!" he went on.

If the policeman was minded to create a sensation, he certainly succeeded. A slight hum ran through the court, and then all present seemed to restrain their breathing lest a word of the evidence should be lost. The mention of "blood" in a murder case was a more adroit dodge than Robinson himself guessed, perhaps. Few of his hearers troubled to reflect that a smudge of fresh gore on Grant's cheek could hardly have any bearing on the death of a woman whose body had admittedly lain all night in the river. It sufficed that Robinson had introduced a touch of the right color into the inquiry. Even the coroner was worried.

"Well?" he said testily.

"I took down his statement, sir," said the witness, well knowing that he had wiped off Grant's morning score in the matter of Bush Walk.

"Never mind his statement. That must await the adjourned hearing. What did you do with the body."

"Took it to the stable of the Hare and Hounds, sir."

"Where it was viewed recently by the jury?"

"Yes, sir."

"It is the body identified by Mr. Ingerman as that of his wife?"

"Yes, sir."

"That will do.....Superintendent Fowler, will this day week at ten o'clock suit you?"

"Yes, sir," said the Superintendent.

"Then the inquest stands adjourned until that day and hour. Gentlemen of the jury, you must be here punctually."

"Can't we ask any questions?" cried Elkin, in an injured tone.

"No; you cannot," snapped the coroner emphatically.

After a few formalities, which included the reading and the signing of the depositions, the courthouse emptied. The whole thing was over in half an hour. Grant determined to have a word with the representative of Scotland Yard, went openly to Furneaux, and asked him to come to The Hollies, and join him in a cup of tea.

"No" was the curt answer. "I'm busy; I'll see you later."

HAD AWFUL ATTACKS OF HEART TROUBLE
For 5 or 6 Years

Diseases and disorders of the heart and nervous system have become frightfully prevalent of late years.
One can scarcely pick up a paper but he will find recorded instances of sudden deaths through heart failure, or of prominent men and women unable to prosecute their ordinary business or profession on account of a breaking down of the nervous system.
We do not desire to unnecessarily alarm anyone, but to sound a word of warning.
When the heart begins to beat irregularly, palpitates and throbs, has shooting pains through it, it is time to stop and think.
To all sufferers from heart and nerve troubles Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills can give prompt and permanent relief.
Mrs. Frank Arseneau, Newcastle, N. B., writes: "I had awful attacks of heart trouble for the past five or six years, and as I had tried many kinds of medicine without getting any better I decided to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial, and to my surprise I found ease from the second dose. I continued taking them until I had used six boxes, and now I feel as well as can be.
"At the present time my sister is using them for nervousness and finds great comfort by their use."
Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c or three boxes for $1.25 at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

REMAKING HUMAN FACE

How Alien Bone is Absorbed by Wounded Soldier

The work of Dr. H. Morestin, chief of the department of surgery in the region of Paris, in making over human faces was described in an issue of Bibliotheque Universelle. In this rebuilding of faces three things are essential: the outer covering, or skin, a solid substratum to replace any missing sections of bone, and a solid "filler" of some sort to give shape, contour and firmness.

The first presents no difficulty—the grafting of skin either from the patient's own body or that of a friend is a comparatively simple matter, long practised in the case of extensive burns. The grafting of bone is a field in which the surgeon's conquests are newer, but Cafrel, Morestin and others frequently accomplished it and even succeeded in making a successful graft between human and animal bones. In the latter case it is believed that the alien bone serves as support and guide to the human periosteum, which grows and extends itself along the alien bone, finally absorbing it and substituting for it the human bone of its own manufacture. The best results are obtained, however, when the section of bone to be used as a graft is taken from another portion of the patient's body, for which purpose the gristle between the ribs is very commonly employed.

GIRLS DO NOT WASTE

King George's Interesting Inquiries at Munitions Factory

His Majesty, touring a munitions factory, visited the clean, well-appointed canteen, where thousands of quick meals are served piping hot. Here he met the two women whose duty it is to look after the welfare of the girls. He asked many questions, particularly about the food. "Do you find that the girls waste any of their food?" he asked. "Most important of all, do they waste bread?"

"Indeed, your Majesty, they do not," was the quick reply. "They have healthy appetites, and they get plenty to eat, but they are careful with it, and nothing is wasted."

Back at the main gates once more, after over an hour's tour of the works, the King found himself suddenly surrounded by girls who happened to be off duty for the tea interval. They crowded round, cheering enthusiastically. His Majesty laughed and saluted and submitted to being photographed with them. "How happy they all are!" were the King's final words. "They are just like school children!"

Airmen Became Archers

Mediaeval archery is a favorite sport of the aviators of the Lafayette Squadron during the hours when they are not flying over the German lines in search of German "birds." On their flying ground they erected a target and many became experts with the bow and arrow. They vary this sport with periods of target exercise with their machine guns.

Canals of Venice.

The canals of Venice are a part of the Adriatic sea. The city is built on 118 small islands or shoals in the gulf of Venice. These islets are connected by several hundred bridges, and the direction of the canals, of which there are nearly 200, are so formed as to constitute the "highways." Thus it is due to the situation of this city and not to special intention of man that it has canals instead of paved streets.

Durable.

"I want a slogan," said the manufacturer of phonograph records, "something that will convey the idea that our records never wear out."
The advertising man lit a fresh cigarette and thought for eight seconds by the clock.
"How will this do?" he asked. "One of our dance records will outlast the best hardwood dancing floors ever built."

Your Wife's "Allowance" may not expand to meet the increasing cost of foods, but it will buy a sufficient quantity of Shredded Wheat to nourish every member of the family. Two Shredded Wheat Biscuits with milk make a good, nourishing breakfast at a cost of a few cents. All the body-building material in the whole wheat grain. For breakfast or dinner with berries or other fruits.

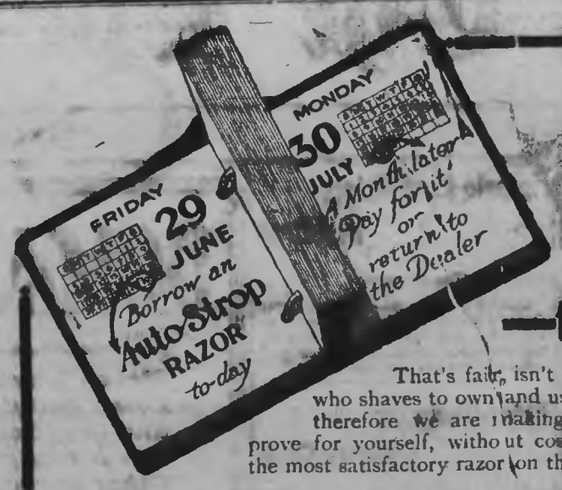
Shave With It —then decide



That's fair, isn't it? We want every man who shaves to own and use an AutoStrop Razor—therefore we are making it possible for you to prove for yourself, without cost or obligation, that it is the most satisfactory razor on the market.

Here's the Plan

Go to your dealer and ask him to loan you an AutoStrop Safety Razor for 30 days. Do not hesitate in doing this as we agree to take back the used razor if you don't like it.

If the AutoStrop gives you a smoother, cleaner, more comfortable shave than the razor you are using pay your dealer $5.00 for it—if for any reason you don't wish to keep it return it in 30 days—there's no other obligation.

PRICES IN PARIS

Butter is $1.30 per Pound in the French Capital

PARIS, June 2.— I prepared this morning's breakfast at home by stealing three lumps of sugar at the Grand cafe yesterday afternoon. (We are on sugar cards in France, not bread cards —yet. Each person has the right to buy three pounds of sugar a month.) It was my sugar. I had a right to use all five lumps which the (well tipped) waiter served with my coffee-creme, price 12 cents, and a microscopic hot brioche (muffin), previously 2 cents at the baker's, 4 cents in cafes, and now "at the price of butter and eggs" but superiorly mixed and baked by the cafe's pastry cook, 8 cents—crisp, luscious, melting, but sadly small! I ate two— 16 cents, plus 12 cents, plus 10 cents tip (we sat an hour), total 38 cents, to steal three lumps of sugar!

If you get brioche-muffins at all tomorrow, they will be 10 or 12 cents each, only in smart cafes (if there!), made in the kitchen with soldier's flour and cornmeal, assimilated to "bread," four days per week. The other days it will be buttered toast (delicious, melting) at 15 cents the slice, or sublime ham sandwiches at 30 cents each. The pastry cooks will shut up (or serve toast and sandwiches), because pies, tarts, cakes, and crackers are henceforth forbidden.

Be sure the pastry cooks will not shut up. They will find a way. They were never so brilliant, crowded, with little glasses of sweet wine, very, very dear.

I had luncheon at the Grand cafe on the fixed price "two dish Herriot meal" at $4.20 a person. My two dishes were: Hors d'oeuvres at pleasure (six served.) I had two halves of hard boiled eggs in mayonnaise (and you'll see, "at the price of eggs," the restaurant must ge them cheaper or lose money!), three slices of very thin cut French bologna sausage, and cucumber salad, with a fairly large carafe of white wine. Also perfect butter at discretion (i.e., do not grab, as some folks do with sugar!).

Mother had good scrambled eggs with mushrooms. (There is a tale of "egg powder" used in Paris restaurants, which I believe to be untrue, unjust. As an experiment I took aumple lamb and eggs, done individually, "on the plate," and they came up superb fresh eggs.) Another party, choosing fish, got a wretched little whiting, fried to nothing.

My "second dish," first class filet of beef, roasted, was garnished with microscopically tiny new peas (from Spain), at once sweet and with a palatably bitterish tang from being cooked too long with fully equal weight of lettuce. A party who preferred a mutton chop got a wretched sampie. (As will ne seen, chops are dear.)

For desert they gave us fresh stewed apples and (to frustrate the tart law) "cooked fruit in crusts"—i.e., tiny piecrust forms filled before your eyes with cooked cherries. Already ingenuity goes far. This Grand cafe $1.20 lunch is considered the best value of fine cookery in Paris, probably done at a loss by patriotism—or else to give a patriotic look to the a la carte gormandizing of the rotunda, where asparagus is 80 cents, a big slice of melon $1, and a portion of turbot 70 cents. Of course you can go higher. At Paillard's recently a dinner for twelve to give godspeed to a beloved French commissioner cost $8 a plate, and we had only chicken-cream, scrambled eggs with morilles mushrooms, barbot (fish) with cream tomato sauce, Leuris asparagus, fruit salad, dessert, coffee and liqueurs, with two quite good wines.

Before tackling household prices I mention a trip to the Orsay-Palace hotel (when our servant married her daughter.) American soldiers will learn what they will pay and enjoy on Paris permissions. Two fine front double rooms (one with large bath) and one almost stuffy single room of the same suite (but all with view of the river) cost $11 a day for three persons. Morning coffee in your bedroom, poor coffee, not hot, but with fine toast and butter, 50 cents. I remember one lunch there for two persons. It was just roast beef for two, vast slices, a magnificent baron, with friend potatoes (served neglected, almost cold), with an order of asparagus for one (sixteen biggish branches, but nothing fine) and apple tarts. I had beer and coffee, mother had tea. Total, $4.50. I remember also that an order of truffled salmon pate cost 80 cents. When I took the same thing home from Potel & Chabot's (only it was chicken and foie gras) we had more piecrust but less meat for $1.20! This, I think, is the best hotel value you can get in Paris. Count on no single room in nice surroundings less than $2.20, on a court or side street.

So now for the joys of housekeeping in Paris at the beginning of the so-called "famine scare."

True, the famine is supposed to be due only in 1918; but thousands of families look far ahead—which makes food hoarding, runs on grocery stores, and higher, higher prices.

My neighbour, for example, has all the shelves of a vast buffet piled with three pound boxes of "breakfast" crackers, which she purchased in panic at 60 cents a pound, best quality, in heavy tin, not to mention French "dollar" sweet cake crackers at 38 cents a pound. She has great stocks of macaroni (20 cents a pound), tins of American syrup (bought at 60 cents each, before the war, 30 cents), pasteurized butter (delicious, at $1.30 a pound, formerly 55 cents), Swiss condensed milk (45 cents, formerly 17 cents), and Canadian cream cheese in glass ($1.30, formerly 40 cents).

Is impressed me. So I went provisioning—to hoard.

At the best English grocery of central Paris there was no macaroni, no breakfast cereals, no crackers, no biscuits. They had sold $300 worth of crackers in the two days following the French government's announcement that all such "biscuiterie" must cease. They had no molasses, no chocolate, no salt codfish, no dried beef or tinned beef. All was gathered in by hoarders!

"But I must have crackers and molasses for the children!" insisted an American grandmother of countes and vicomtes.

"Hasten, madame, in a taxi," said the downtown grocery clerk. "Drive through the more outer sections; let the chaffeur stop at each fair looking grocery. You may pick up something yet."

But I said to myself: "I'll buy a red Dutch cannonball cheese—and hoard it!"

Around in the Rue de Seze is one of the finest creameries of Paris. I found the stock beautiful—the prices also.

They were letting go Gruyere cheese at 82 cents a pound (formerly 34 cents), red Dutch cannonballs at 90 cents (formerly $5 cents), fine Brie, $1 a pound (formerly 40 cents) and the best cream Camemberts, 40 cents each (weighing less than one-half pound).

"You've got the goods," I said.

"All over Paris shops have got the goods," replied the wife of the proprietor very seriously. "We shall continue to have the goods, because France, agricultural land, produces. But, we shall not have enough, for lack of milk, cows, hand work. The prices will go up, up. Many will deny themselves. Monsieur is American? Tell America to send us condensed milk for the coming winter. Tell America to send us pasteurized butter in tins, any kind of butter that will stand the trip, and any quantity of fine lard for cooking. Tell America to send us all the cheese she can—your commonest American cheese is like the red Dutch balls, which we call Chester. It keeps well, sell- well There is next to none in France, and Gruyere lacks entirely. Tell America to send us smoked meats, dried sausages; and don't you make some kind of 'rillettes,' cooked nubbins of pork preserved in grease? It would sell enormously, being cheap. Send anything which will keep. We will buy it—at your own price!"

There were tears in the good woman's eyes: yet she was making money hand over fist!

Behind the Madeleine there is a first class, large provisioning grocery where they sell poultry and game of mornings. (In the afternoon it is cleared away for wonderful fruits). Fat chickens were going from 75 cents to $1.10 a pound, and rabbit 42 cets a pound.

The "primeur" vegetable display was charming. They are "first growths," young, tender, not completely matured, from Spain, Algiers, south France, and later the forced growths of Paris suburbs.

The proprietor spoke with me. He is a great man, in black cutaway coat, creased pants, and immaculate linen; and he just walks around to be agreeable. "Hein? What do you say to those asparagus?"

They were thick French amethyst-opalescent and green topped Italian, sixteen, eighteen pieces to the bunch, at from 30 to 60 cents. Now here was scarcely increase over peace asparagus.

"And all fine vegetables," said the creased pants, "will now be cheaper and more plentiful with the advance of summer. New potatoes (waving a beringed hand), 16 to 20 cents a pound (but previously 4 to 9 cents). Peas in the pod (it is a backward season), 18 cents the pound, and superfine primeurs for 25 cents. The 'mangetout' (eat-pod) pea bean, 12 cents a pound: young, luscious turnips (to cook with duck), 16 cents a pound, and idem bijou carrots (to be boiled in vichy water, served with cream and Young peas) idem, while the artichoke rejoices at 9 cents the piece!"

(Last winter, I remembered, I had eagerly paid $3.50 a bushel for fine quality old potatoes—and the countryman who sold them from his waggon in the streets of Neuilly auburn was hauled up and fined for raising the rates above the then legal maximum, which no longer exists, or is winked at. We shall have it all again next winter).

"Sweet month of June!" I said to the well-dressed proprietor. "These cauliflowers are real bouquets at 30 cents each."

"Humph!" he said. "Did you read about the mob of ladies in Lucerne, Switzerland last week, who roughhoused a peasant in the markets because he wanted 35 cents for a cauliflower? They can get it—in Germany. Talk about French prices!"

Beautiful, once plentiful France! The beautiful food is still here, but thousands cannot, will not pay the price, and have to scrimp. Street markets, co-operative, and barrow retailing are the resource of careful households. "American cold storage meat is delicious," says my neighbour. "Every one says that it is a good, and not much more than half the price of French meat. Look at those munition girls! They eat it. Aren't they saucy and flourishing? I have never been able to taste it."

"Why?"

"Have you? Servants won't buy it because they can't get their commission (the 'son in the franc,' considered regularly the servant's right, and paid by the vendor). Besides, American cold storage meats are sold at legal fixed prices, and the servants can't come saying, 'O, madame, the shoulder (of mutton) is 48 cts to today!' My mother-in-law has American meat half the time; But they pretend it cannot be found in our quarter."

The rich and lazy are persecuted.

Courageous women go down into the street and fight for their young.

A really fine leg of young, fat tender mutton costs at least $1.80, which comes to 60 cents a pound. Mutton chops can be had as cheap as 10 cents each (previously 6 to 7 cents); but you can guess how little meat goes with each. Good beefsteak is from 48 to 55 cents a pound—all this French killed, in market. Ordinary pieces of veal cost 60 cents a pound (36 cents previously); the cheapest pot-a-feu boiling beef (formerly 13 cents) is 36 cents the pound, and ragout mutton 36 cents (previously 15 cents).

"Eggs are awful!" says my neighbour. "Six cents each for boiling eggs, all right. But omelette eggs at 1-2 cents is devil worship!"

"Why make a difference?" I asked. "Both are for eating."

She did not seem to grasp.

"Fresh butter, $1.30 the pound!" he said. "I used to pay 32 cents for better quality. I am eating margarine, 36 cents the pound for table margarine and 32 for kitchen. It's delicious!"

France is on sugar cards. France is on gasoline cards. France is (practically) on coal cards—if you can find the coal. I know of clanuestine buying, no receipt taken or given, at $70 a ton, when one has luck to find a genial vendor. Cakes, crackers, pies are practically taboo.

Ahead, two meatless days a week in sight. Ahead, bread cards——

"And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts saying: A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see that thou hurt not the oil and the wine!"

COLLEGE PATRIOTISM

(New York World).

Certainly the country has reason to be proud of its college youth. It has been somewhat captious if not contemptuous of its "rah-rah" boys in the piping time of peace. But the sight of them on the firing line before their flag got there, and in ambulance work and aviation service, and its new acquaintance with them as ardent patriots eager to serve their country at any sacrifice of life or personal interest must bring a better understanding of their fine Americanism.

Isaiah's call to heroic service. — Isaiah 6.

Golden Text: And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then I said, Here am I; send me. Isa. 6: 8.

1. Verses 1-4. Why did God give this vision to Isaiah?

2. Do you think that any such vision needs repeating? Why?

3. When we have any special Divine illumination what is the advantage of connecting it with some event or putting down the date, as Isaiah seems to have done?

4. Did Isaiah or anybody else ever see with the outward eyes, the actual eternal God, and will he ever be so seen?

5. Verses 1-4. Is there any reason to think that Seraphims or angels are to be seen anywhere in the universe, if we had the media through which to see them?

6. Verse 5. How was it that the sight of the Lord made Isaiah conscious of his sinfulness?

7. What, if any reason, is there to conclude that the use of coarse slang or profanity, proves the user to be an impure man?

8. Which is the more effectual way to reveal to sinners their guilt, to correct them with words, or to live pure lives before them? Why?

9. Verse 5. What effect does the teaching of the spotless purity of Jesus have upon sinful men?

10. Verses 5, 7. What is God's attitude to sinners who are conscious of, and loathe themselves because of their sins?

11. What is the "live coal" with which the Seraphim touched the lips of Isaiah, emblematic of?

12. What actually transpires in a man's spiritual nature, when he comes to God for the pardon of his sins?

13. Verses 6, 7. What reason is there to think that angels, or spirits, have anything to do with the salvation or the spiritual comfort of men and women to-day?

14. Verse 8. What class of men and women does God need and call to be missionaries?

15. What are the indications that God is calling to-day, with a loud voice for missionaries? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by the members of the club.)

16. Verse 8. Is it possible for any person to be in harmony with God who is not willing to be a missionary or to support a missionary, if the Lord should so demand?

17. What reasons are there to conclude that it is the duty of pastors in these days to look out for suitable young men, and call them to missionary work?

18. Verses, 9, 10. The prophet was being sent to a people familiar with God's message, and hardened in sin: what is generally the doom of such people?

19. Verses 9, 10. What is the use of continuing to preach to a gospel-hardened people?

20. When sinners hear the call of God to repentance, and heed it not, what change takes place in them for better or worse?

21. Verses 11-13. It is very trying to preach without results, but is there anything in this story to indicate that in time a faithful servant of God will surely cause some to hear and turn to the Lord?

Lesson for Sunday, July 8, 1917: Ahaz, the faithful king. II Chron. 28.

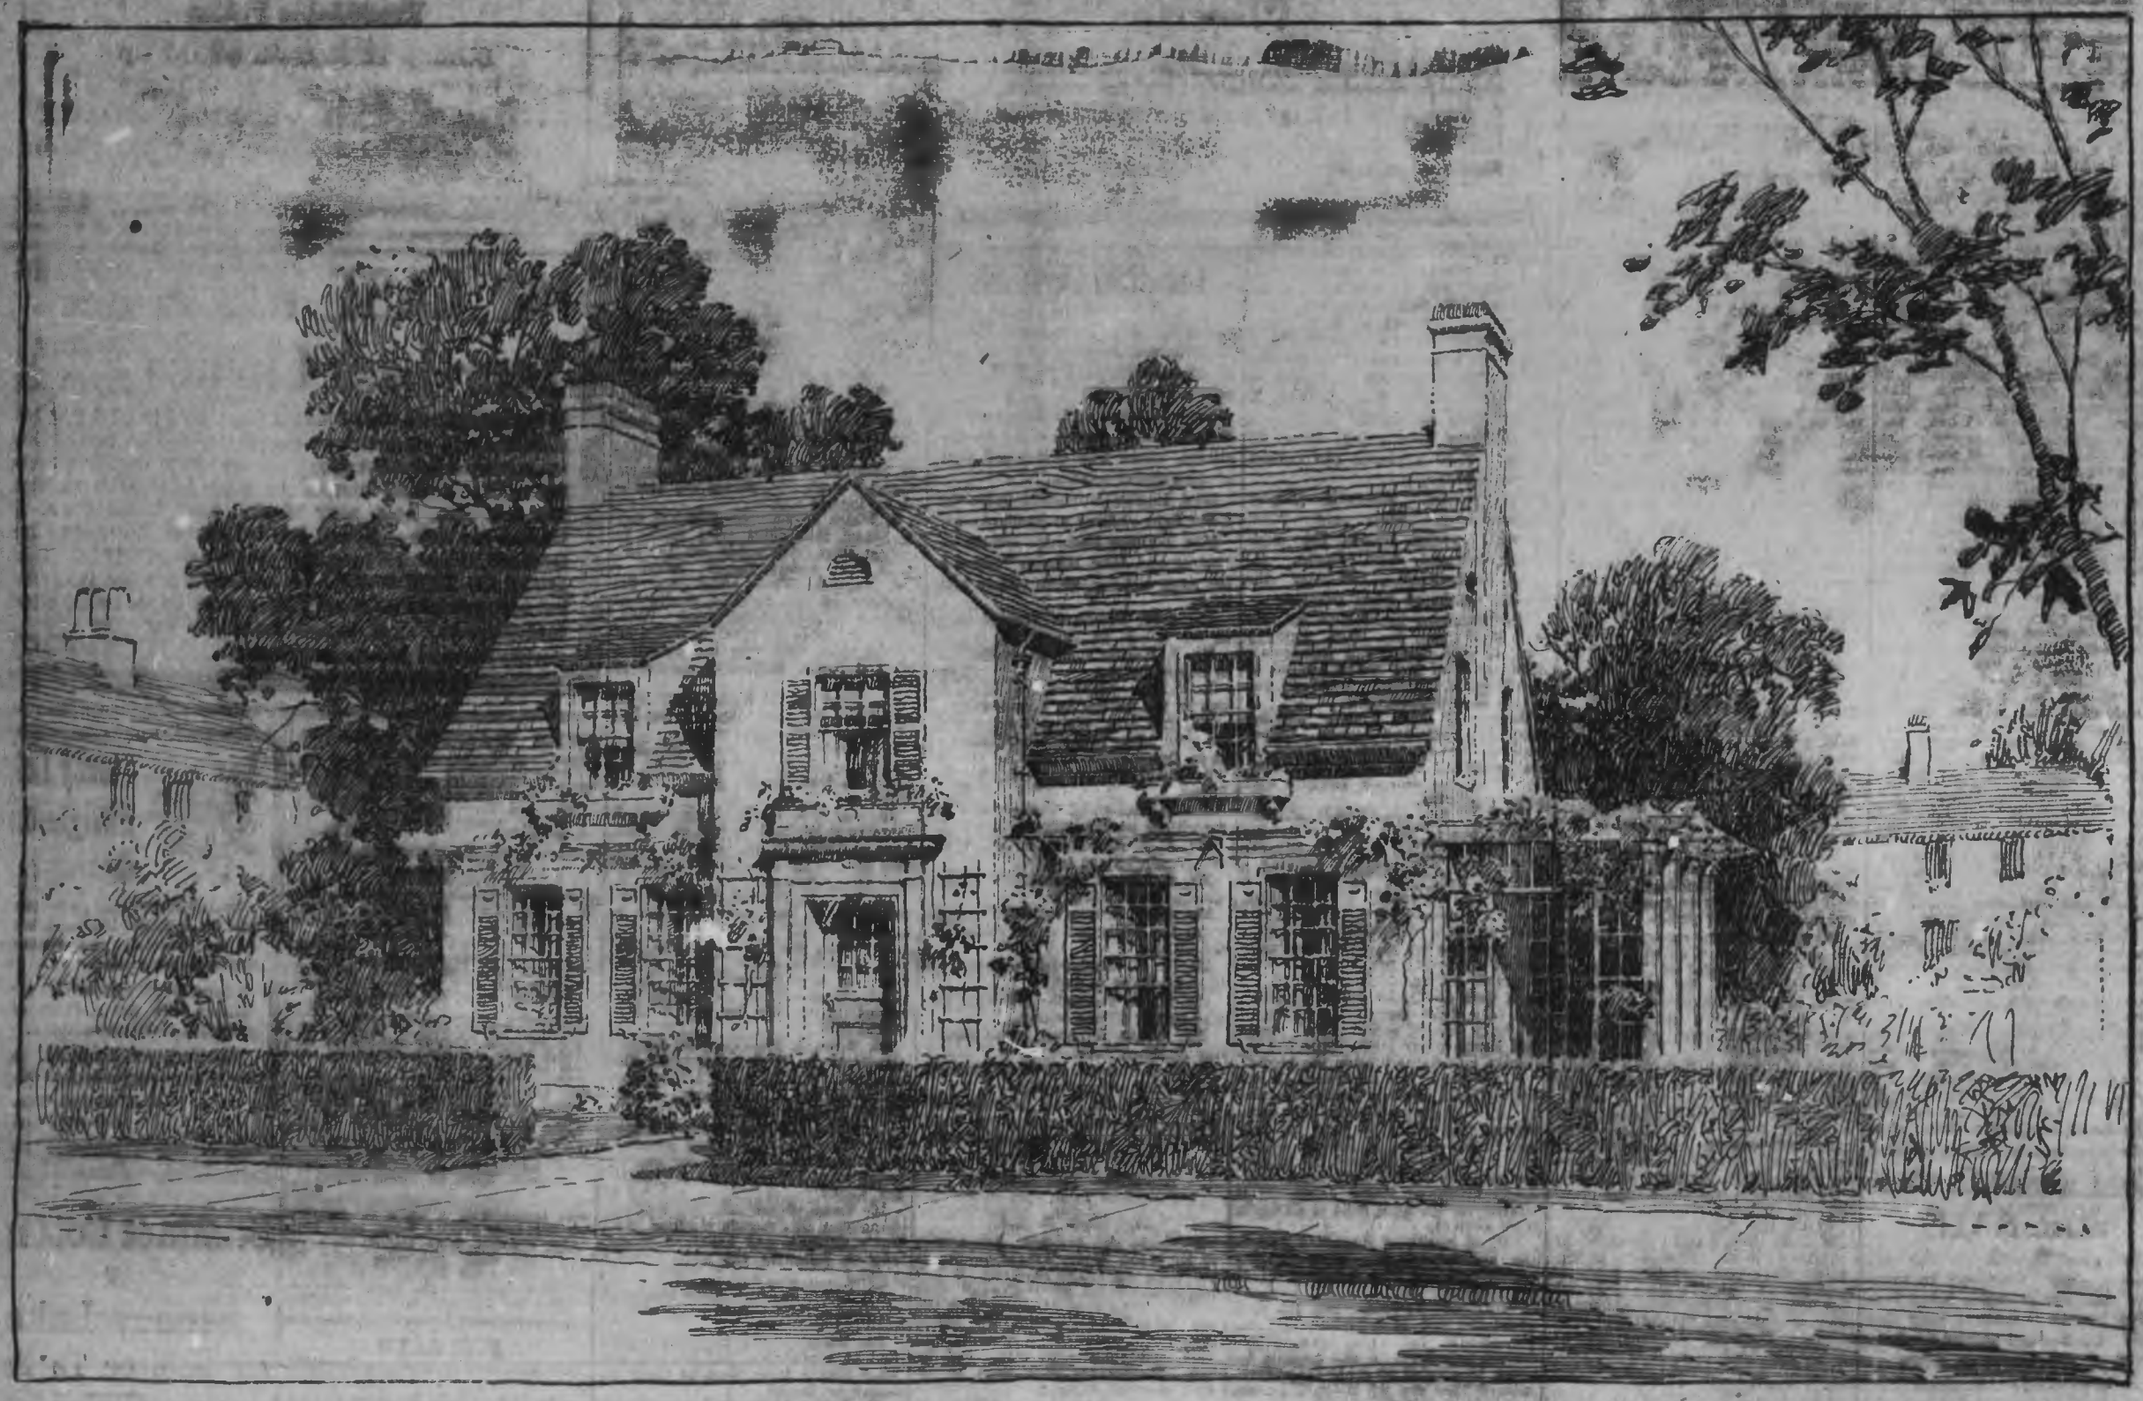
THE HOUSE AND GROUNDS



Prize Winning Design for a $5,000 House

THE offer of the New York Herald and of this newspaper for the best design for a house that could be built within $5,000 brought out an unusually high average of drawings. Competition was keen, and the last few days brought a flood of plans. These came from all parts of the country, due to the co-operation of the newspapers. A number of excellent plans from Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee and Arkansas indicated that the taste of the South is keeping pace with its growing prosperity and development.

Colorado, Arizona, Illinois and Utah sent designs that compared well with those from the older East. Altogether the result of the competition proved that the American people are interested in building attractive and comfortable homes of the sort that do credit to their taste and skill.

The judges, three prominent and experienced architects of New York city, found it a difficult task among so many excellent plans to select those which most nearly met the requirements of the competition. Some of the most beautiful ones had to be set aside because they would call for an outlay far exceeding the stipulated $5,000. Some designs had attractive perspectives but were weak in floor plans; others failed in the reverse order.

While builders and architects regard $5,000 as a small amount to pay for a house in these days of expensive materials and labor, it is the limit for thousands of families who have a home yearning. To come within that figure the house must necessarily be small.

In general in a house of that kind one can get only a good sized living room, a fair sized dining room, a hall, a kitchen and the necessary service on the first floor, and on the second three bedrooms, possibly a fourth small one, and a bathroom. Closets there must be.

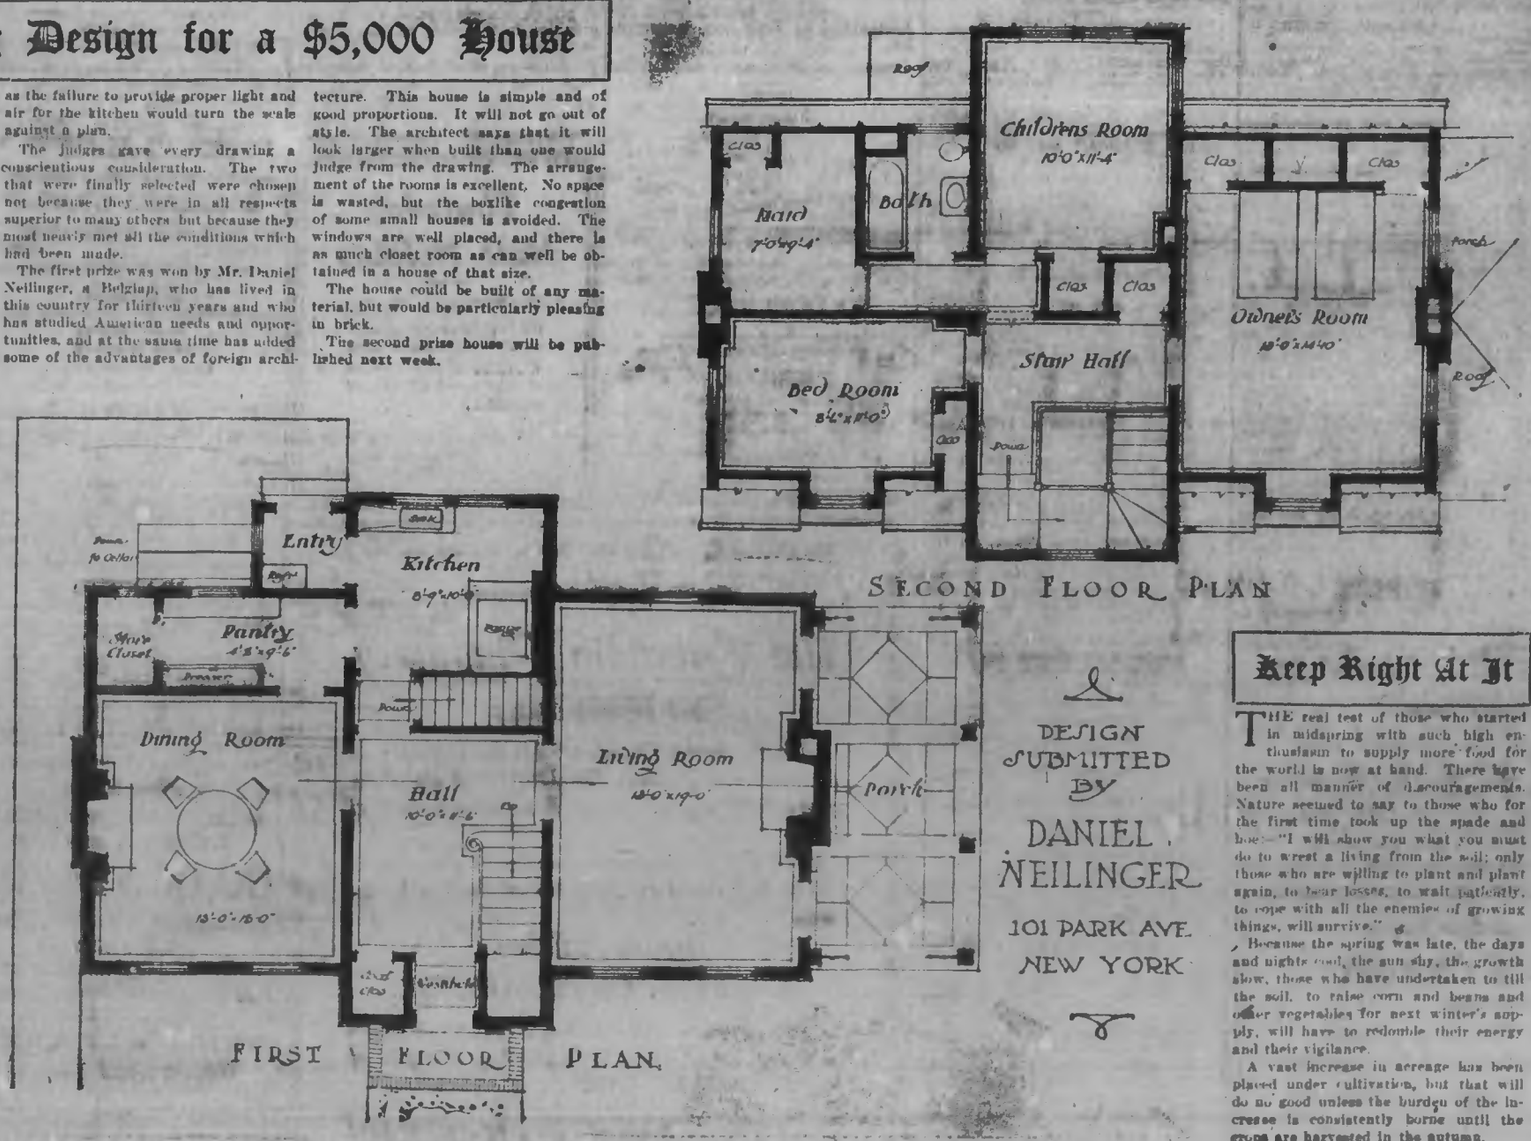
To get all this within the limits of the walls of a small house requires the exercise of remarkable ingenuity. It was this aspect as much as the exterior design that the judges had to consider in deciding which of all the hundreds submitted would make the prettiest house and the most comfortable and pleasant to live in. Frequently such a little thing as the failure to provide proper light and air for the kitchen would turn the scale against a plan.

The judges gave every drawing a conscientious consideration. The two that were finally selected were chosen not because they were in all respects superior to many others but because they most nearly met all the conditions which had been made.

The first prize was won by Mr. Daniel Neilinger, a Belgian, who has lived in this country for thirteen years and who has studied American needs and opportunities, and at the same time has added some of the advantages of foreign architecture. This house is simple and of good proportions. It will not go out of style. The architect says that it will look larger when built than one would judge from the drawing. The arrangement of the rooms is excellent. No space is wasted, but the boxlike congestion of some small houses is avoided. The windows are well placed, and there is as much closet room as can well be obtained in a house of that size.

The house could be built of any material, but would be particularly pleasing in brick.

The second prize house will be published next week.



Keep Right At It

THE real test of those who started in midspring with such high enthusiasm to supply more food for the world is now at hand. There have been all manner of discouragements. Nature seemed to say to those who for the first time took up the spade and hoe: "I will show you what you must do to wrest a living from the soil; only those who are willing to plant and plant again, to bear losses, to wait patiently, to cope with all the enemies of growing things, will survive."

Because the spring was late, the days and nights cool, the sun shy, the growth slow, those who have undertaken to till the soil, to raise corn and beans and other vegetables for next winter's supply, will have to redouble their energy and their vigilance.

A vast increase in acreage has been placed under cultivation, but that will do no good unless the burden of the increase is consistently borne until the crops are harvested in the autumn.

Preserving Eggs

EGGS are comparatively cheap now; that is, they will cost far more next winter. Instead of letting the storage men have all the profit the housewife should take some herself by preserving eggs at home.

Eggs must be fresh and preferably infertile; the shells must be clean and free from cracks. A single cracked egg may cause the whole batch to spoil. Get water glass solution from the drug store, dilute with nine parts of cool boiled water, and place eggs in small crocks containing the water glass. The solution should cover the eggs to a depth of two inches above the topmost layer of eggs. Cover the crock and place in a cool place where it will not have to be moved about. Replace the water which evaporates with cool boiled water occasionally.

Limewater may be used in place of water glass. Make the solution with three pounds of unslaked lime in five gallons of cool boiled water and use the clear liquid after the lime settles. Containers for eggs must be clean and should be scalded with hot water after washing.

Eggs preserved in water glass or limewater should be rinsed in clean cold water and used immediately after taking them from the solution. They can be used for soft boiling up to November, frying until December, and after that, until March, for omelettes, scrambled and in cooking.

Hints for Canning

"Never attempt to can any vegetable that has matured and commenced to harden or one that has begun to decay. As a general rule young vegetables are superior in flavor and texture to the more mature ones. This is especially true of string beans, okra and asparagus. Vegetables are better if gathered in the early morning while the dew is still on them. If it is impossible to can them immediately do not allow them to wither, but put them in cold water or a cold, damp place and keep them crisp until you are ready for them. Do your canning in a well swept and well dusted room. This will tend to reduce the number of spores floating about and lessen the chances of inoculation."

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A CHILD LOVE

It Was More Than That Later

By ETHEL HOLMES

I am an old maid. I have never had a love affair and never expect to have one. Perhaps this is why I take an interest in the loves of other people. Nothing is so attractive to me as to watch a young couple drifting into that current which at first moves so imperceptibly that they are not aware they are in it. Indeed, so unconscious are they of being incipient lovers that it does not occur to them to conceal the fact from any one else.

And to me there is something especially touching about the loves of children. Some deny that there is such a thing as a pair of children lovers. I deny their negation, and I do so on a very sound basis. When I was ten years old I was in love with a boy of fifteen. This is the nearest I ever came to love.

I remember one day sitting at my window sewing when a boy and a girl passed on the other side of the road. The boy's straw hat was dingy, and there was plenty of ventilation in its crown. His only other clothing was a shirt and trousers—no shoes or stockings, nothing around his throat, his collar being open and displaying the tanned skin. The girl's clothing was neither better nor worse, and there was about as much of it.

The two were evidently absorbed in each other. What they were talking about I was too far from them to hear, but it was of vital importance. It may be that the boy had been "kept in" after school and they were indignant over time thus lost in play. It may be that some urchin had smashed the china head of the girl's doll. Whatever it was it was being discussed with animation.

And I maintain that these childish interests are of more real importance for the time being than those which come later. No addition to an adult's stock of wealth gives the same zest as a new toy to one of these little people.

Often afterward I saw these two and always together. In this they were different from other children who play boys with boys and girls with girls. I learned that they were Henry Morse and Lila Bunker, a farmer's boy and farmer's girl. Indeed, we were all farmer folk, all knew one another, everybody being interested in some degree at least in every one else, a simple community and more than usually free from the petty jealousies common to mankind.

Henry Morse's father was determined that his son should have a good education, and the boy was sent away to school. After this I used to see Lila going by our house, but no companion supplied Henry's place. She was always alone, and I fancied her thinking of her other self. But this was simply fancy on my part. As I have said in the beginning, not having had any love affairs of my own, I conjure up love affairs for others. In this case of Henry and Lila I knew nothing of what was passing between them except from observation, so I may be excused for filling in occasionally that the story may not seem too disconnected. At the last I was present and shall not have to draw on my imagination.

When Henry came back from school there was a more modish appearance to his clothes and to his manners. Poor Lila, who had remained on the farm, had only an unadorned beauty, freshened by pure air and sunshine. They were now about sixteen years old, though Henry was half a head taller, and I could not see that their interest in each other had waned, though the childish unconsciousness that they were of different sex had disappeared. I used to see them go by the house together as formerly, but the prattle of childhood had given place to the more sober conversation of youth. I often wished I could hear what they were saying to each other.

Henry did so well at school that his father decided to send him to college. I wondered what effect his four years' association with young men and women of the world would have on my pet love affair. I feared that Henry, having become used to the polished girls he would meet, would return to see in Lila a country girl lacking the airs and graces of her sisters of the city. Would this alienate him? It was to be expected that it would. And, though country born and bred myself, I don't know that those of us who go to the city and acquire city ways are to be blamed when we return and yield to dissatisfaction with country ways.

Henry remained away a year at college before he came back to the farm. Then one July morning, when sitting at my window darning socks, I looked up, and there on the opposite side of the road were the couple I had first noticed eight or nine years ago as children. Though Henry was plainly dressed, his clothes were not country clothes. It seemed to me that he might pass anywhere as a city bred young man. And Lila—how my heart went out to the poor child in her effort to dress in a fashion more in keeping with the apparel of those girls to whom Henry had been accustomed. It was all inference with me, but it was plain to see that she had prepared herself against his return to modify the difference between her and their habiliments.

I wondered if he noticed this and if it pleased or displeased him. Surely his effort was not very successful. In the country one may get city fashions, but it is not every worker who can make them up. But in the few moments they were passing it was impossible for me to tell if there had been any change in Henry's feelings for Lila. So I placed out the story in this wise: Henry was beginning to see the difference between her and the girls he had met. I mean by "her" her clothes—a certain deficiency in what city people call chic. I am not referring to Lila as a soul, not even as a body, for in bodily beauty she would doubtless far surpass many a city girl. Well, what do I refer to? Why, clothes and manner; that's all.

After this Henry seldom came home during vacations. I heard that he usually went camping with his fellow students. At any rate, I lost track of my lovers. I was reluctantly obliged to consider my story, if not finished, at least passing through a stage of interruption. Henry had become interested in a career which would have nothing to do with farms or farmer people. When he was graduated I learned that he was intending to study medicine. But before he entered a medical college his father, who spared no expense on his education, sent him abroad. When I heard of all these matters, which were taking him farther and farther away from provincialism and his provincial sweetheart, I groaned in spirit, for I saw that my love story was likely to end in nothing.

It was some time before Henry was to leave the medical college that I heard bad news of Lila. They said she had some trouble that was dragging her down, but the doctors could not discover what it was. They could not diagnose it—that is what they said of it. Her father sent to the city and brought a doctor to the farm especially to see if he couldn't tell what was the matter with her. The doctor said he couldn't find any organic trouble, whatever that means, and the only remedy he thought might benefit her was change of scene. He advised her father to take her on a trip. But Farmer Bunker couldn't afford to do that, and Lila didn't care to go.

I considered this merely a part of my love story. It was plain to me that Henry Morse had drifted away from the little girl I had seen him going by our house with when they were children, and the parting was killing her.

They say story writers often fall in love with their imaginary characters. Therefore it's not strange that a story creator like myself should fall in love with a real person of flesh and blood. I had always known the Bunkers, so I went to see Lila. That was in the spring—May, I think. I found her sitting in an easy chair at her window, pale, languid and without interest in anything. It may be that she divined by my bearing toward her that I knew what was the matter with her. At any rate, when I went up to her, took her hand and drew her head down on my shoulder she left it there and seemed to get relief from the tears that came.

While she was weeping on my shoulder I was thinking. Not having any lover to bring back for myself, I wished I could bring back one for this poor girl. And I formed a plan.

But it was some time before I carried it out, not till summer came. Then I told Lila's parents that I thought it would do her good to come and make me a visit. Since Lila said she would like to do so, they consented, and within a few days she was in my room, the room from which I had first seen her go by with her child lover. I said nothing about Henry Morse either as boy or man any more than if he didn't exist. But when I put Lila in an easy chair at the very window from which I used to watch her and him, and thought of her as she was then and saw her as she was now I made up my mind that if I was going to make a good, real story of her case I couldn't rely on things to happen themselves. I'd have to bring them about myself.

I was thinking, too, that my love story had been going on long enough, and it was time it was brought to a close. Besides, Lila was so weak that I feared in her condition she'd contract some real disease. So I wrote Dr. Henry Morse, who had just been admitted to practice, that I had a patient in my family who was dying of some disease that none of our country doctors could tell anything about, and I would pay him whatever he asked if he would make a flying trip and diagnose the case.

He wrote back that he remembered me very well and would run down in a few days.

Of course I didn't let on to Lila what I had done. She, poor child, wasn't dreaming what an influence my seeing her go by my window so many years before would have on her life. I hoped Henry would come as soon as possible, for she was drooping more and more every day.

Well, one morning he came. He said he had answered my call after his arrival even before going home. I was glad of this, for I was fearful he'd hear something that might interfere with my plan. I just led him upstairs, opened the door, and he went in and I closed it behind him.

I reckon he didn't make as long a call as that on a patient for a good many years. I don't know what happened between them—didn't see the surprise of either of them. All I know is that when he came out two or three hours after he went in he looked at me as though he was going to my something, but pressed my hand instead. Then I went in to Lila. She had the happiest smile on her face I ever saw. She put her arms around my neck and cried and laughed. And that's the end of the story.

I don't see why real story writers don't do something themselves to finish their own stories.

DYSPEPSIA OF WOMEN

Special Treatment Required.

Many women suffer from a form of indigestion or dyspepsia which does not yield to ordinary treatment. While the symptoms are similar to those of ordinary indigestion, yet the medicines usually prescribed do not restore the patient's normal condition.

There seems to be a kind of dyspepsia caused by derangement of the female organism. While this appears to be the same as ordinary indigestion it can be relieved only by a medicine which, besides acting as a stomach tonic, is good for female ailments. Read what such a medicine did for Mrs. Williams:—

She says:—"Before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was troubled with dyspepsia and bearing down pains in my back and sides, and after my meals my stomach would bloat up till I could scarcely get my breath. At times I was so weak I could hardly stand on my feet and I looked hollow-eyed and my skin was yellow. Now I have a good color, have gained in every way and can do my work without any pains. I think it is the best medicine on earth for stomach troubles of women."—Mrs. NELLIE WILLIAMS, 31 West 3d Street, New Albany, Ind.

TAUGHT BY A WORM.

This Lowly Creature Suggested the First Submarine Tunnel.

The first great under water tunnel was built beneath the Thames at London by Sir Mark Isambard Brunel. Brunel was one of the most prolific inventors of his time, and he was a pioneer in many lines, but the Thames tunnel is his greatest memorial.

It was a worm which suggested to Brunel the possibility of a tunnel under the Thames. While passing through a dockyard he noticed a piece of ship timber perforated by a destructive worm—the Teredo Navalis. Brunel studied the worm's mode of operation in boring into the wood, and this suggested to his mind the construction of a cast iron shield which should bore like an auger by means of strong hydraulic screws, and as rapidly as the earth was cut away bricklayers should be at hand to replace it with an arch.

The work on the Thames tunnel commenced in 1825, and after many vicissitudes and accidents it was completed in 1843, when Brunel was knighted by Queen Victoria. Brunel was also the first to make shoes by machinery, and he devised machines for knitting, nail-making, ruling paper and making wooden boxes. In his youth Brunel spent several years in America, designed and built a theater in New York and planned fortifications for the city.

ABOUT EXTRAVAGANCE.

Nature Sets an Example, and Many Poor Mortals Follow It.

Extravagance is a relative term usually misapplied. If a man is worth a hundred million it would not be considered extravagant for him to spend a hundred thousand dollars on goldfish if he wanted to. If a family of ten people living on $1000 a year should get their pictures taken that would be extravagance.

Extravagance, however, is not exactly buying something you cannot afford. What you cannot afford now you may later, and the very fact that you have bought it may have been the cause of your future prosperity. Extravagance is an exceeding of the spent limit. But who shall say what this is?

One of the chief difficulties in defining extravagance is the general assumption that it is something wicked. Yet extravagance is often necessary. The sun is extravagant—the greatest heat prodigal. So is nature. So is a river. Rain clouds are horrible examples of extravagance. They pour out all their possessions without regard to what they get in return and then fade away. How like some people that is, and what a glorious thing they have done it! Think of spending a million raindrops a minute, knowing it will benefit you, and not caring!

The chief fault of extravagance, whatever it may be, is not so much in the reality it brings about, which may be good or bad, as in the time it wastes. It is immoral because it takes away from our capacity for indulging in the real joys of life.

It isn't the money you spend; it is the time you take to spend it that causes the damage.

Climate and Food.

In the north regions human food is almost exclusively animal, because that is the only sort which is available in quantity. In the tropics, where vegetable food is abundant and animal foods readily decay, plant products are and always have been of very great importance in the diet. In temperate regions all kinds of food may be secured, and it seems reasonable to suppose that all kinds have always been eaten as they are today.

Bright Outlook.

"How is the attendance at your college this year?"

"Splendid," replied the athletic sophomore. "We are getting scores of new fellows this year who don't weigh an ounce under 180 pounds."

HAD BOILS

FOR SIX MONTHS

B. B. B. DROVE THEM AWAY

When the blood becomes impure the very first symptoms which manifest themselves are a breaking out of various forms of skin trouble such as boils, pimples, sores, etc., and to get rid of these troubles you must cleanse the blood thoroughly with a good blood remedy.

The best blood cleansing remedy on the market to-day is Burdock Blood Bitters.

Thousands of people from one end of Canada to the other have used it during the past forty years, and have nothing but words of praise for its cleansing properties.

Mr. Rufus Beers, Upper Main River, N.B., writes: "I want to say a few words about your medicine, Burdock Blood Bitters. I had boils for over six months and sometimes was so bad I could not work. I tried lots of cures but nothing would drive them away for good until I took B.B.B. In a short time I was all better. It is a dandy medicine. I keep it in the house all the time."

Burdock Blood iBtters is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont., but so well and favorably its it known that there are many imitations on the market. See that our name appears on the wrapper.

PLENTY OF HARD COAL

But There is the Transport Problem to Be Solved.

OTTAWA June 27.—Fuel Controller Magrath is receiving from different parts of the country statements as to the probable extent of coal requirements, more particularly bituminous coal. He has been in consultation with various mine operators as to the probable production. In regard to coal, the situation is that sufficient anthracite will be available. The difficulty, if any, will arise over transport. In the bituminous line, however, there is decreased production, both in the east and the west, the latter being due to the long-continued strike in Alberta. The mines are now to be operated at top speed to make up for lost time.

KINGLY QUEENS.

Elizabeth of England, Maria Theresa and Catherine the Great.

It is said that Queen Elizabeth bore a greater variety of popular nicknames than any other British sovereign. She was called the "Virgin Queen," "Gloriana," "Good Queen Bess" and occasionally in compliment to her masculine mind "King Elizabeth." Her successor, James I., proved such a feeble and effeminate monarch by contrast to the kingly queen that he incurred the nickname, rarely ventured in public, but frequently in the privacy of safe company, of "Queen James."

Elizabeth's masculine nickname, although less familiar to us today than most of the others applied to her, is recognized in Southey's punning stanza upon the armada, in which he makes playful and patriotic use of it in conjunction with the name of her great naval commander, Sir Francis Drake:

Oh, Nature! To old England still Continue these mistakes.
Give us for all our kings such Queens
And for our Dux such Drakes!

The kingliness of other queens than Queen Elizabeth has been recognized sometimes in one way and sometimes in another. When Maria Theresa in the hour of her country's peril appealed in person to the Hungarian noblemen to try their loyalty to herself and her young son the fire and eloquence of her address so moved them that as their swords flashed from the scabbards and they crowded about her, waving the naked blades in token of fealty, they shouted fervently:

"We will die for our king, Maria Theresa!"

In 1794 when General Suvaroff, after the second partition of Poland, stormed and captured Praga after a twelve hours' desperate battle against a superior force he reported the victory to his imperial mistress, Catharine the Great of Russia, in these words:

"Hurrah! Praga! Suvaroff!"

To this message Catharine, "as befitted a king and a commander," says the historian, answered with equal brevity, conveying in three words both congratulation and promotion:

"Bravo! Field marshall Catharine!"

BISMARCK AS A SPEAKER.

How the Great Prussian Statesman Impressed Andrew D. White.

It was my good fortune to hear Bismarck publicly discuss many important questions, and his way of speaking was not like that of any other man I have ever heard. He was always clothed in the undress uniform of a Prussian general, and as he rose his bulk made him imposing.

His first utterances were disappointing. He seemed wheezy, rambling, incoherent, with a sort of burdensome self consciousness checking his ideas and clogging his words. His manner was fidgety, his arms being thrown uneasily about and his fingers fumbling his mustache or his clothing or the papers on his desk.

He puffed, snorted and floundered, seemed to make assertions without proof and phrases without point, when suddenly he would utter a statement so pregnant as to clear up a whole policy, or a sentence so audacious as to paralyze a whole line of his opponents, or a phrase so vivid as to run through the nation and electrify it.

Then perhaps after more rumbling and rambling came a clean, clear, historical illustration carrying conviction. Then very likely a simple and strong argument, not infrequently ended by some heavy missile in the shape of an accusation or taunt hurled in the faces of his adversaries. Then perhaps at considerable length a mixture of caustic criticism and personal reminiscence, in which sparkled those wonderful sayings which have gone through the empire and settled deeply into the German heart.—"Autobiography of Andrew D. White."

INDIANS AND MEDICINE.

A Funny Way of Giving a Sick Child a Dose of Oil.

The Indian, says the Rev. J. Hines in his book "The Red Indians of the Plains," has the idea that any kind of medicine is equally good for all complaints. He believes in drastic measures, and unless he feels the effect of the second dose of the medicine he loses faith in it and gives up taking it. He prefers purgatives and emetics, but even in them the Indian is wont to discriminate, and he thinks castor oil is especially "good medicine."

Very often mothers would send to the mission for castor oil for their infants and then come the next day and complain that the medicine had not operated and that the child had done nothing but cry ever since it took the medicine. Then my wife would pour out another teaspoonful and hand it to the mother and request her to administer it in her presence. The child would object, as most children do, and that part of the oil that left the spoon would trickle down the cheek of the child.

The mother, partly to remove the oil and partly to pacify the child, would give the child a kiss that covered the whole of its cheek and in so doing would remove the oil with her lips and swallow it herself. Then she would lick the spoon clean, hand it back to my wife, and that is the way Indian women give castor oil to their children. After witnessing this performance we had no difficulty in understanding why the child got no benefit from the previous dose.

PUT CREAM IN NOSE AND STOP CATARRH

Tells How To Open Clogged Nostrils and End Head-Colds.

You feel fine in a few moments. Your cold in head or catarrh will be gone. Your clogged nostrils will open. The air passages of your head will clear and you can breathe freely. No more dullness, headache; no hawking, snuffling, mucous discharges or dryness; no struggling for breath at night.

Tell your druggist you want a small bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. Apply a little of this fragrant, antiseptic cream in your nostrils, let it penetrate through every air passage of the head; soothe and heal the swollen, inflamed mucous membrane, and relief comes instantly.

It is just what every cold and catarrh sufferer needs. Don't stay stuffed-up and miserable.

The First Cradle.

The earliest mention in literature of cradles is in the Biblical account of Moses' little ark of bulrushes. But there are in the British museum some clay tablets found some years ago on the site of ancient Nineveh which, according to archaeologists, make it quite clear that somewhere about 4,000 years before the Christian era there was another infant hero exposed in a little ark of bulrushes. Thus the cradle that was found by Pharaoh's daughter 1400 B. C. was comparatively modern.

It is certain that cradles were first used as a means of protecting babies from the attacks of wild animals by suspending them from the boughs of trees.—London Globe.

WEEKLY REPORT ON FARM CONDITIONS THROUGHOUT ONTARIO

Spring Grain Fields Are Looking in Fine Condition and Fall Wheat Continues To Improve—Potatoes Never Looked Better

Following is a summary of the weekly crop reports made by District Representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:—

During the past week considerable corn, beans, potatoes, turnips, buckwheat and millet were put in, the work being only partially interfered with by the rain and the scarcity of good farm help. Tobacco and tomato planting were also vigorously pushed.

Spring grain fields are looking in fine condition. Fall wheat continues to improve and is beginning to head out, as is also winter rye.

Early roots look well, and those planted more recently are finding a good seed-bed. Potatoes are vigorous in growth, and never promised better at this stage.

Pastures are most inviting in appearance, and live stock on the grass are thriving. Estimates regarding the new hay crop run all the way from a light to a full yield. Red Clover is about one-third in bloom, and some will be cutting this week.

Early cabbage have well under favourable June conditions. In and near towns and villages more potatoes and tomatoes have been put in than ever before, and vegetable gardens generally are reported to be in a promising state.

Reports concerning orchards vary according to locality and care. Cherries and small fruits promise a large yield, but apples will generally be a light crop. Lambton reports considerable leaf curl in peach orchards, and the yield in that district will be only fair.

Live Stock: There is a steady demand reported for pure bred sires and dams of both beef and milking breeds, and at good prices, as shown by sales during the week. There has also been a brisk enquiry for stockers, as all classes of cattle are doing well on grass. Prices for veal continue high. Waterloo, however, reports that owing to the slump in the price of beef cattle local buyers have been losing money lately.

The milk flow is at high tide, and cream gatherers have bigger loads than usual, as much of the surplus is being turned into butter. Cheese factories also are being worked hard, local factories, which is equivalent to about an additional 2,000 lbs. of milk. A report from one of the dairy-Lanark reporting that two extra cheese a day are being made in some ing centres states that patrons are becoming more satisfied with the comparatively low price of cheese compared with the high cost of production, as they realise that the British Government is fixing the price of the product and that some sacrifice is necessary.

Hogs are selling at from $14.25 to $14.50 a cwt. Owing to the scarcity of grain it is stated that some farmers are not hastening the growth of their pigs, but that this will come on later. The demand for brood sows, however, is said to be very great.

The keen competition in the wool market is the leading feature of the sheep industry. Dufferin reports washed wool as bringing as high as 74c a pound.

At the Lindsay Horse Fair on Thursday 11 horses were purchased by military buyers at prices ranging from $190 to $220.

Labour: Representatives are still placing men and boys on farms, but in some cases it is impossible to meet requests, owing to the low wages offered for men who are sufficiently skilled to give satisfaction in hoeing and other cultivation work now being called for. It is pointed out, however, that the weather conditions of the past month have favoured a long seeding period, making the scarcity of labour less keenly felt.

You Are Paying For It Anyway

YOU have a hard day. Weary, nerves frazzled, you reach home.

Nothing would suit you better than to stay right home.

But you go out.

You go to the cabaret. You eat when you don't want to eat. You are away from home when you want to be at home.

You try to satisfy your music hunger with a hand-out around the corner. That helps a little. What you really want, though, is a music feast in your own home.

In shirt sleeves, downright comfort, your own piano or player-piano or talking machine and the whole world of music from which to choose the music to fit your mood.

And don't think you can't have a piano or player piano or talking machine in your home. You're entitled to one. You're paying for it anyway. Yes paying for it—but not getting it.

That once or twice each week that you go music-hunting costs as much, maybe more, than it would cost to own an instrument.

A really good piano or player piano or talking machine can be purchased at a very reasonable price and the payments can be so divided that your music-hunting money will more than take care of them.

WANTS HALF MILLION AS HEART BALM

Pittsburg Woman Claims $500,000 for Breach of Promise

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Twelve Allegheny county jurymen have begun consideration of the question whether the heart of a woman aged 30 can be wounded $500,000 worth because a man nearly 60 years old didn't keep his promise to marry her.

The plaintiff is Miss Nettie Richardson. She says her heart is almost broken. She said that once before, and the jury thought perhaps it was had awarded her $170,000. Miss Richardson's heart felt a deal better after that and was almost normal again, when the judgment was set aside by the court and a new trial ordered. It is this trial that is in progress.

A Kiss? O, Never!

The plaintiff admitted under cross examination that she never kissed Denniston, the defendant, or even held his hand, and that he never called on her or wrote her love missives, and the only gift she ever received from him was a $10 bill to pay her carfare on her second visit to the Denniston home, in June, 1915, and that Denniston presented her a bunch of roses out of his garden.

The only new thing developed in her story, aside from that told at the former trial, was when she testified that in June, 1915, while visiting Denniston, he showed her a cigar box which contained a list of securities, which he had her read. Miss Richardson said that these securities amounted to about $1,400,000.

The defendant, Henry Denniston, who is a semi-recluse on his farm at Swissvale, just outside of this city is said to be worth $2,000,000. He says he never intended to marry Miss Richardson, who formerly was cashier in a hotel here. He declares he intends to live unmarried the rest of his life and to leave his fortune for the establishment of a home for orphans and afflicted children.

Miss Richardson makes affidavit that she met the old millionaire at the home of one of his relatives, that he fell in love with her and proposed marriage; that she promised to marry him.

Then, according to her affidavits, Denniston's kinsfolk, hearing of the engagement, tried to block the marriage by having him taken before the court on the charge that he was incompetent to manage his affairs, and by endeavouring to have a guardian appoined for him.

Relatives Take Hand.

It is true that Denniston's sanity was looked into, but in court he surprised every one with his vigorous mentality and his knowledge of affairs, and was declared fit to manage his fortune.

Just before his examination, however, Mr. Denniston had his rather ramshackle house fitted up luxuriously. He did so, Miss Richardson declares, in order that his bride might have a proper home.

His relatives, the plaintiff swears, found other means of dissuading him from the idea of marriage, and so he declined to carry out his compact with her.

Denniston lives alone in his farmhouse, except for his cook "Charlie," who is about his own age.

Since news of the two suits got out, the farm has been overrun with girls and women seeking the aged millionaire as a husband, but he will have none of them.

More Acrobatics Airman Can Do Longer He Lives

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES AFIELD.—A fool, that is what "serious" airmen called the chap who did stunts with his machine before this war began. The aerial acrobat paradoxically was looked down upon. To-day the whole game has changed and the more circus stunts a pilot can do the safer he is in the air. Unless a man can loop the loop, fly upside down, bump the bump and do a general topsy-turvy, wine-jelly wobble, while never missing a note with his machine-gun, his life is apt to be a short and slightly agitated one.

With the advent of long, bright summer days, battleplanes march across the sky, patrol the clouds and do post-duty there in just the same way as soldiers do on the ground. There are machines corresponding to infantry, which go in droves and attack or repel attacks. Others are like cavalry and do scouting. Still more are comparable to the artillery. Some are like tanks, some like armoured motor-cars and some do sniping among the cressny thunderheads. But the pilot of each machine must know how to fly as human beings never flew before, otherwise the cracker-box on which he sits at mealtime is sure to play the role of a vacant chair at some not very distant date.

From a gun-pit near Monchy-le-Preux I have just witnessed some of the most terrific fighting of the war. Aside from the savage attacks and counter-attacks by infantry throughout this region and an artillery activity thus far unsurpassed anywhere, the battle was just as tough in the air as on the earth.

A fleet of eighteen wide-winged bombers swept across the line high up, accompanied by fight fighters darting about like hawks keeping hostile machines at a distance. Patrols guarded the British side of the line, sailing up and down, swerving and turning, ready for attack or defence, while air sentinels kept watch about the observation balloons lost out of the cloud-puffs should dart a destroyer-type German plane and put the sausage down. Now and then, as Prussian airmen attempted to force their way over to the English side to give their artillery the range on batteries and troops, fierce fighting developed, in which machines were brought down crashing.

SAVED BY ACROBATIC.

Between Monchy and Guemappe the German infantry suddenly appeared in the open, coming from behind Vert Wood southeast of Monchy, and the enemy artillery increased their shell-fire on this hill-top town until it was buried under white, yellow and black smoke. Shrapnel filled the air with their twin puffs of smoke, one white puff and one black, and, lest the British should throw in their reserves, a barrage of fight and heavy explosives rained down on the slopes to the west.

Here British battleplanes got in some of their stunts, stunts which would have set a grandstand wild with mixed awe and delight. One pilot swooped down almost perpendicularly, as though about to crash into the shattered roof-tops of smoking, seething Monchy, but, just as he seemed about to touch, he careened on the tip of one wing, turned at sickening speed to the right and disappeared into the smoke of the battle, a few yards at most over the heads of the madly attacking Germans. For a few seconds his sudden appearance and the deadly work of his machine-gun must have caused something akin to panic in the enemy ranks, then he shot up and away again at 130 miles an hour.

Round and round he turned swooping on the back stretch until completely lost to view. He looped, twisted, wobbled and dived so that only a chance shot might touch him. It looked as if he had gone mad, yet only this seeming madness made his escape from death possible. But for his aerial acrobatics he and his machine would have been riddled with bullets. As it was he came out successful and unharmed. The Germans were hurled back, smashed and demoralized and part of the glory of deefating them was his.

In the meantime a battle was being fought out in the clouds above the fields west of Wancourt, southwest of Monchy. Further to the north another German was hit at 15,000 feet, and down he fluttered like a dead leaf, followed by the British aviator who had downed him. This he had done to make sure the fall was real, not faked.

The most thrilling of all was the duel high above the gun-pit, where I sat and looked on. It was between two mere boys. For twenty minutes these two fought for positions, spurred at an altitude of nearly three miles, neither being able to bring his machine-gun to bear on the other.

Seventeen per cent. more milk and twenty-eight per cent. more butterfat was produced by dairy cows fed largely silage than by others fed mainly a grain ration in a feeding test conducted at the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. The silage ration produced butterfat at thirteen cents a pound, and the grain ration at twenty-two cents.

The rise in food prices is not alone due to an actual food shortage, but also to the world wide inflation caused by the war, and relatively high prices are bound to continue so long as the inflation continues.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Russian Army Was Sick Now Convalescing

PETROGRAD.—At the recent congress of peasants in Petrograd a soldier delegate made this declaration:

"At first the Russia Moujik struck hard when he was a slave. He will strike twice as hard now that he is free."

I was struck by the truth of these words on my visit to southwest front of the Russian armies, says a member of the Belgian Cabinet, and president of the Socialists International Bureau.

"The army of the revolution resembles as little as possible the army of the Czar. Discipline is no longer exercised by the officers only, but by committees of officers and soldiers. The red flag has replaced the Imperial standard.

"Personal contact with this army reminds one of the volunteers of the French revolution. There is the same apparent lack of discipline, but the same enthusiasm. The Duke of Brunswick in 1792 announced that he would chase the Sansculotte army with whips, but several days later he was completely defeated by the Sansculottes.

"I thought of this the other evening at a point on the Galician front at a moment when in a burst of enthusiasm the Russian soldiers acclaimed little Belgium and great America.

"The same manifestation of appreciation were shown for the Belgian workers fighting for liberty with indomitable endurance as for the President Wilson, who won imperishable glory when he formulated before entering the war, the essential principles of the peace of to-morrow.

WILSON'S ATTITUDE APPRECIATED.

"President Wilson's attitude is everywhere known in Russia and appreciated.

"To sum up my observations of the course of events at the front:

"First, in the units we visited the spirit of the troops is infinitely better than I would have believed after hearing the alarmist rumors in Petrograd.

"Second, any evil ends are being ameliorated rapidly, as the units which were doubtful yesterday are good to-day, and the good become better.

"As Gen. Brusiloff said to us: 'The Russian army has been sick, but is now in the midst of convalescence.

"Third, Besides the propaganda of the extreme pacifists, who have had things their own way, another influence is now working.

"Patriotic citizens, the Black Sea sailors, volunteers and members of various committees are preaching indefatigably the necessity of armed resistance to the enemy, explaining the revolutionary effect on the war and speaking of the coming offensive.

"Thanks to their efforts, national sentiment, which was latent, has been awakened and daily inspires more heroic acts by our soldiers. It seems to me only necessary to continue on the way these missionaries of democratic thought have opened, to rebuild steadily the moral force of the army. I had faith in the Russian revolution; I have greater faith now that I have been to the front.

HAIG STRIKES ANOTHER HARD BLOW
THE CANADIAN TROOPS ENTER AVION

BRITISH SCORE WITH A SUDDEN BLOW NEAR OPPY

Enemy's Positions Over a Front of 2,000 Yards Captured---"Whole Object Sought Was Attained" Reads the Official Report --- Canadians Have Entered Avion and Grip on Lens Is Increasing in Intensity --- State of War Exists Between Greece and Central Powers

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

LONDON, June 29.—South and southwest of Oppy to-day Field Marshal Haig struck a sudden and tremendous blow at the German lines, capturing the enemy's forward positions over a front of two thousand yards and gaining the whole objective sought. The victory was reported in the Field Marshal's official statement. South and southwest of Oppy last night and early this morning, we attacked and captured the enemy's forward positions along a front of two thousand yards, he asserted. Our whole objective was gained. South of the Souchez River we continued to gain ground on a wide front. We entered Avion, taking further prisoners and six machine guns. The sudden stroke at Oppy is another example of Haig's plan of keeping the enemy guessing by surprise attacks in force. There has been very little fighting around Oppy for weeks. In the last few days seemingly the British have concentrated all their force for the encircling drive around Lens.

The Germans probably likewise have been hurriedly massing reserves to defend this coal city. In this situation, the British Commander-in-Chief apparently picked one of the vital points in the switch line which connects Drocourt with the so-called Siegfried section of the Hindenburg line for another smashing blow. Oppy is one of the important links in this switch line. It is one of the foundation points for the whole German line. The Canadians strove to progress beyond it. The city is about six miles southeast of Lens, so that the operations there may be virtually classed a part of the general assault now being made against the French coal metropolis. Avion was yesterday taken by the Canadians. It is a suburb of Lens, lying a little below the Souchez River.

The "continued gains" on a "wide front" in this section mentioned by Field Marshal Haig means fast progress of the British grip around Lens.

LONDON, June 29.—That the new government in Greece considers that a state of war exists between Greece and the Central Powers was asserted in a Reuter despatch from Athens to-day.

PARIS, June 29.—What was apparently another attempt at a general counter offensive was struck in heavy blows by the Germans on the right bank of the House and along the Aisne front to-day. The French official statement declared all attacks failed.

On the Aisne front, at night, in the region of Gerny, southeast of Corbeny and northwest of Rheims, there was a violent enemy bombardment, followed by heavy attacks, the statement asserted. All were broken up in our fire and the counter attacks. Our positions were maintained. In the region of Gerny the struggle was of the most desperate character. In several attacks at two points northwest of the village a few of the enemy gained a footing on our first lines, but were driven out leaving many dead and prisoners. The Aisne front attack is another chapter to the German efforts of the past ten days to loosen the French grip on the dominating positions below Laon.. Cerny is located on the Cremin Des Dames, about seven miles due south of Laon. Earlier in the week the Germans began a general counter offensive movement in this same sector, but their attacks on this occasion were directed further to the west around Vaux Haillon and Fhain.

PETROGRAD, June 29.—The Duma to-day formally refused the request of a number of element in Russia that it dissolve on the ground that it was superseded as a representative body by various congresses such as those of the Workmen and Soldiers and Peasants.

"Peace Without Victory a Disaster"

LONDON, June 29. — "Peace before a victory would be the greatest disaster in the history of mankind," declared Premier Lloyd George in an epoch-making speech to-day. The Premier asserted that a greater international peace congress would decide as to the disposition of the German colonies in Allies' hands. "Mesopotamia can never be restored to the Turks because of their tyranny," he continued. "The same hold true of Armenia."

"Without indemnities," the Prime Minister went on, "we have no guarantee against a repetition of events."

"Lloyd George predicted that the Russian revolution would eventually ensure "victory of a higher and more exalted nature than anyone could have contemplated before—because now free people are fighting for democracy's future."

Lloyd George's speech was made at Glasgow. He said: Germany's terms for Belgium are terms of vassalage. No German statesman ever urged restoration."

"In determining the future trusteeship of uncivilized lands we must learn whether the inhabitants desire their old masters or gentler hands.

"Imperial Chancellor Hollweg almost promised independence to Belgium—but the junkers' mailed fist promptly boxed his ears.

"Germany asks for indemnity and a little territory here and there with privilege in other directions for her own wrongs.

"Germany says the British are seeking her colonies as well as Mesopotamia and Palestine. If such aim was true, we need not have raised three or four millions of troops—our own army would have been capable.

"While Russia was in the throes of the revolution," he continued, "it was Britain's strength flung into the breach that once more saved Europe to human liberty.

"America has always been freedom's mainstay. She has never made war except for freedom. Now she is sending her valiant soldiers to the battlefields to fight around liberty's standard. That is another reason why victory along higher lines is assured."

BERLIN, via London, June 29.—Admission "that after a bitter hand-to-hand battle the English occupied the foremost line of our defences between Oppy and Cavrelle Windmill," was made by the German official statement to-day.

"We fought splendidly," the War Office declared, "and inflicted severe losses on the enemy during our well co-operated defence, as we were fighting man to man.

"In the salient west and southwest of Lens a section relinquished as a fighting zone for a long time previously, an enemy attack early this morning blasted the road leading to Arras."

Sweeping victories were gained over French troops around Cerny and Malgneourt, to-day's official statement claimed.

PROPHESIES A GENERAL ELECTION IN NEAR FUTURE

The Montreal Gazette, Close to Government, Says House Will Adjourn Immediately the Conscription Bill is Passed

WESTERN CONFERENCE

MONTREAL, Que., June 29. —The Gazette, which is very close to the Government, talks this morning of a general election immediately after the passage of the Military Service Bill. In the opinion of the Gazette, the Liberal party will line up solidly behind Sir Wilfrid, except on the conscription issue, on which the Liberal candidates will reserve independence of action.

A WESTERN CONFERENCE.

REGINA, June 29.—Liberal Premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, with other leaders of the Liberal party, will assemble here immediately to discuss the attitude of the Canadian west on conscription and other issues. All Premiers except Sifton, of Alberta, have declared themselves for conscription, but the conference will probably decide definitely some line of differences between the Liberalism of Western Canada and that of Eastern Canada on railway, grain problems and other issues.

Fashion's Latest at Chesler's

Mr. B. Chesler has just returned from a very successful buying trip, and was fortunate in securing a choice line of the newer things in ladies' summer wear. They include particularly a very fine selection of flowered silk Poplin Skirts, Crepe de Chene and Georgette Crepe Waists in the very newest shades and made in New York latest fashion effects. His purchase was made on very favourable terms, and he can sell these high-class new creations for less than people expected to pay for cheap goods.

Mr. Chesler returned just in time to put these goods in stock, but has not time to list them in the paper or trim the windows, but they will all be on display inside, and at prices that will surely tempt any one who wants to dress well. Beautiful silk dresses from $6.89 up, fashions latest in silk suits from $15.00 up, sport skirts from $1.49 up, sport waists from 89c. up, and along with these new lines will also have extra specials for the holiday shopper all through the store. Don't miss seeing these new things at 298 George street, as they are the finest lot of Ladies' Read-to-Wear ever shown by Mr. Chesler, and at sensational prices.

BIG PARADE ON MONDAY

Details Arranged for Military Features in Connection with Celebration — Private Percy Ruth Killed

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The programme of events for the celebration of Dominion Day and the 50th anniversary of Confederation, includes both morning and afternoon features, in which the citizens are requested to co-operate to the fullest extent.

The order of the morning parade has been arranged as follows:

Great War Veterans' Association and other returned soldiers.
57th Regimental Band
The 57th C. E. F.
Non-commissioned officers and men who are home on leave or who are visiting in Peterborough.
Officers in uniform.
Collegiate Institute Cadets.
Veterans of '66 who will march.
Trades and Labour Council.
Veterans of '66 who do not desire to walk.
Members of Parliament, City and County Councils, Government officials, members of School Boards, City Officials.
Citizens in automobiles.

Assemble at Armouries.

All those taking part in the morning parade will meet in the armouries at 9.30 o'clock, where they will assume formation. Automobiles will be parked on the street. The procession will leave the armouries by the east door and cover the following route: George street to Hunter, to Aylmer, to Charlotte, to George, to Hunter to Brock, to George to Central Park.

Address at the Park.

The morning programme will be concluded by music and addresses at Central Park, among the speakers being: Captain J. H. Burnham, M. P., Mr. George A. Gillespie, M.P.P., His Honour Judge Huyake, Lt.-Col. T. J. Johnston and others.

PTE. RUTH KILLED.

Mr. George Ruth has received word that his nephew, Pte. Percy E. Ruth, Canadian Infantry, is officially reported killed in action on June 3rd. Pte. Ruth, who was a son of Mr. Robert Ruth, enlisted in the west and two of his brothers are also in khaki.

The Kingston Standard says:
Battalion Sergt.-Major J. Bentley, who has been wounded twice at the front and who returned some time ago has again signed up with the 230th Forestry Battalion and is now on his way to the front again. He went overseas with the Second Battalion in the First Contingent and was wounded at Ypres and Festubert. While on furlough at his home in Napanee, he worked at shell-making and has now joined again. He

CANADA'S FOOD CONTROLLER ISSUES AN URGENT APPEAL FOR ECONOMY

Hon. W. J. Hanna Urges Increased Production — Use of Perishable Food Stuffs at Home — Rigid Economy in Menus

CONSERVATION NEEDED

OTTAWA, June 28.—In a statement issued to-night, Hon. W. J. Hanna, the newly-appointed Food Controller, reviews the food situation in Canada, emphasizing the need of the allies, urges economy and the prevention of waste in food, and bespeaks whole-hearted public co-operation.

"Food conservation is essential to win the war," the Controller concludes.

"The outstanding fact of the food situation, which it is imperative that every citizen of Canada should realize at once, is that Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and their European allies are wholly unable to supply the allied armies at the front and on the way. For nearly three years their man-power has been engaged in the direct work of the war, and in some cases large areas of their most productive lands have been overrun by the enemy. Their food shortage and the food to supply the armies of Canada and the United States must be wholly provided from this side of the Atlantic. The supply must also be sufficient to cover losses at sea. Australia, New Zealand, the Argentine Republic, and other countries are not available to relieve the situation, because of their remoteness and the shortage of tonnage.

"The crop of storeable foods grown in Canada and the United States, suitable for shipment overseas, threatens to be entirely inadequate to meet the demand unless the whole people determine by every means in their power to make up the shortfall age. Every individual is under a direct obligation to assist in rationing the allied forces. There must be national co-operation to provide the necessary supplies.

"Time and invention will be required to determine the best means of assuring adequate rations for the Canadian Divisions and the allied nations and armies. But there are some measures that are so obviously right that we ask that they be adopted at once, and that the men and women of the Dominion pledge themselves to their observance. They include:

"Maximum production; the largest possible consumption of perishable foodstuffs in order to liberate the storeable foods for transportation; the adoption of war menus; the prevention of food waste; the utilization and creation of organised voluntary bodies to assist the Food Controller by increasing and conserving the food supplies.

Allied Needs is Canada's Problem.

"The restriction of ocean tonnage makes increased production and consumption of perishable foodstuffs at home imperative if the more easily transported commodities are to be released for export. The food problem of the Dominion is not measured by the domestic market, but by the needs of the allied armies and nations. They require tremendous supplies of wheat, meats, fish, cheese, beans, canned and evaporated foods, and other commodities. They cannot be rationed unless the Dominion saves such foodstuffs for export. Additional production of perishable products will be necessary to fill domestic wants. These can be met, and waste prevented, by national consumption of perishable foodstuffs. Fruits and veget-

WILSON TRYING TO SAVE BEER AND WINE

WASHINGTON, June 29.—President Wilson is throwing his influence into the Senate fight to save beer and wine.

Very much exercized at the consequences of jamming through at the present time, a drastic prohibition measure, which would constitute, as he believes, a blow against personal liberty in the country, the President to-day is endeavouring to force a compromise of the Senate amendment so that distilled spirits alone will be stopped.

Y. M. C. A. CAMPAIGN HAS SECURED $8466 LAST DAY'S EFFORT

$1425 Was the Total Received Yesterday With No Large Individual Subscription --- Campaigners Are Enthusiastic About the Final Result

Previously Reported	$7,041
Thursday's Report	1,425
Total to Date	$8,466

The results of the Y.M.C.A. Campaign to date is most encouraging. Although the objective of $10,000 is not entirely in hand, the team workers are so confident of ultimate success that they are to give another day's time to calling on those who have not already subscribed. In fact a number of the teams agreed to underwrite a certain proportion of the balance needed. It was found that a number of large prospective gifts had not yet been reported on and that quite a few of the regular subscribers were out of town and could not be solicited until their return. Everyone is optimistic as to the final result being a complete victory. It now remains for the friends who are willing to assist, and who may not yet have subscribed to co-operate by sending in their gifts by mail or 'phone, so that Friday may see the objective fully reached.

DO NOT WANT TO BE OVERLOOKED.

Yesterday's experience was quite similar to the preceeding days in that many persons called at the Y.M.C.A. personally or 'phoned their subscription. One physician called to leave $10.00 because he was too busy to see the solicitors when they called at his office. A 'phone message from a good lady who was out of town the day before was to the effect that she did not want to be overlooked as she had $50.00 to give the "Y". Another lady called to leave a subscription for her husband who was away and whom she knew would want to be on the list. This is the kind of spirit to insure success and speaks well for the place the Association has in the hearts of our citizens.

If you have not yet subscribed fill out this pledge and send to the Y. M. C. A. or The Examiner:

MAYOR'S APPEAL TO ALL CITIZENS TO HELP IN CELEBRATION.

To the Editor of The Examiner:—

Dear Sir,—Kindly permit me to use your columns to ask the citizens to heartily co-operate to make the celebration of the 50th Anniversary of Confederation a great success on Monday next.

The Great War Veterans ,the Veterans of '64, the military units and members of all the public bodies, including the City Council, the Board of Education, the Separate School Board, the City Trust, the Utilities Commission, the Police Commission, the Board of Health, the Central Charity Board, and also the Trades Unions and the Greater Peterborough Association, which includes all citizens, are asked to meet at the Armouries at 9:30 o'clock in the morning. A procession will be formed and proceed through the principal streets and return to the Central Park, where addresses will be delivered on Confederation, its history and benefits. This part of the day's proceedings will especially emphasize the subject of Confederation, and all Canadians, native or by adoption, should take a keen interest in them.

In the afternoon the special reception to the Great War Veterans will be held at the Exhibition Grounds. The motor car parade will take place at one o'clock, and the Motor League, which has charge of the feature, wishes all motor car owners to have their cars at the Market Square at that hour, when the procession will be formed which will take the Great War Veterans to the Grounds. I hope that all car owners will assist in this feature of the day's programme, and unite in the parade with flags on their cars. The reception to the Veterans will take place upon the arrival of the procession at the Grounds, and it is urged that the citizens be present in large numbers to honour the veterans, to whom too much honour cannot be given. Following the reception the programme of sports prepared by the Public Holidays Committee of the Greater Peterborough Association will be carried out.

All citizens should unite in the celebration of this day, to honour the veterans, to celebrate the half-century of Confederation, and to make the day a successful one for Peterborough.

Unity will do it, and unity is asked for—hearty, public-spirited co-operation.

Yours very truly,
JOS. J. DUFFUS, Mayor.

THINGS THAT GO TOGETHER.

If the meeting in the interests of Technical Education in the Collegiate Institute Hall, to-night, doesn't attract a better attendance than did a similar meeting in the interests of Penny Banks, public spirit is in a bad way. Technical Education and Penny Banks are blood relations. Technical education is intended to provide the conditions of greater industrial and mechanical efficiency; to benefit the coming mechanical and industrial workers of the city and country. This benefit will be two-fold—greater industrial (mechanical) proficiency, larger output and greater profit to the worker. Technical education is really to prepare the worker to earn more money. What good purpose will that serve if, at the same time, he is not taught by precept and force of habit to make the right use of the increased income he gains?

One of the chief conditions hostile to greater national progress and prosperity, is the improper use of the means that come into people's hands. We are complaining of the high cost of living, and it is something to complain of; but it is a fact recognized by the thinker and the observer that no small part of the hardship felt, a good deal of the pinch of high prices felt, are due to the waste from improvident buying and preparing of food. This comes from imperfect knowledge and appreciation of the value and proper use of money. It is a commonly accepted fact that in this country as much food is wasted in foolish buying and preparing for the table as is profitably used for actual consumption. A companion fact to this is that as much money is wasted unprofitably, foolishly, and, in many cases, harmfully, as is properly employed, and prudently and profitably expended to meet our necessities and our legitimate pleasures.

Technical education develops the child physically and mentally and trains him to do more work with less exertion and wear on his physical forces, fits him for larger efficiency, and makes him a more important and useful factor in our industrial economy. Before he leaves school, if properly trained, he gains the mechanical habit; his natural mechanical bent is given the right direction, and the best development. He becomes a better mechanic, more useful to the community and country, more profitable to his employer, and more profitable to himself. But his technical education will be incomplete if, along with it, he does not learn by some such agency as the Penny Bank, the true value, the right use of the increased money his technical training will bring. For want of such training the average citizen doesn't get half the value of the money he earns. If his employer conducted his business with the same false economy and misdirection of capital, there would soon be neither business nor wages.

Chickens come home to roost. The German chancellor scoffed at treaties as "scraps of paper." Now German soldiers are compelled to wear paper clothing.

SAYING AND DOING.

The Pioneer—"a weekly journal of social progress and moral reform," devoted chiefly to temperance propagandism, has a striking first page cartoon. It represents the Kaiser decorating his chief ally—hanging an iron cross on the neck of a helmetted, and hooted whisky bottle, representing the liquor traffic, with the legend—spoken by the Kaiser—

"My dear friend, in recognition of your magnificent work in undermining the strength of our enemies, it is fitting that I should decorate you with the Iron Cross. Let the good work go on!"

This is only a picture, but it represents a great truth, that the vitality of the nations, the physical fitness and moral strength of the manhood of the country is weakened, virtually paralyzed, by the use of strong drink, the governments themselves by licensing and affording access to strong drink, fostering the drinking habit, really putting the bottle to their neighbours' lips.

Fortunately in Ontario we are at present nominally free from the weakening influence of strong drink. But we can't tell statistically, though we are morally certain of the fact, the deplorable degree to which the depraving influence of strong drink has operated in weakening the physical forces and moral sense of its victims; in destroying high ideals and patriotic impulse. We don't know statistically how much the liquor traffic, by deteriorating the fibre of Canadian manhood, has hindered and blocked the enlistment of Canada's quota of 500,00 soldiers; but one can be morally certain that if it had not produced weakened bodies, weakened wills and deadened the higher impulses, we could and would have reached our half million soldiers by voluntary recruiting and would not have had to resort to the comparative humiliation of conscription. Where it has done this, it has wrought in thousands of cases, physical unfitness, with the result that at the beginning of enlistment, from forty to fifty per cent. of the recruits offering were rejected as physically unfit. Canada has greatly over-enlisted her 500,000, but the men offering had to be so largely weeded out that we fell short, 100,000.

Prohibition of the manufacture and sale of strong drink has been adopted in other countries, but not in Canada. The Congress of the United States has placed in the president's hands the power to muzzle the liquor dragon as a war measure, in the interests of manhood efficiency, and conservation of food for war uses. It is estimated by the department of agriculture of the United States that the grain used for intoxicating liquor in that country would permit of the sending of a one-pound loaf every day to every one of the eleven million men at the front.

But we dont find our government doing anything like that. If the grain wasted in beers and whiskeys during the past three years in Canada, were now available, there would be ample supply for war needs and it would have helped, instead of hindering, our efficiency in waging war. Instead of doing something like that in a national and imperial crisis, Sir Robert Borden is sitting bored in his seat watching parliament chatter. Day after day there are poured streams of oratorical word wash on conscription, with not one new idea—that was not expressed in the first half dozen speeches. The party whips have been handed the names of fifty members who want to "place themselves on record" for or against conscription, or for or against something else—as if it mattered a fig whether or not they were "placed on record" or not.

We don't want so much talking, we want doing. We want every avenue to war work opened; every obstruction to progress in war work removed. Men that do things don't talk much. Haig, who is doing big work in driving the Huns back step by step, tells of his work in a few brief sentences, which a member of parliament would stretch into a half hour speech full of ponderous platitudes. We owe it to the soldiers of the armies that are fighting for us that we should do something besides talk, take measures of some kind to fill up the depleted Canadian forces at the front—do it by doing something with more effect than fuss. We should adopt measures, do it by doing something besides talking, to bring into the fighting area every resource of our country—our manhood, our wealth, and all our resources—use everything, waste nothing—not even our breath, in saying what we are going to do, but don't do.

The Liberal leader in making his clean sweep in the Saskatchewan elections, didn't use a broom, but a road grader.

CATS AND PRODUCTION.

There does not seem to be as much relation between cats and production as there is between cats and reproduction, for they multiply with the fecundity and frequency of the proverbial weed. We are urged to the greatest possible production in the interests of the war. Production is retarded by the insect enemies of growth of grain and fruit and vegetables. Birds are the principal agency in destroying these enemies of vegetation, for a great part of the food of birds consists of insects, which in turn make their chief living out of the destruction of vegetables and fruits that man requires for his sustenance. Where cats and production are related is in the fact that the deadliest foe, the most destructive enemy of our food conserving birds is the domestic and predaciously predominating cat. About our houses and grounds we see birds—insectivorous and interesting and intimate—like the beautiful robin, spend weeks in building and rebuilding its nest, weeks in incubating the eggs, weeks in killing thousands of vegetable destroying insects, to feed its young, and after all this splendid ornithological citizenship, the first moment almost the young robins try their wings, pounce goes the cat, and the poor bird, the product of so much patience and providence, and with so much potentiality of service and pleasure, disappears. Not only the robin but all of our song birds, the jay, the oriole, the wren, the song sparrow, fall a prey to the claw and maw of the superfluous cat. Again, complaints are made, that cats tear up finely seed garden and flower beds and sleep on, and soil, verandah cushions left out for the night; indulge in amatory cater-wauling under open bedroom window to the ruin of sleep and comfort, and injury to health. The cat may be all right as a pet for the house, but no one has a right to keep anything that can become, and does become, a nuisance and annoyance to others.

There are both sentimental and practical reasons for the restriction of the cat. Every day ladies, who love, cherish and feed the birds, are annoyed and pained at the destruction of our song birds, and the loss of the life and variety and charm they give to our lawns and gardens. Then the death of every bird saves the lives of thousands of noxious insects, and to a large extent, in totality in many cases, the plants of our gardens meet the fate of the bird. The law protects our insectivorous birds; but the law does not deal with the most cruel enemy of our insectivorous and song birds the predatory, vagabond, vicious and universal house cat. We tax dogs, because one in ten thousand worries a farmer's sheep, but we give a free run to cats, each of which every day kills two or three birds..

Necessity compels us to tolerate a government and parliament living on borrowed life, dealing with a trifle like conscription; but when the government assumes a tremendous responsibility, like appointing Senators a protest is due.

saw service in India and South Africa and was eleven years in the Canadian Militia and thirteen years in the Imperial Army.

OTTAWA, June 28.—According to a return tabled in the Commons today, 3,693 returned soldiers have been placed either permanently or temporarily in the Federal service. Of this total, 2,514 are employed by the Department of Militia and Defence, including 1,486 who are still on the strength of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, pending discharge. In the other departments of the Government, returned soldiers given employment are as follows: Public Works, 55; Justice, 15; Railways and Canals, 102; Labor, 1; Interior, 81; Naval Service, 17; Inland Revenue, 14; Secretary of State Department, 13; Finance, 13; Customs, 203; Marine, 8; Trade and Commerce 15; Postoffice, 598; Agriculture, 41.

"Picked Up" Hastings Girl and Now Faces Serious Accusation

A young man appeared before Acting Magistrate Rush this morning on a charge of indecent assault against a Hastings girl who came to Peterborough with an excursion on Wednesday. The defendant neither pleaded nor elected, and the case was enlarged until next Thursday. In the meantime he was given his liberty on bail of $500.

The plaintiff, who is apparently about fourteen or fifteen years old, was strolling about the city with a somewhat older girl, a chum from Hastings. Evidently they accepted the approaches of two Peterborough young men, and after remaining together for a time the older girl told the plaintiff to go on with the fellow who had paired off with her. The older girl disappeared at this stage, and the scene changes to Nicholls Oval, where the strapping young fellaw and the fifteen-year-old girl appear. Fortunately for her the caretaker arrived opportunely.

Afterwards the girl laid a complaint at the police station and Thursday afternoon, working on her descriptions of him, picked out the man, who appeared in court this morning.

The offence, if proved, is a serious one, and is punishable by a maximum of two years in penitentiary.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM LIEUT. J. A. NEW WHO IS NOW ON FIRING LINE

Describes Sounds of Various Shells Which Make Life Unpleasant on the Battlefield

Following are a few interesting extracts taken from a letter received this morning from Lieut. J. A. New, a Peterborough boy who enlisted in a Cobourg unit and is now in France. Lieut. New is a former member of the Examiner staff, and at the time of his enlistment was associated with the law firm of Gordon and Widdifield. The letter, in part, reads as follows:

4th Canadian Mounted Rifles,
B. E. F., France.

Since I wrote, telling you that I was going to France, I have had no opportunity for writing, beyond a Field Post Card (known to the military as a 'whizz-bang'), which I hope you received.

France is a beautiful country, and though I have met only a few of the people, and then only in a business way, I find them to possess a charming manner. I was surprised to find that I could make myself understood. In consequence of this I was made spokesman for the party coming up and was dubbed Frenchman.

FINE WEATHER.

I am perfectly well in health, and the weather up to the present has been very agreeable, but of course, being agreeabe intensifies a thousand-fold the terrible business on hand. What an inferno! What fiendish hell fire! It is inconceivable! When I think of flesh and blood living for two and a half years in the midst of such a nerve-racking tempest I am amazed I have had working parties for the past three nights and the excitement experienced was quite different from that occasioned by a baseball match or a debate. The second night, especially, when I owed it to Divine Providence that I was enabled to get my men away without casualties. The significance of the various sounds are already more or less known to me. The Howitzer shell rushing through the air like an express train, the angry crack of the shrapnel shell, and the whistle of its fragments, the moan and the heavy boom of the high explosive, the sending bang of the aeroplane bomb. Nor do any of them improve upon acquaintance. There are many things that will only bear relating upon my return.

LIEUT. J. A. NEW
Who is now in France with the 4th C.M.R.

IN A WOOD.

I am writing this in a little wood and the birds overhead are piping their tunes to the accompaniment of the syncopated tenor of the cuckoo. What an ethereal diversion.

On coming up I met one of the Graham boys of Peterborough.

In conclusion, pardon pencil and stationery. We have to improvise here and in some instances it is really amusing.

Sincerely yours,
J. A. NEW.

Cyril Carroll Wins Prize

Master Cyril Carroll, who has been a pupil of the local Collegiate Institute for the last year, has been awarded the first prize in the above school for his essay on Farm Labour, namely, "How can an Ontario High School Boy, by working on the farm, help (1) himself; (2) the farmer; (3) the Empire?"

This essay competition was authorized by the Organization of Resources Committee, Province of Ontario, and the prizes were awarded by the same body. Cyril Carroll lives in Young's Point and previous to his coming here, attended the Lakefield High School.

Some men are afraid to marry and some are fearless until after they marry.

TRUE WOOL SUITS ARE "SEMI-READY"

Custom-made Suits are Features of Special Order Service.

Men, corporation or government which does not one thing which they would hide or would like to hide from the public, can rest assured of a long, happy and respected life.

"Never do what you are sorry for," said the President.

"Never buy a wool that you must apologize for," said the cloth-buyer.

"Never put in a stitch that you have to make an excuse for," said the head tailor.

With these three basics the skilful tailors of Semi-ready tailoring should be able to produce the finest and best tailoring in the world. That is the ambition behind the product.

To a man who feels he is a departure from "the average" in men's sizes, there is both a physique type system and a Special Order Department.

A garment to special order is custom-made in every detail, all silk-sewn, cut to exact measurements of the customer and delivered by the shops on a four-day schedule. The Semi-ready shops turn out thousands of suits this way each month, all from pure British woollens—100 p.c. cloth.

Harry Thornton, who is with Frank L. Jenne in the Semi-Ready Store, says that he was in Montreal a few days ago, and it was truly marvellous the dexterity of the skilled tailors at work, and the efficiency methods of handling the large number of individual special orders which come to the Semi-Ready shops every day from the five hundred Semi-Ready stores throughout Canada.

KINMOUNT NEWS ITEMS

KINMOUNT, June 28.—We are having lovely growing weather and the prospects are splendid for hay, grain, roots and all sorts of vegetables.

WAR AUTHOR KILLED.

PARIS, June 28.—Corporal James Hall, of Colfax, Iowa, a member of the Lafayette Escadrille, is believed to have been killed in an encounter with seven German airplanes, according to the Herald. He was shot through the lung. His machine fell within the French lines. Hall, who was the author of "Kitchener's Mob," joined the American squadron a short time ago, after being wounded in the British army and discharged. He brought down a German airplane four days ago.

Sub-Lieutenant Dorme, one of the most skilful French aviators, who has been credited officially with bringing down 23 German machines, has been missing since he flew over the enemy's lines on May 25 on a scouting mission.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

ALDERMEN NOT IMPRESSED WITH CHIEF'S NEW CAR

Some Members of Council To See It is Not Used for Joy Riding

The general public is still wondering how long it will be before the City Council discover the means by which Fire Chief Howard got a runabout automobile instead of a light utility truck. According to Ald. Dobbin, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee, who prior to the purchase of the small car, dilated not infrequently upon the needs of such a piece of apparatus. Not only did Ald. Dobbin give frequent dissertations on the subject, but he added to his knowledge of such things by touring the American continent at the city's expense. Upon his return, Ald. Dobbin recommended the purchase of a Ford car to be fitted with a truck body capable of carrying in an emergency three or four men, the pulmotor at all times, in addition to a miscellaneous collection of small equipment. This was generally agreed to by the City Council, and nothing more was heard until a few days ago when the car blossomed forth, not in the form recommended by the Council, but fitted with a semi-racing type body and seating capacity for two men. The rear part of the car is about the size of an ordinary tool box that is usually found on a roadster type of car. Where the pulmotor will go has not been revealed, at least to some of the aldermen, who are beginning to rub their eyes and wonder if they have had it put over them once more. Ald. Stratton was one member of the Council who opposed any kind of a joy car and insisted that whatever type of car was purchased would be kept in the hall and not used for driving the Chief around from one place to another. The matter is not yet settled, and further inquiries are to be instituted by the aldermen.

FUR COATS A BATTLE GOAL.

How Five Old Serbs Coveted and Won Three Bulgars' Warm Clothes.

"Occasionally the drama of war takes on an intimate, almost a neighbourly touch in the Balkans," says the National Geographic Magazine. "Five cold men of the Choumadia division became aware last winter that in the Bulgarian dugout just opposite their post, not fifty feet away, three fur-coated officers often met.

"'Let us get the fur coat,' said the five cold Serbs.

"The story of the getting is too long to be told here. But during the two weeks in which the five cold men intrigued and manoeuvred for those three fur coats their entire regiment became aware of the play and watched it as one might a particularly entertaining movie. In the end the five point. From the Colonel down the men of that regiment rejoiced over the strategy of the five cold men. For the remainder of the winter they luxuriated in fur. The bitter winds of Dobraspolyi Mountain had no terrors for both sides, but that is beside the men succeeded. Lives were lost on them."

Farm Help Is Urgently Needed

The Organization of Resources Committee considered at its meeting yesterday the question of farm help for haying and harvesting. Reports from all parts of the Province indicate bumper crops. The Committee will communicate at once with all Boards of Trade, Chambers of Commerce, patriotic and other associations, urging them to keep in close touch with the situation so that everything possible can be done to meet the need.

BELGIAN BISHOP JAILED.

He and Several Priests Are Imprisoned by the Germans.

AMSTERDAM, June 28.—According to the Telegraaf, several priests of the entourage of Cardinal Mercier, primate of Belgium, were arrested recently and imprisoned in Germany. One of them is Bishop Legraive, of Malines. Twenty others have been imprisoned in Belgium. Among this number is Cardinal Mercier's private secretary, who was sentenced to a year in prison for preaching a sermon on Whit Sunday on Christian charity.

Park Concerts Discontinued

Statement from the Executive Committee of 57th Band

Edior of Examiner, City:

Dear Sir,—As the City Council has practically signified by their recent action in reducing our annual grant to a sum which is utterly inadequate for our requirements, that they do not desire a continuance of our Friday night concerts, we bow with the best grace we can command to their verdict.

It is not without feelings of deepest regret that we announce the discontinuance of these concerts, which have provided such a source of pleasure to thousands of our citizens, and can assure our friends and the public generally that nothing short of the direct necessity has compelled this action.

The New Year may probably give us Aldermen with broader viewpoints and less susceptibility to cheap and petty ward politics. When this time arrives we hope to resume our concerts and in the meantime will retain our organization to the best of our ability.
Executive Committee 57th Regt. Band.

COLLEGIATE CADETS ASKED TO PARADE MONDAY MORNING

The Cadets of the Collegiate Institute are asked to meet at the Collegiate Institute at 9.15 o'clock, Monday morning, in order to take part in the morning parade. A large number of the Cadets are working on farms around the country, and it will be a difficult matter to get them all in.

CROPS LOOKING FINE

Last Night's Rain Worth Thousands of Dollars to the Country

The rainstorm that fell through the night and greeted the early rising citizen was a winner in the sight of the greater production advocates. Some people claim a growth of one inch overnight. That may be somewhat exaggerated, but it is safe to say that the greater production movement never received greater impetus all season than it did during the past twenty-four hours. The rain was warm and gentle in its descent, and it lasted for several hours. It was worth thousands of dollars to the land over which it fell.

Farmers who ventured into town this morning were jubilant over the crop prospects. They say that the outlook was seldom better than it is at the present time. A few more weeks of such weather and all will be well. In fact many of the crops are already past the danger mark, where storm or drought would be likely to do serious damage.

FOOD CONTROLLER'S APPEAL FOR ECONOMY

ables in their seasons should be the country's foods to the greatest possible extent.

Eliminate Waste Entirely.

"Food is being wasted in the stores, hotels, restaurants, clubs and homes, of the Dominion. It is the duty of every citizen dealing in or preparing and serving food to adopt measures which will eliminate waste entirely.

Adopt War Menus.

"The adoption of war menus is a national duty if the country is to do its share in the provision of food essential to the successful prosecution of he war. There must be immediate voluntary action to curtail table excesses. The soldier lives simply. He is not given a choice of many dishes and delicacies.

Extend Work of Organizations.

"The efforts of the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture, other Governmental organizations, and the voluntary associations already at work are greatly appreciated. Their further assistance is earnestly invited. All organized bodies and every citizen should study means of conserving the non-perishable foods. There is equal need for increased production of perishable products. Where the work of organization has not already been done, we suggest that the Mayors and Reeves of urban communities take action at once, so that all available labour in the municipalities may be put at the service of those who need it, preference being given in every instance to those whose sons or husbands have gone to the front. There are many men in towns and villages who have had farm experience whose services will be of great value in this connection.

Appeal To The Churches.

"Public realization of the true food position is imperative. We make an earnest appeal to the churches of the Dominion to lay the facts and the needs of the situation strongly before their congregations.

"The soldiers at the front expect the men and women of Canada to do their share in providing the necessary food. They must not be disappointed unless they are betrayed by the people at home. Any self-denial practised in the homes of the Dominion will be insignificant in comparison with that of the Canadian and allied armies, or with the privations which millions of people in Belgium and Serbs continually suffer. Food conservation is essential to win the war."

AN IMPORTANT LECTURE

Principal Sprague of Hamilton's Technical School will address a public meeting in the Collegiate Institute Hall, Friday, June 29, at 8 o'clock. He will speak on the value of Technical Training and Technical Schools. A large attendance is requested. There will be no admission fee.

A RIGID CENSORSHIP.

LONDON, June 29.—Despatches from the Netherlands say German newspapers arriving there indicate rigid gagging by censor. It is inferred that something dramatic has happened or is about to happen in Germany.

(By U. P. Staff Correspondent Philip Simms.)

WITH THE BRITISH ARMIES IN THE FIELD, June 28.— In a battle where the roar of thunder was indistinguishable from incessant cannonading, the British achieved their latest advance south-west of Lens.

It was just at dark Thursday. From an elevation just back of the Canadian troops, I watched the battle begin and end.

A black storm cloud came up from the west about six. The storm broke in mid-summer fury a few moments later. For an hour there was the play of vivid lightning in the darkening skies, vieing with the flashes of big guns, which the crash of thunder claps was a feeble echo to the bolts of steel loosed from the throats of the guns.

The British completed their victory before it grew pitch dark. They advanced an average of five hundred yards along a front of two miles. Some two hundred prisoners and six machine guns were reported captures in complement headquarters reports today.

At the time this is cabled the Canadians are still advancing. They have gone more than half way through Avion. They have pushed their lines still further south-east of the city. In all of this movement the Germans have not tried to carry out a single counter attack. They have left the British to consolidate every gain without a stroke in reprisal for the losses they suffered.

CONSUMERS WILL BENEFIT.

OTTAWA, June 29—Fuel Controller Magrath intimated to-day that Ontario and Quebec consumers would likely benefit by any agreement between the United States government and coal operators to reduce prices at the pit mouth.

STRIVING FOR PEACE.

AMSTERDAM, June 29.—Emperor Charles told representatives of eight Austrian political parties that he was striving for peace at the earliest possible date, according to a report received this afternoon from Vienna.

SOFT COAL PRICES DOWN.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—As a result of the government's negotiations with coal barons, soft coal prices have come down in some cases $5.00 per ton.

HAS SEVERED RELATIONS

LONDON, June 29.—Announced this afternoon that Greece has broken off relations with Germany, Austria, Turkey and Bulgaria.

PETROGRAD, June 29.—All moderate, law abiding citizens are mobilising to support the provisional government against any possible counter revolts at expected demonstrations next Sunday.

MAKES BIG HAUL IN LAKEFIELD COURT

License Inspector Stewart Prosecutes and Convicts in Eleven Cases To-day

License Inspector Stewart was in Lakefield to-day prosecuting eleven cases under the Ontario Temperance Act. The cases all arose in Lakefield and vicinity and a conviction was made in each one. The highest fine was $200 and costs in one case, and $50.00 and costs in the remaining ten. A total of $437.00 in fines and costs was collected. Magistrate Langley presided.

EXCURSION TO LINDSAY

Via Stony Lake and the G. T. R.—Delightful Water and Rail Trip in One Day

"The only holiday worth while" is a holiday spent on the water. On Monday, July 9th, the first of the season of popular water and rail trips to Lindsay has been arranged by the Stony Lake Navigation Co. The Steamer "Stoney Lake" will carry the excursionists up the Trent Canal route to Lakefield, thence on through the beautiful chain of Kawartha Lakes to Lindsay, returning home the same evening by Grand Trunk Railway. This trip has been largely patronized in former years, and will, doubtless, be again. Watch for the placards for further particulars.

St. John's Choir Picnic Was a Splendid Outing

No pleasanter day in the annals of the St. John's Choir outings than that of yesterday when one hundred choristers and friends, in most lovely weather, boarded the "Stoney Lake" and sailed to Burleigh Falls, where Mr. and Mrs. Devey had made splendid arrangements for entertaining the party. The luncheon was substantial and admirably served, and full justice was done to the goods provided. Snapshotting, fishing and bathing were indulged in, and before starting the return journey the choristers delighted their guests, as well as those at the Falls hotel, with a chorus from Haydn's Creation. "The marvellous work." At Young's Point the races were run off, for prizes generously contributed by the congregation. Mr. Harry Long brought along some fine "spy" apples, an unexpected treat at this time of the year. The large number of vocalists on board included many members of the "Greek Slave" company, who made the time on board thoroughly enjoyable. Coleman Bros., served a dainty supper on board, in every way excellent, and the day's catering was a decided success. The Rector's Warden, Mr. W. F. Johnston, Mr. H. W. Morpet and Mr. R. J. Devey were responsible for the splendid arrangements made for the party, and received the hearty cheers and appreciation from the company, a courtesy which was also extended heartily to the caterers and the officers and crew of the steamer.

A thoroughly enjoyable day terminated at 8.30 p.m. by the singing of "God Save the King," as the boat tied up at George Street wharf.

Billy Sunday Will Preach in Army Camps

Evangelist Arranges To Use His "Days Off" In This Work, Beginning Next Autumn.

The Rev. Wm. A. Sunday will devote much of next season to preaching to the soldiers in the concentration camps of this country. This is in response to requests of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association, in the hands of which the government has placed the religious wellbeing of the Protestant enlisted men.

Mr. Sunday will be unable to go to France, at least for a year, because his campaigns in cities are not only all mapped out, but the expenses donated and arrangements made, even for the building of tabernacles. But he will give practically all his Mondays and other "off hours" to the American army training camps and pleading with the men to "hit the trail."

Mr. Sunday will hold a campaign next November and December in Atlanta, Ga., and through January and February in Washington, D.C.

It is expected by then there will be 100,000 men in camps within fifteen or twenty miles of Washington. Mr. Sunday, during January and February, will not only spend Monday with Uncle Sam's boys, but he will hold services at night for them.

Mr. Sunday was in conference while in this city with Major General Leonard Wood, commander of the Department of the Southeast.

Mr. and Mrs. Sunday will leave this week for their ranch at Hood River, Ore., where they will lead an outdoor life, resting, gardening, and farming, until September 2, when Mr. Sunday will begin a campaign in Los Angeles. From Los Angeles they will go to Atlanta. The Chicago campaign is arranged for March, April, and the first three weeks in May.

APPEAL FROM CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 28.—W. M. German, M. P. for this county, has been sent a petition signed by sixteen "conscientious objectors" of the Church of God, Fonthill which asks him to oppose conscription. They said in their petition that they wished to be considered loyal, but that they were opposed to fighting.

Lieut.-Colonel Jack Fessenden Is Decorated for Good Work

His many friends will be glad to learn that Lieut. Col. Jack Fessenden of Peterborough has been awarded the Distinguished Service Order. Lieut.-Col. Fessenden, who is a son of Mr. Cortez Fessenden, of this city, has been in the Imperial servie for a long period. He is a graduate of Royal Military College, Kingston, and the D. S. O. is the third decoration he has won in the present war, having been previously honoured by the Kings of Serbia and Italy.

CRACK TORONTO RIDERS TO BE ON HAND MONDAY

Bicycle Races a Big Feature of Dominion Day Celebration MacDonald Club of Toronto Sending Fifteen Cyclists A Great Programme

The bicycle races on Monday are sure to be a success. Over a score of Canada's best amateurs are coming for the races at the Exhibition grounds, Herb Macdonald, Bicycle Club of Toronto has named fifteen starters in the five-mile open and two mile handicap.

Doc Morton, the fastest amateur short distance rider in Canada and a member of the Macdonald Club is among them. Little Jack Macdonald, 10 years old, with the smallest racing bicycle ever built will accompany the Toronto party.

A special car will be attached to the C.P.R. train, due to arrive Monday a.m. at 11.30 and will be met by a delegation of Peterborough cyclists. St. Onge, the Montreal rider, and former trick cyclist is already here, having arrived last night. Harry Richard, C.W.A., official will arrive Monday a.m. to act as referee. Bicycle Bill Grachal, the big bicycle booster is coming from Ottawa. Mr. George Brayden, of Weston, Ont., the noted touring cyclist will act as one of the officials. Peterborough fans are to be treated to regular bicycle races. Ever since the London, Ont., races on Empire Day, where bicycle racing certainly had a comeback and the Peterborough racers were first announced, riders have been training, and now it is up to the public to encourage this wonderful sport. The Health Society have been presented with some fine prizes for the races and it is hoped we will be favoured with good weather. The Swift Cycle Club, of Toronto have entered four of their crack riders; the Salem Club three riders, and the Classic Club, of Toronto name two entries. Together with the Toronto riders the boys from Peterborough and vicinity will make up a fine field of riders. There has been a two-mile race for Peterborough boys of 18 years and under added to the list of events, making three bicycle races on the card. Fred St. Onge, the former trick cyclist, now a traveller from the house of A. E. Bregent, of Montreal, who presented the $50.00 bicycle will do his tramp bicycle act on the track in front of the Grand Stand.

The following Toronto riders will positively start in the big five-mile open race and two-mile handicap.

Doc Morton, Fred McCarthy, R. E. Coupland, L. Leeson, J. Pidgeon, H. Hoskins, S. Wicks, Wm. Taylor, H. Lewis, E. Nichols, W. Bulger, E. Saits, Fred Terry, George Watkins, Herb Macdonald; all of Herb Macdonald's bicycle club.

Swift Cycle Club.—Jas. Martin, Neal Russell, Tom Ford, Roy Hunter.

Salem Cycle Club.—L. Scarlatto, Geo. Wright, Ray Goldsmith, Harry Martin.

Classic Cycle Club.—Norman Webster, Mark Hannam.

Entries for the races, which are held under C.W.A. sanction, positively close Saturday evening. Entries can be made at C. R. Bank's Garage.

Another big bicycle race, a "Tour around Peterborough," headed by Fred St. Onge, of Montreal will start from Bank's Garage Saturday evening at 7 p.m.—slow race, just a social ride—all riders of bicycles invited. At the recent Montreal race, 417 riders turned out. Lady cyclists are cordially invited to join in the ring. Ride a Bicycle.

With the addition of a gold watch which has been donated as First Prize in the two-mile handicap, open race, it has necessitated the re-arranging of the prize list as follows:

Five-Mile Open—First: Pope Bicycle, valued at $50.00, presented by A. E. Bregent, Montreal; Second: Scarf Pin; Third: Pair of Dunlop bicycle tires.

Two-Mile Handicap Open—First Prize, Gold Watch; Second Prize, Scarf Pin; Third Prize, Bag of Flour.

BOWLING NEWS

GROCERS WIN TWO FROM KING PINS.

Last night, one of the closest and hardest fought league matches was witnessed at the Water Street alleys, when the Grocers won two games from the King Pins. The King Pins won the first game by a good margin; the Grocers coming back and winning the second game by 93 pins. The last game was a very close contest, the Grocers winning out by 12 pins. Fitzpatrick, for the Grocers, had high three games, with a total of 457. Ross, for the Grocers, had high single, with a count of 204. Hughes was high man for the King Pins with a total of 421.

The following were the scores:

Morning Sessions Are Proposed

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, However, Does Not Approve

OTTAWA, Ont., June 28.—Sir Robert Borden again attempted to-day to get a day fixed for morning sessions of the House in order to expedite the important business on hand. "I will move to-morrow," he said, "that on and after Tuesday, July 8, there be morning sessions." Sir Wilfrid Laurier at once rose to object. The debate on conscription was not being unnecessarily lengthened, he said. If there were obstruction or anything of that sort it would be different. He did not think there should be morning sessions until the debate is over.

"I really don't see the reason for objection," said Sir Robert, and his followers backed him up with "hear, hear." "Morning sessions" he added 'would really give greater opportunity for debate rather than restricting it."

"This debate is the most important matter we have had before the House," answered Sir Wilfrid, "and when it is dispensed of we will do everything to facilitate other business if you give a little latitude now."

"When do you think we will be able to get through with it?" asked Premier Borden. "I do not know," said the Opposition leader, "but I will try to give you an answer to-morrow."

"Please do," agreed the Premier, "for that circumstance might influence my judgment very much."

The matter accordingly stands over. There is a general feeling among conscriptionists that Sir Robt. Borden should insist on the morning sessions, as time is the essence of the conscription issue and a lot of it is being wasted.

New Local Record for The Maxwell

A new local record was created for the Maxwell car when one of the new models, driven by Dr. Middleton, covered 28.6 miles on one gallon of gasoline. Others in the car with Dr. Middleton were Mr. Buller, Dr. Middleton's brother, and Mr. Curle, local sales manager for the Maxwell car. This record was made during a trip to Fraserville and back.

TAILS CHEWED OFF.

Docking of Mr. T. M. Hunter's Horses Solved by "Craig Kennedy" Method.

The veil has been lifted from a Monaghan mystery the local authorities recently investigated. Eleven of Mr. T. M. Hunter's two-year-old colts had their tails cut off, apparently an attempt to injure the animals. It has since been discovered that a number of calves in pasture with the horses had chewed off the tails. The "docking" of the tails was not as clean cut as a knife should have left it, and suspicion gradually switched to the wide-eyed calves.

Mrs. Malaprop Tells About It

Oh yes, Miss Missem, we had a most hinjoyous time at Mrs. Matem's Garden Party. The Matem's back yard enjoins the river, there is only one row of houses between, and you can smell the mud quite plain and the singing of the musketeers in the evening is lovely. And the hatmosphere is most embracing. So we all had very consuming appetites, specially that Bill Jones. He had six helpings of boiled ham. Really, I felt most ashamed, although I only had four. But that ham was good. Mrs. Matem got it at Paskin's Store and she only paid 29c a pound for it. And those sweet mustard pickles was munificent, only Bill Jones eat 'em the dish and so there was not enough to go round, and he got the biggest share, cause nobody else would eat 'em after he had picked 'em off his pants. After supper Mr. Matem got the fellers who wasn't too full to help him paris green his potatoes and we ladies went and give 'em good advice, on how to do it. And you ought to 'eve seen those bugs curl up. That is awful good "Green" what Paskin's sells. Why those bugs started to sing "Now I lay me down to die," as soon as they saw the package. Well I felt so empty-like after working so hard, that I had to go and get a snack, so I got a dish of cream custard with apricots, and it was so delopshus that I felt like more, only I didn't like to be greedy seein' as I had 'ad five helpins. Mrs. Matem says Paskins only charges 15c for the custard and 15c pound for the apricots. Well everybody had a most endurable time. But Bill Jones made hisself sick, eatin' chocolates, and I aint surprised, cause they had a new kind with a sort of soft crisp fillin with nuts and Mrs. Matem says Paskins only charges 35c a pound for them.

Eh! Where is Paskins?

Lawks! I thought everybody knew its that store on the corner of Hunter and Aylmer.

Eh! Yes they are on the 'phone, its number 317.

OBITUARY

WILLIAM NICHOLLS

William Nicholls, brother of the Misses Nicholls, 216 McDonel street, died at Spokane, Washington, on May 30th, after a brief illness. The funeral services, held at the First Baptist Church, of which he was a member, were conducted by Rev. J. E. Smith.

Mr. Nicholls was a son of the late W. C. Nicholls, and was born in Smith Township, where he lived many years, and later, some time in this city. He removed to the West between 35 and 40 years ago, and married, his wife predeceasing him three years. The late Mr. Nicholls was well known in business, particularly real estate, with which he was identified for many years.

He is survived by three daughters and four sons. One of the latter, William A. Nicholls, is well known to many, having attended and graduated at the Collegiate Institute.

ROBERT P. PAYNE.

Mr. Robert Porter Payne, a well-known and highly-respected resident of Dummer, passed away after a very short illness, on Saturday, June 23, 1917, at his home, Lot 16, Concession 4, Dummer.

The late Mr. Payne was born January 2st, 1871, on Lot 18, Concession 3, Dummer, where he resided till his marriage to Miss Bessie Hurr of Southwold, Eng., in May, 1903, when he moved to his present home, always following the occupation of farming.

He was popular with all who knew him and the news of his death was received with deep sorrow by a large circle of friends. He was a Methodist in religion, being a member of Bethel Church on the Warsaw circuit. He is survived by his sorrowing wife and four children: Hanlan, Verna, Winnifred, and Vivian; also his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Payne of Lakefield, and two brothers, Wm. A. Payne of Smith, and Jacob H. Payne of Lakefield, and one sister, Mrs. Everett Garbutt, of Dummer.

The funeral services conducted by Rev. Clare of Warsaw, were held at the home on Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m. and thence to the family plot in Warsaw cemetery, followed by a very large number of friends.

MRS. NORMAN McCONKEY.

Maud Elliott, beloved wife of Norman McConkey, Lot 18, Concession 16, Smith, died at noon, after a short illness. She leaves to mourn her loss, besides her husband, three daughters and two sons, also her father, Mr. Joseph Elliott of Smith.

The funeral will take place on Sunday afternoon from the family residence to the Bridgenorth cemetery, Rev. Mr. Gladstone McKee officiating.

MR. IRVING'S VISIT.

Referring to Mr. Irving's visit to the Gospel Hall to-night, the following may be of interest to those who will hear him, taken from the "Echoes of Service," St. Elizabeth, Barbados, March 12th:

We have been much cheered by a very happy visit of Mr. Richard Irving of Canada. He has kindly given us two weeks on this side of the island, dividing the time between the three assemblies we care for, and his ministry has been much valued by the believers. Not a few anxious ones have been spoken to. He has also had good times at the three assemblies on the other side of Barbados, and hopes in a few days to go to other islands.

To-night Mr. Irving will tell of the Lord's work during his extended labours among those islands. All are invited to come and hear this well-known evangelist's refreshing ministry.

WHEAT AND FLOUR DOWN

Will Soon Be Normal — Bar to Active Trading

Wheat and flour prices are coming down almost as fast as they went up. At the present rate of decline they would soon be down to normal again but they are still far from that level. However, Manitoba flour came down 50c yesterday and Ontario flour 25c, making for the latter 50c in two days. Cash wheat prices are also steadily lowering while the options are scarcely traded in at all and are very weak in view of good crop weather conditions. Expectation too that government action is likely to upset the market prevents active trading.

Manitoba wheat—No. 1 Northern, lake ports, $2.45; No. 2 Northern, $2.42.

Manitoba oats—No. 2, 78½c, track, bay ports.

American corn—$1.81½, nominal.

Ontario oats—No 2 white, is not quoted.

Ontario wheat—No. 2 winter, per car lots, $2.40 to $2.45; No. 2 winter, $2.38 to $2.43, according to the freight outside.

Peas—No. 2, nominal.

Barley—God malting, nominal.

Buckwheat—nominal.

Rye—No. 2, $2.06.

Manitoba flour—First patents, in jute bags, $12.90; second patents, $12.40; strong bakers, $12.

Ontario Flour—Winter, according to sample, $10.50 to $10.60, track, Toronto, prompt shipments.

Mill feed—Car lots, delivered, Montreal, shorts, $38; bran, $31; feed flour, per bag, $2.80 to $2.90; middlings, $42.

A LONG AND HARD WAR IS STILL AHEAD OF ALLIES

Canada Must Make Further Sacrifices in Men and Money — United States Must Send Millions, Says Thos. W. Pelham, General Counsel of the Gillette Company

Mr. Thomas W. Pelman, general counsel and director of sales for the Gillette Safety Razor Co. of Boston, who has just returned from Petrograd, interviewing representative men on route from all nations, expressed the opinion last evening that a long and hard war is still ahead of the Allies, that Canada will have to make still greater sacrifices in men and money, that the United States will have to send several millions of men to Europe, and that Russia's ten millions of armed men will be heard from effectively next year.

Mr. Pelham was entertained at Freeman's by about fifty connected with the Gillette Company, and a number of Montreal business men interested in conditions in Russia, Mr. A. A. Bittues, managing director, occupying the chair. Messrs. W. J. Francis, P. Gorman and T. H. Flett also occupied seats at the table of honour.

Mr. Pelham began by referring to the great trade difficulties met with following the outbreak of the war, of the different methods employed in sending their goods to Russia, and of his final departure from Vancouver for the Orient by the C.P.R. liners the Empress of Asia. Touching on the conditions in Japan en passant, the speaker said he did not think industrial Canada, Great Britain or the United States need fear competition from that country, Germany alone probably feeling the pressure, as the cheap, trashy goods of Japan he likened to those of Germany, being for sale rather than for use. Passing through Manchuria, he found that Japan was quite as solidly intrenched in that country as if it was an integral part of the Mikado's kingdom. When he reached Siberia, Mr. Pelham told of the hundreds of thousands of Russian troops who had deserted from the front after the revolution, but the first breeze of revolution having blown past, these men were hastening to the stations to catch trains that would bring them back to duty and the army of new-born Russia. Everything was orderly and the red flag of the revolution was seen on every hand, the speaker explaining that these soldiers who had taken French leave had been notified by the provisional government that if they reported for duty at the front by the 15th of May their absence and desertion would be winked at.

Were No Policemen.

When Mr. Pelham reached Petrograd there were no policemen in the street, this being the first element to feel the vengeance of the long suffering people. Watchmen chosen by the people kept order and not a drunken man was to be seen. He was told not to go in the street Labour Day, yet he went out all the same, and although the revolution had just taken place, Petrograd was as quiet as any other city in times of peace. A million of men had gathered from all parts of the great empire of Russia, yet not a sign of disorder was visible. Thirty days after the revolution two full regiments had marched to headquarters asking for peace at any price, yet following an interview with wonderful Kerensky they marched back with "No peace without victory" on their battle flags. The hope of Russia lies in this wonderful man who, from being Minister of Justice, is now Minister of War, and Mr. Pelham says that if this man lives he will pull Russia out of her difficulties.

After telling of the miserable conditions of the working farmers and the factory farms, he said all this had to be considered when one is impatient about Russia pulling herself together. The revolution had begun at the top and worked down to the common people. It was a universal revolution against the Czar, who had been abandoned by his brothers, his sisters, his cousins and his aunts, so to speak. He calculated that the Russian army would reach ten million men and while they might be in pretty good shape this year, they would be heard from all right next year. He believed that Russia was destined to become one of the greatest republics in the world. When a permanent government would be established was a difficult question to answer, but leading business men and bankers together with the officials at the foreign embassies think that a permanent system would devolve out of the present provisional government in the near future. This, he added, is a rare chance for Canada, and the United States, as the energy and enterprise of this continent will be much appreciated in the country.

No Goods, But Much Money.

There are no goods to any great extent in Russia, but there is any amount of money. Not gold, but paper money, backed up by the untold wealth and resources of that mighty land. Any bond issue, he said, either from the old or new regime, would be undoubtedly honoured and the confidence is manifest by the fact that the National City Bank, besides Dutch banks, are establishing branches both in Petrograd and Moscow. He said there are but three hundred Americans and Canadians in the capital and there should be thirty thousand, for they will be all welcomed. The speaker said their company was leaving their money in the Russian banks, showing what confidence they all had in the immediate future of the country.

Coming back home through Scandinavia, he said they had sold so much stuff to Germany that if they were not assisted they would be in a bad way for food. Sweden had been pro-German at the outset, but this feeling had changed, and Denmark, Norway and Sweden were now pretty well with the Allies. Referring to the war, Mr. Pelham said Canada had sent so many wonderful fighters to the front that he thought some allusion to the conflict would not be out of place. All those connected with this own family, made up of sons, daughters and sons-in-law, as well as grandchildren, were about all in the war. He had, however, talked war with representative men in England and France, and a consensus of opinion went to show that we are in for a long and hard war and that Canada must still make greater sacrifices in men and money while the United States will have to send several millions of men to the front.

While the food situation in Germany is no doubt very bad, her stubborn determination to win is as yet unbroken.

PROVINCES BEFORE UNION

Isolated and Narrow but Expanding Units and Ideals of the Sixties—Canada in the Great War

July 1st, 1917, marks the jubilee of Canada's nationhood. On July 1st, 1867, the British North America Act went into effect and the Dominion started on its wonderful career. It is difficult to realize that only fifty years ago there was no Dominion; but, in its place, a group of small and comparatively unimportant British colonies. Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island were then separate, sparsely settled colonies, intent upon their own local problems, and having little intercourse with the rest of British North America. The Province of Canada was better settled and more important, but the great North-West was only a vast wilderness, still under the control of the Hudson's Bay Company. A few missionaries, traders, and settlers were there, but the whole white population did not exceed 20,000 in number. Still farther west, many thousands of miners had been attracted to British Columbia, by the discovery, in 1857, of gold in the bed of the Fraser River; but, after the first rush was over, only a few thousand remained, and the white population of the colony was barely 12,000 in 1861. It is not very surprising, therefore, that a member of the British Parliament declared a few years earlier that the whole colony was not worth £20,000.

The Dominion of Canada, as it appears on present-day maps, is not the Dominion of Canada created in 1867 by the British North America Act. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, when they entered Confederation, had the same area as they have to-day, but Ontario and Quebec were then much smaller than they are at present. In fact, in 1867, they had no definite northern boundaries, as the rough country to the north was little known, and the disputes about boundaries had not yet begun. The areas in 1867 of Ontario and Quebec are usually given as 121,000 and 210,000 square miles. Add to these areas those of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 21,000 square miles and 28,000 square miles respectively, and we obtain the total area of the new Dominion of Canada, which was about 380,000 square miles. As Canada today has an area of 3,729,000 square miles, or almost ten times the area of the Dominion at Confederation, it is evident that her growth in area has quite kept pace with her development in other directions.

"Greater Canada" of Future

The chief areas of British North America, not included in the original Dominion, were Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island on the east, and British Columbia on the west; Rupert's Land, a vast territory around Hudson Bay with no distinct boundaries; the Bermudas, the British West Indies, and Honduras. It seems appropriate that in this semi-centennial year proposals are being publicly made looking to the inclusion of at least Newfoundland, the British West Indies and the Bahamas in a Greater Canada, which would thus become an empire in itself while continuing a part of the far-flung British Empire.

The Twentieth Century is, indeed, Canada's. It does not need the eye of a prophet to see that in the very near future Canada's population will be trebled or quadrupled. The temperate regions of the earth have few vacant places, the tropical practically none. Yet the people of the earth continue to increase and multiply. The southern parts of Western Canada, Southern Siberia, certain parts of South America, South Africa, and Australia are but sparsely peopled at present, yet all are eminently suited for settlement by white races. And of all these countries it would seem as if Canada would be first to receive the great tides of emigration. She appears to be better prepared and better fitted to receive them. This prosperous rapid development of Canada demands the careful organization and utilization of her wonderful material resources.

BRITISH CAPTURE STRONGLY ORGANIZED DEFENCE SYSTEMS

Positions of Great Strength as Well as Strategic Importance Allies Made Mile Gain on Four Mile Front

LONDON, June 30.—With irrististable force British troops swept on closer around Lens to-day. A gain of a mile over a total front of four miles was reported by Field Marshal Haig. "As the result of our attacks," he said, "strongly organized defense systems on both banks of the Souchez River covering Lens were captured." Our whole objectives were gained with slight loss and with considerable enemy casualties. "Positions of great strength as well as tactical and strategic importance are ours." Additional information confirms the success of the Lens operations. There were captures in prisoners and machine guns." Although the British commander in chief did not specify exactly in which suburb of Lens his forces had made their greatest gains, it was believed here and main drive is now centering from the south. Battlefront dispatches declares the Germans were centering their defense on the Knot of railway lines which converge northeast of Avion. If the British reach this junction point Lens itself will be isolated, except from the northeast.

CATTLE WERE LOWER IN CLOSING MARKETS

Easier Prices Expected To Prevail as Grass-Fed Cattle Come In Hogs Higher

This week-end brought in what looks like the beginnings of a material break in cattle prices. After a strong opening in the Monday market, with a partial recovery from the weakness of the previous week, a sudden change developed in the general tone of prices towards the close of Wednesday's market. For medium quality butcher steers and heifers the market suddenly dropped 15c to 25c and for butcher cows and bulls the decline was even sharper. The weaker tone of the market was even more apparent on Thursday, when prices declined fully another 25c all round for butcher cattle. The demand was so slow, in fact, that several loads were left over without a bid, and trade dragging the heaviest in weeks past. Whether this means the break usually due about this time in the summer season perhaps next week's market will tell. Grass-fed cattle have already begun coming in, and this movement is likely to be more pronounced in the next few weeks. A number of stable cattle have yet to be marketed, but there cannot be many of these left in the country. The market will therefore be largely supplied from the grass-fed stock for the balance of the season. Pasture is good, and the cattle are said to be doing well, and there may not be the sharp break both in quality and prices which has characterized the midsummer markets of former seasons.

The stocker trade is comparatively quiet, except for the best breedy stock, for which the demand is fair.

Calves have held steady to firm until the end of the week, when there was an easier feeling.

Hogs, contrary as their nature is, chose an opposite course to the rest of the market, and went higher and higher as the week progressed, making a total gain of 75c to $1 from the previous week's closing prices.

Save the Food and Serve the Empire!

The Average Canadian Family Wastes Enough to Feed a Soldier

"The Kitchen must help as well as the Workshop and the Trenches"
Lloyd George.

INTELLIGENT economy in the kitchen can do much to prevent the threatened world famine—can counteract the effect of high prices—and can replace growing debt with systematic saving.

Careful investigations show that before the war the average British family wasted 25% of their food—and we Canadians were even more extravagant.

This waste is not in a few big things, but in many little ones, each, we used to think, too small to bother about—such as careless peeling of vegetables and fruit—failure to make good use of dripping and "left-overs"—and such others as will occur to every thrifty housekeeper.

For the Empire's sake as well as your own, hunt up and cut out these leaks! You'll be helping to relieve the food shortage—saving your own money—and putting yourself in a position to buy Canadian War Savings Certificates and help win the war.

War Savings Certificates are issued in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, to be repaid in three years at full face value. They cost $21.50, $43 and $86 respectively, at all Money Order Post-Offices and Banks, thus yielding over 5% Interest. Should you need it, you can get your money back at any time.

A LONG AND HARD WAR IS STILL AHEAD OF ALLIES

Canada Must Make Further Sacrifices in Men and Money — United States Must Send Millions, Says Thos. W. Pelham, General Counsel of the Gillette Company

Mr. Thomas W. A few missionaries, traders, and settlers were there, but the whole white population did not exceed 20,000 in number. Still farther west, many thousands of miners had been attracted to British Columbia, by the discovery, in 1857, of gold in the bed of the Fraser River; but, after the first rush was over, only a few thousand remained, and the white population of the colony was barely 12,000 in 1861. It is not very surprising, therefore, that a member of the British Parliament declared a few years earlier that the whole colony was not worth £20,000.

The Dominion of Canada, as it appears on present-day maps, is not the Dominion of Canada created in 1867 by the British North America Act. Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, when they entered Confederation, had the same area as they have to-day, but Ontario and Quebec were then much smaller than they are at present. In fact, in 1867, they had no definite northern boundaries, as the rough country to the north was little known, and the disputes about boundaries had not yet begun. The areas in 1867 of Ontario and Quebec are usually given as 121,000 and 210,000 square miles. Add to these areas those of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 21,000 square miles and 28,000 square miles respectively, and we obtain the total area of the new Dominion of Canada, which was about 380,000 square miles. As Canada today has an area of 3,729,000 square miles, or almost ten times the area of the Dominion at Confederation, it is evident that her growth in area has quite kept pace with her development in other directions.

"Greater Canada" of Future

The chief areas of British North America, not included in the original Dominion, were Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island on the east, and British Columbia on the west; Rupert's Land, a vast territory around Hudson Bay with no distinct boundaries; the Bermudas, the British West Indies, and Honduras. It seems appropriate that in this semi-centennial year proposals are being publicly made looking to the inclusion of at least Newfoundland, the British West Indies and the Bahamas in a Greater Canada, which would thus become an empire in itself while continuing a part of the far-flung British Empire.

The Twentieth Century is, indeed, Canada's. It does not need the eye of a prophet to see that in the very near future Canada's population will be trebled or quadrupled. The temperate regions of the earth have few vacant places, the tropical practically none. Yet the people of the earth continue to increase and multiply. The southern parts of Western Canada, Southern Siberia, certain parts of South America, South Africa, and Australia are but sparsely peopled at present, yet all are eminently suited for settlement by white races. And of all these countries it would seem as if Canada would be first to receive the great tides of emigration. She appears to be better prepared and better fitted to receive them. This prospective rapid development of Canada demands the careful organization and utilization of her wonderful material resources.

BRITISH CAPTURE STRONGLY ORGANIZED DEFENCE SYSTEMS

Positions of Great Strength as Well as Strategic Importance Allies Made Mile Gain on Four Mile Front

LONDON, June 30.—With irrististable force British troops swept on closer around Lens to-day. A gain of a mile over a total front of four miles was reported by Field Marshal Haig. "As the result of our attacks," he said, "strongly organized defense systems on both banks of the Souchez River covering Lens were captured." Our whole objectives were gained with slight loss and with considerable enemy casualties. "Positions of great strength as well as tactical and strategic importance are ours." Additional information confirms the success of the Lens operations. There were captures in prisoners and machine guns." Although the British commander in chief did not specify exactly in which suburb of Lens his forces had made their greatest gains, it was believed here and main drive is now centering from the south. Battlefront dispatches declares the Germans were centering their defense on the Knot of railway lines which converge northeast of Avion. If the British reach this junction point Lens itself will be isolated, except from the northeast.

CATTLE WERE LOWER IN CLOSING MARKETS

Easier Prices Expected To Prevail as Grass-Fed Cattle Come In Hogs Higher

This week-end brought in what looks like the beginnings of a material break in cattle prices. After a strong opening in the Monday market, with a partial recovery from the weakness of the previous week, a sudden change developed in the general tone of prices towards the close of Wednesday's market. For medium quality butcher steers and heifers the market suddenly dropped 15c to 25c and for butcher cows and bulls the decline was even sharper The weaker tone of the market was even more apparent on Thursday, when prices declined fully another 25c all round for butcher cattle. The demand was so slow, in fact, that several loads were left over without a bid, and trade dragging the heaviest in weeks past. Whether this means the break usually due about this time in the summer season perhaps next week's market will tell. Grass-fed cattle have already begun coming in, and this movement is likely to be more pronounced in the next few weeks. A number of stable cattle have yet to be marketed, but there cannot be many of these left in the country. The market will therefore be largely supplied from the grass-fed stock for the balance of the season. Pasture is good, and the cattle are said to be doing well, and there may not be the sharp break both in quality and prices which has characterized the midsummer markets of former seasons.

The stocker trade is comparatively quiet, except for the best breedy stock, for which the demand is fair.

Calves have held steady to firm until the end of the week, when there was an easier feeling.

Hogs, contrary as their nature is, chose an opposite course to the rest of the market, and went higher and higher as the week progressed, making a total gain of 75c to $1 from the previous week's closing prices.

CATTLE RECEIPTS.

Union Stock Yards—Total receipts this week, 411 cards, with 5,900 cattle, 1,155 calves, 6,221 hogs, 14,111 sheep and lambs and 894 horses.

City Cattle Market—48 cars with 616 cattle, 340 sheep and lambs, 532 hogs, 148 calves, and 133 horses.

Save the Food and Serve the Empire!

The Average Canadian Family Wastes Enough to Feed a Soldier

"The Kitchen must help as well as the Workshop and the Trenches"
Lloyd George.

INTELLIGENT economy in the kitchen can do much to prevent the threatened world famine—can counteract the effect of high prices—and can replace growing debt with systematic saving.

Careful investigations show that before the war the average British family wasted 25% of their food—and we Canadians were even more extravagant.

This waste is not in a few big things, but in many little ones, each, we used to think, too small to bother about—such as careless peeling of vegetables and fruit—failure to make good use of dripping and "left-overs"—and such others as will occur to every thrifty housekeeper.

For the Empire's sake as well as your own, hunt up and cut out these leaks! You'll be helping to relieve the food shortage—saving your own money—and putting yourself in a position to buy Canadian War Savings Certificates and help win the war.

War Savings Certificates are issued in denominations of $25, $50 and $100, to be repaid in three years at full face value. They cost $21.50, $43 and $86 respectively, at all Money Order Post-Offices and Banks, thus yielding over 5% interest. Should you need it, you can get your money back at any time.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

It was difficult to reconcile the detective's present stand-off manner with his earlier camaradie, to say nothing of the seemingly friendly hint conveyed by the signal to pass no comment on Ingerman's interruption.

Rather sick at heart, Grant went out into the sunshine. He was snapshotted a dozen times by the press photographers. One man, backing impudently in front of him in order to secure a sharp focus, tripped over the raised edge of a cartway into a yard, and sat down violently.

The onlookers laughed, but Grant helped the photographer to rise.

"If you want a really good picture of the Steynholme murderer, come to my place, and I'll give you one," he said.

The pressman was grateful, because Grant's action has tended to mitigate his discomfiture.

"No one but a fool thinks of you as a murderer, Mr. Grant," he said. "What I really want is a portrait of 'the celebrated' author in whose grounds the body was found."

"Come along, then, and I'll pose for you."

The photographer was surprised but joyfully accepted the gifts that the gods gave. He could not guess that his host was pining for human companionship. He could not fathom Grant's disappointment on reaching The Hollies at finding no telegram from a trusted friend, Walter Hart. And he was equally unconscious of the immense service he rendered by compelling his host to talk and act naturally. He enlightened Grant, too, in the matter of inquests.

"Next week there will be a gathering of lawyers," he said. "The police will be represented, probably by the Treasury, if the case is thought sufficiently important. That chap Ingerman, too, will employ a solicitor, I expect, judging from his attitude to-day. In fact, any one whose interests are affected ought to secure legal assistance. One never knows how these inquiries twist and turn."

"Thank you," said Grant, smiling at the journalist's tact. "I'll order ten to be got ready while you are taking your pictures. By the way, what sort of a detective is Mr. Charles F. Furneaux?"

"A pocket marvel," was the enthusiastic answer. "Haven't you heard of him before? Well, you wouldn't, unless you followed famous cases professionally. He seldom appears in the courts—generally manages to wriggle out of givin direct evidence. But I've never known him to fail. He either hangs his man or drives him to commit suicide. If I committed a crime and was told that Furneaux was after me, I'd own up and save trouble, because I wouldn't have the ghost of a chance of winning clear."

"He strikes one as too flippant for a detective."

"Yes. Lots of people have thought thought, and they're either disappearing in quicklime beneath some corridor of a prison, or doing time at Portland. I wonder if Winter also is coming down on this job?"

"Who is Winter?"

The Chief Inspector at the 'Yard.' A big, cheerful-looking fellow—from his appearance might be a gentleman farmer and J.P., wit ha taste for horses and greyhounds. He and Furneaux are called the Big 'Un and the Little 'Un, and each is most unlike like the average detective. But Heaven help any wrong-doer they set out to trail! They'll get him, as sure as God made little apples."

"Then the sooner Mr. Winter visits Steynholme the better I shall be pleased. This tragedy is becoming a perfect nightmare. You heard that fat-headed policeman speak of my face being covered with blood. He did it purposely. I made a fool of him this morning so he paid me out, the literal truth being that a branch of that Dorothy Perkins rose there caught my cheek as I entered this room on Tuesday morning—before I discovered the body—and broke the skin. I suppose the cut is visible still? I saw it to-day while shaving."

"Yes," said the other, chortling over the "copy" his colleagues were missing. "The mark is there right enough. Queer how inanimate objects like a rose tree can make mischief. I remember a case in which a chestnut in a man's pocket sent him to penal servitude. There was absolutely no evidence against him, except a possible motive, until that chestnut was found and proved to be one of a particular species, grown only in a certain locality."

"How fortunate that the Dorothy Perkins is popular!" laughed Grant.

"Will your paper publish photographs of the principals in this affair?"

"I expect so. I've a fine collection—the jury all in a row—and you, making that speech to the mob."

"Oh! Will that appear?"

"By Jove, yes, sir. It was wired off before the inquest opened."

Grant reddened slightly. His own impetuous action had blurted out to the whole world that which Steynholme was only thinking. No wonder Furneaux had warned him to go slow. Perhaps the little man was annoyed because of his challenge to the village crowd? Well, be it so. He meant, and would live up to, every word of it!

The afternoon dragged after the pressman's departure. What Grant really hungered for was a heart-to-heart talk between Doris Martin and himself. But, short of a foolish attempt to carry the post office by storm, he saw no means of realising his desire. He must perforce await the less troubled hours of the morrow or next day. Doris would surely give her father an exact account of the conversation between Grant and Furneaux and herself that morning, and that greatly perplexed man could hardly fail to see how unjust was the tittle-tattle of the village.

So, avoiding Mrs. Bates, whose fell intent it was to ask what he wanted for dinner, he struck off along the road to Knoleworth, walked eight miles in two hours and reached The Hollies about seven o'clock, rather inclined for a meal and much more contented with life.

Minnie announced that a gentleman, "who had brought a bag," had been awaiting him since half past five, and was now asleep on the lawn! A glance at the aforesaid bag, still reposing in the entrance hall, sent Grant quickly into the garden. A long, broad-shouldered person was stretched on a wicker chair, and evidently enjoying a nap. A huge meerschaum pipe and tobacco pouch lay on the grass. The new-comer's face was covered by a broad-brimmed, decidedly weather-beaten slouch hat, which legend had it, was purchased originally in South America in the early nineties, and had won fame as the only one of its kind ever worn in the Strand.

"Hullo! wally! Glad to see you!" shouted Grant joyously.

The sleeper stirred.

"No, not another drop!" he muttered. "You fellows must have heads of triple brass and stomachs of leather!"

"Get up, you rascals, or I'll spill you out of the chair!" said Grant.

A lazy hand removed the hat, and a pair of peculiarly big and bright eyes gazed up into his.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" drawled a quiet voice. "Why the blazes did you send for me? And having sent, why wake me out of the best sleep I've had for a week?"

"But why didn't you let me know you were coming? I would have met the train."

"I did. Here's the telegram. That pink-cheeked maid of yours nearly had a fit when I opened it to show her that I was expected."

"You wired from Victoria, I suppose."

"Would you have preferred Charing Cross or the Temple? Isn't Victoria respectable?"

Grant laughed as they shook hands. Hart was the most casual adventurer in existence. His speciality was revolutions. Wherever the flag of rebellion was raised against a government thither went Walter Hart post haste by train, steamer or on horseback. He had been sentenced to death five times and decorated by successful Jack Cades twice as often.

"I'm a sort of outlaw. That's why I sought your help," explained Grant.

"I know all about you, Jack," said Hart slowly, picking up the pipe, and filling it from the pouch. The meerschaum was carved to represent the head of a grinning negro and was now ebon black from use.

"I felt like a pint of Sussex ale after a hot journey in the train, so hied me to the village inn where several obliging gentlemen told me your real name. Two of them, Ingerman and Elkin apparently make a hobby of enlightening strangers as to your right place in society."

"I must interview Elkin."

"Not worth while, my boy. Ingerman is the rafty one. I thought I might be doing you more harm than good, or I would have given him a thick ear this afternoon....Oh, by the way, what time is it?"

"Seven o'clock."

"A little fellow named Furneaux, is coming here to dinner at seven-thirty. Said that he would drop in by the back door, and mutter 'Hush! I'm Hawkshaw, the detective.' He resembled a cock-sparrow, so I asked him why he did not fly in through an attic window. He took my point at once and remarked that he wanted none of my lip, or he would ask me officially what became of Don Ramon de Santander's big pink pearl. It's a queer yarn. There was a burst-up in Guatemala——"

"Look here Wally," broke in Grant anxiously. "Are you serious? Did Furneaux really say he was coming here?"

"He did and more—he expressed a partiality for a chicken roasted on a spit. You have a spit in your kitchen, he says, and a pair of chickens in your larder."

"How did you contrive to meet him?"

"You're a poor guesser, Jack. He met me. 'That you, Mr. Hart?' he said. 'Mr. Grant's house is the first on the right across the bridge. Tell him'—and the rest of it."

"Have you warned Mrs. Bates?"

"Mrs. Bates being?"

"My housekeeper."

"No, sir. If she's anything like your housemaid, I'm glad I didn't or I should have been chucked into the road. I had the deuce of a job to reach the lawn. Had I ordered dinner I might now have been in the village lock-up."

Grant hurried away and placated Mrs. Bates after a stormy interlude. Precisely at 7.30 p.m. Minnie came and said that "Mr. Hawkshaw" had arrived.

"Bring him out here," said Grant. "Fetch some sherry and glasses and give us five minutes notice before the dinner is served."

"Please, sir," tittered Minnie, "the gentleman prefers to stay indoors. He says his complexion won't stand the glare."

Enemies of Tea

If tea is left open near oranges, soap, spices, matches, etc., the tea will take on the flavor of any of these articles.

In fact, tea absorbs odors as readily as does butter. This is because of the high temperature at which it is "fired" during the drying process, which makes the tea very sensitive. It thus quickly loses flavor and strength, and goes "flat" if left exposed to odors, dust or air.

To Protect the Consumer

When you buy a package of Red Rose Tea at your grocer's you get the benefit of the great care we take to protect the consumer, as the sealed package is an armor that keeps out odors, dust and air. It keeps the tea pure, clean, fresh and full strength.

The price printed on the package protects you against overcharge. It is the lowest price for which a tea of Red Rose quality can be sold—a price which allows the grocer only a fair profit.

You will enjoy the distinctive flavor, rich strength and splendid economy of Red Rose Tea. TRY A PACKAGE.

Semi-Cenrennial of Confederation

Canada has made rapid strides as a manufacturing country. In spite of great agricultural and mineral resources, almost one half (46%) of her people dwell in urban centres. Ontario and Quebec practically monopolize the manufacturing industries of the Dominion. The value of manufactured products of these provinces for 1911 were: Ontario, $579,810,225, Quebec, $350,901,656, out of a total value for the Dominion of $1,165,975,539. Canada used to be a debtor nation, that is, the value of her imports exceeded that of her exports. This state of affairs is now reversed, and the balance of trade is no longer against her. For example, Canada's trade for the fiscal year of 1915-16 reached a total of $1,424,000,000. Exports amounted to a total of $741,000,000, distributed as follows: Manufactures, $242,000,000; Agricultural products, -250,000,000; Animal products, $102,000,000; Minerals, $66,000,000; Lumber, $51,000,000; and Fish, $22,000,000. Imports were valued at $507,000,000, of which $239,000,000 were dutiable goods and $218,000,000 free goods.

But the commercial and manufacturing aspects are the least in which the great War has affected Canada. While migration—in recent decades a prime factor in the national life—has ceased, the nation has made great efforts towards the maintenance of the productivity of its various basic industries—agriculture, mining, lumbering and fishing—and has given great numbers of its sons to the fighting forces, thus giving the answer to the statesmen who foretold that Canada would desert the Empire in time of danger. This expectation of Germany has been falsified, and the fifty years of Canada's national life furnish a wonderful example of the triumph of faith which inspired the Fathers of Confederation and the public men of the Mother Country in the sixties.

The final step towards Confederation was taken when a conference was held in 1866 in London, between British and Canadian statesmen. The result of their work was the British North America Act, which passed the British House practically unopposed, and came into force July 1st, 1867. The Act provided that Canada (Upper and Lower), Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick should be united under one federal government, but that each should manage its purely local affairs. The united country was to be called the Dominion of Canada, and henceforth Upper and Lower Canada were to be known as Ontario and Quebec. It is interesting to note that the first draft of the Bill calls the country the "Kingdom of Canada." This did not mean an independent kingdom, but an auxiliary one, with the monarch of England at its head. The term "Dominion" was substituted, lest the word "kingdom" might offend the Republican susceptibilities of our American neighbours!

The New Constitution

A Governor-General to represent the sovereign of Great Britain was to be appointed for five years. Each province was to have a Lieutenant-Governor appointed by the Governor-General-in-Council for five years. The functions of Governors were to call, prorogue, and dissolve parliaments, to choose councillors, to assent to measures passed by Parliament, and to exercise a general care over the interests of the country. The real governing power was left to the councillors, whom the Governor or Lieutenant-Governor should choose from the party in majority in the House of Commons or Assembly. This, of course, is the principle of Responsible Government.

The Dominion Parliament was to consist of two houses, the Senate and the House of Commons. The Senate was to have 72 members: 24 from Ontario, 24 from Quebec, and 24 from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick combined. The Senators were to be appointed for life by the Governor-General. A Senator must be at least thirty years of age, and must be possessed of at least $4,000 worth of property. The Senate's functions are identical with those of the British House of Lords prior to 1911. The House of Commons was to be elected by the people. With respect to its membership, the principle of representation by population was adopted. Quebec was taken as the standard and given 65 members, while the numbers from the other provinces were to bear the same relation to their populations that 65 did to the population of Quebec.

Provinces and Powers

The Provincial Parliaments were to be similar to that of the Dominion, except that it was left optional whether a province should or should not have a Senate. To avoid confusion, the old names, Legislative Council and Legislative Assembly were to be the official names of the provincial houses. The duration of the Dominion Parliament was fixed at five years, that of the Provincial Parliaments at four years. All parliaments were to meet once a year. The seat of the Dominion Government was to be Ottawa; the provincial seats were: Ontario, Toronto; Quebec, Quebec; Nova Scotia, Halifax; New Brunswick, Fredericton.

The Dominion Parliament was to have control of the general affairs of the country. Such were: regulation of trade, postal system, public debt and borrowing money on public credit, military and naval matters, navigation, fisheries, currency and coinage, banks, bankruptcy, Indian affairs, naturalization of aliens, customs, marriage and divorce, public works, railways, criminal law, commercial law, etc. The Dominion Parliament was also given power to disallow Provincial Acts. The Provincial Parliaments were given power over direct taxation within the province, borrowing of money on provincial credit, management of public lands, timber, etc., local public works within the province, civil and property rights, provincial courts, prisons and imprisonment, enforcement of the law of the province, education, municipal institutions, and generally of all matters of a local or private nature within the province.

Other important provisions of the Act were: There should be absolutely free trade between the provinces of Canada. Money bills must originate in the House of Commons. In Parliamentary debates either the English or French language might be used, and proceedings must be recorded in both. The construction of the Intercolonial Railway was to be commenced within six months. It was also provided that other provinces might be admitted at any time.

Compared with United States

It is often said that our constitution is a direct copy of that of the United States. This is untrue in some very important respects. In the United States the central government receives its power from the "Sovereign States" within clearly defined limits. Everything which the states did not specially part with at the outset, is jealously guarded. Thus, theoretically, it is a very slender thread which binds a state to the union, and it was largely this centrifugal force which caused the American Civil War. The framers of the British North America Act took warning from the weak points in the American scheme. The provinces ceded all their powers to the Crown, and received back such measures of self-government as their representatives had agreed upon as desirable. Again, with us, judges are not elected by popular vote as in the United States, but are appointed by the Governor-in-Council for life, and thus are not dependent "on the caprice of the people of a province for their nomination and retention in office." It is enough to say that Confederation has fulfilled the expectations of its most sanguine advocates. The Act stands to-day as on July 1st, 1867, except that several new provinces have been admitted—an added proof of the advantages of union.

Period Preceding 1867

After the union of Upper and Lower Canada in 1841, the united Province of Canada made rapid progress. The population rose from 1,160,000 in 1841 to 2,507,657 in 1861; and yet, in comparison with what they are to-day, the chief cities were still small. Montreal had only 90,323 inhabitants in 1861, Toronto 44,821, Hamilton 19,096, and London 11,555. On the other hand, many of the villages and some of the towns were far larger and more prosperous than they are now.

HON. GEORGE BROWN, Macdonald's political opponent but faithful coadjutor in creating the Confederation.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, Canada's first Premier, a Statesman of tact, power and foresight.

In the period just before Confederation most of the people of Canada were engaged in agriculture and lumbering. Grain was grown more extensively then than now, and many parts of central and southern Canada still contained great pine forests. Moreover, the operation of the Reciprocity Treaty created a very large and lucrative trade with the United States in the products of the farm and the forest. Much of the grain and lumber was carried by water, and as a result many an Ontario harbour on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario was then a very busy point of departure for sailing vessels and steamers engaged in this export trade. At the same time the valley of the Ottawa produced an immense quantity of squared timber, most of which was exported to Europe. On the other hand, manufacturing was confined almost exclusively to the supplying of local needs, and little attempt was made to export manufactured goods.

In the fifteen years before Confederation a very wonderful development in railways took place in Canada. The first railway in the country, the sixteen-mile line between Laprairie and St. Johns, L.C., had been opened in 1836, but in 1851 there was not yet a single mile of railway track in Upper Canada. In the following years, however, development was rapid, and, by 1865, 2,148½ miles were built and in use.

Union Followed Progress

In the Maritime Provinces railways had made little progress, and in 1865 New Brunswick had only 106 miles, and Nova Scotia only 93. Even after the construction of all these railways, colonization roads, built through the bush by the government, continued to be very important for giving access to those parts of the country not to be reached by the railways, and for encouraging settlement. In 1863 there were seven of these roads in Upper Canada, and five in Lower Canada.

As would be indicated by the activity of the Canadian Government in building colonization roads, great efforts were being made to induce immigrants from Europe to settle in Canada. Government publications declared that 7,000,000 acres of crown lands were surveyed and open for sale, at from thirty cents to one dollar per acre. In 1861, 24,587 immigrants arrived in Canada, but of these 10,000 proceeded to the United States. The remainder settled in the following districts: Western part of Upper Canada, 9,500; Ottawa District, 1,544; Eastern Canada, 1,500; Gaspe, 400; and Unknown, 943. Total, 13,887. Upper and Lower Canada, in the period just before Confederation, and, indeed, for years after that, were making the same appeal to the European immigrant that is now being made by our great Western Provinces. In many parts of the country settlers were hewing homes out of the forest, and meeting many of the same difficulties that had been encountered eighty years earlier by the United Empire Loyalists.

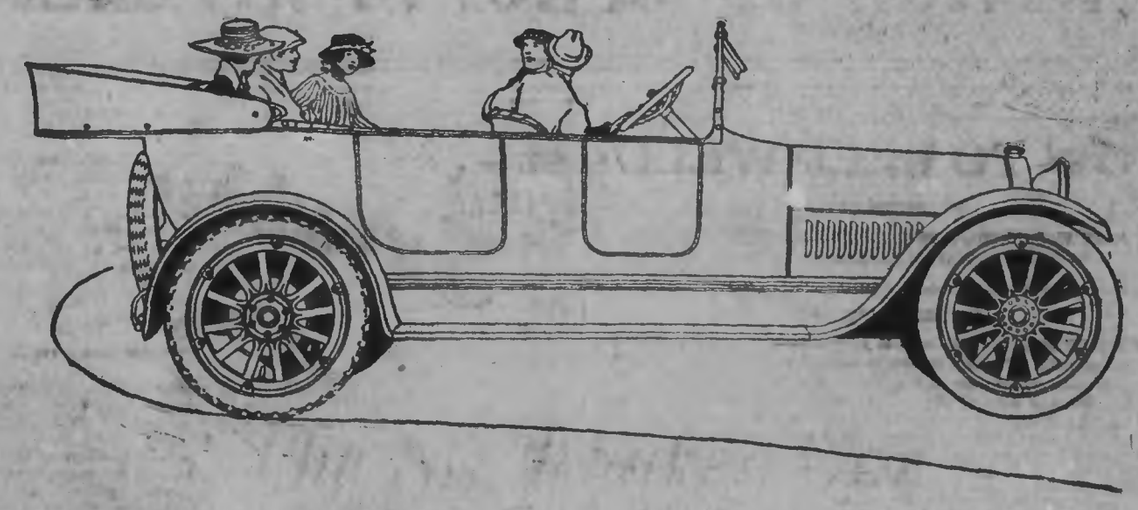
Studebaker



The Studebaker Car

More Reasons for Its Leadership

THE Series 18 Studebakers are the best cars Studebaker has ever produced. They have been perfected by four years' experience with the same basic design.

They embody ninety distinct improvements in mechanical construction, convenience and comfort over the Series 17, which made such a great record for Studebaker in 1916.

They offer what are probably the best automobiles values in Canada today.

They are made of carefully selected materials, tested and developed in the great Studebaker laboratories.

Their workmanship is experienced, painstaking and carefully supervised.

The inspections are rigid and exacting in the extreme.

For these reasons Studebakers are probably the most powerful cars on the market in ratio to their weight.

For these reasons they are most economical in the consumption of gasoline.

For these reasons Studebaker owners frequently get from 8,000 to 10,000 miles on a single set of tires.

For these reasons Studebakers stand up on the hardest, hilliest drives in the Dominion and under the most racking tests of Canadian roads at a minimum cost for upkeep.

For these reasons Studebaker is enabled to guarantee its cars for a full year against defective workmanship and material.

Let us prove the quality and economy of Studebakers, let us give you a Studebaker demonstration.

HOME DEFENCE

The safeguarding of your home and all it means to you is not a matter of armies and ships alone. The comfort and happiness of your family are exposed to the attacks of enemies much nearer to them than the marauding Huns of Central Europe.

What will become of your home and your wife and your children, if you be suddenly stricken down as thousands of others have been?

Will there be any bulwark of defence to keep the home and the family from destruction?

You can most easily provide such a line of defence by means of a life assurance policy. Home Defence is its purpose and it fulfills that purpose as nothing else can.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

BY JOHN W. S. McCULLOUGH, M.D., D.P.H., CHIEF OFFICER OF THE PROVINCIAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

BLINDNESS OF BABIES.

ONE-HALF of all the blindness is preventable. One-tenth of all the preventable blindness is due to babies' sore eyes, which is "an inflammatory disease of the conjunctiva usually appearing with the first few days of life and generally due to micro-organisms."

Let us state it again in simpler language. Within two days after the birth of the baby some matter is noticed in the corner of the eyes. Within an hour or two it will be noticed that the eyes are red, and yellow pus is oozing from between the lids. A little later the eyelids are noticed to be puffed. If a little of this pus be placed under the microscope it will be seen that the suppuration is due to pus germs.

Babies' sore eyes is preventable, is contagious, is curable if treatment is started early. If treatment is delayed a single day it may be found that the sight is gone, since the disease runs a very rapid and violent course.

Some mothers think that babies' sore eyes are due to the light or to cold. Some even think that it is due to the conjure put on the baby by some evil person. The first group of mothers laugh at the ignorance and superstition of the second group, but without justice, since their opinion is not nearer the truth than that of those at whom they laugh.

Babies' sore eyes are an infection and are due to pus cocci getting into the eye during birth, at the time of birth, or soon after. Thirty-six years ago an hospital surgeon, by name Crede, noted that one-ninth of the babies born in his hospital developed babies' sore eyes. He commenced the policy of dropping a two per cent. solution of nitrate of silver into the eyes of each baby as soon as it had had its bath. In six years the babies' sore eyes rate in his hospital dropped from one in nine to one in four hundred.

The result of this experience was a new policy in caring for the eyes of a newly-born babe. Immediately after birth the baby is given his bath and his eyes are treated. Each eye is wiped with a piece of absorbent cotton dipped in a saturated solution of boric acid (boiled water will do as well as boric acid solution). A separate pledget of cotton is used for each eye. The cotton is not put back into the solution after touching the eye. Next the eyelids are gently separated with the fingers and one drop or two drops of one per cent. solution of nitrate of silver is dropped into each eye. This is done only once. It is done not to cure sore eyes but to prevent eyes from becoming sore.

If the eyes begin to suppurate the doctor must be sent for without delay. The sight cannot be saved unless treatment is begun at once.

THE CAUSE OF DEAFNESS.

Consanguineous marriages, heredity, infections, fevers, middle ear diseases resulting from colds, sore throats, infections of nose sinuses, and bad tonsils, tuberculosis, and syphilis, accidents and injuries, working at noisy trades, and taking quinine or salicylates in large doses are the causes of deafness.

Where both parents are congenitally deaf the percentage of children congenitally deaf will be large. Where one parent is congenitally deaf such percentage will be small. Where there is a family tendency toward acquired deafness the percentage of "hard of hearing" in the progeny will be large.

Among infections diseases scarlet fever ranks first as a cause of deafness. The most frequent cause of deafness is neglected earaches, abcesses in ears, chronic colds, and chronic sore throats.

Deafness and persons on the road to deafness should be taught how to lip read.

A boy is to be educated through his playthings. The mother gets a series of different-colored balls. Directing the boy's attention to her lips she says, "Give me the blue ball." "No, that is the red one."

Making use of different-colored objects he can be taught the lip movements for the colors and objects. He will acquire a considerable vocabulary of nouns, principally the names of objects, in a short time, if the mother will talk to him persistently, directing attention to the objects talked about.

Next teach him a vocabulary of verbs by throwing, bringing, carrying, drinking, eating, playing, while descriptive words are spoken and the child's eyes are watching the mother's lips.

Taken into the out-of-door's world he can be taught colors from flowers and grass; shapes and sizes, adjectives, verbs, and adverbs from objects seen.

A deaf child must be constantly entertained, or, better, must have a mind constantly occupied. "The deaf look comes on a child's face as the visible expression of a soul denied expression."

CRUDE THOUGHTS FROM THE EDITORIAL PEN

WHAT SHOULD OUR CHILDREN READ?

When a child refuses to go to school or to work, is disobedient and listless, there is something wrong. A child brought up with the right kind of books as companions will love his school and his books.

Children are natural imitators. They will very soon learn to talk and act as their companions on the street do. Or, if their leisure time is mostly spent with books, their thoughts will dwell on what they read about. And as a child thinketh so is he. His sole aim will soon be to emulate the deeds and character that are foremost in his thoughts.

If taken while young a child's likes and dislikes can be educated in almost any direction; and good reading is a great help in making good children. A true story or a narrative of deeds that a human being might have done, history and tales of travel will linger in a child's mind and inspire him to be honest, noble and truthful; to honour and obey his parents and teachers and to love his schools and companions.

With a little planning by the mother home may be made the place to be preferred above all other places by the children, especially at night.

Reading aloud and telling the best they can what has happened and what they have seen during the day, should be encouraged in the children. Teachers will tell you there is a noticeable difference between scholars who have books and papers to read at home and those who have not.

Marriage is not necessarily a blessing. It may be the bitterest curse. It may sting like an adder and bite like a serpent. Its bower is as often made of thorns as of roses. It blasts as many sunny expectations as it realizes. Every improper marriage is a living misery, an undying death. An ill-mated human pair is the most woeful picture of human wretchedness that is presented in the book of life; and yet such pictures are plenty. But a proper marriage, a true interior, a soul linked union is a living picture of blessedness, unrivalled in beauty.

THE GREAT LAW

People of intelligence, open-minded to truth, lose much if they habitually absent themselves from religious services in a city whose pulpits are so well supplied as ours with men who have come to see truth clearly through pondering deeply the problems of life. Can there be anything more important than an understanding, as far as we can grasp it, of the evolutionary plan and the meaning and purpose of life, of our existence as human beings on this planet? It is of this that the finest minds of the church have made a lifelong study and seek in their discourses to give out such truth concerning it as they have found.

It is said that a statement has been made in a city pulpit that very many earnest people look upon this world war as an affliction visited by God upon the nations for their sins. Yet this, is error, the hearers were told. God brings no evils on mankind. This war is the wages, the legitimate earnings, the inescapable outcome, the inevitable effect of causes put into operations by the nations themselves.

That is the rational and satisfactory view and is supported by and is consistent with all that we know of all the laws of nature, which are, of course, the laws of God. They are all of them self-enforcing, infraction of them being invariably followed by undesirable or disastrous consequences. It is error, however, to regard these as penalties inflicted. The great law is not punitive, but is only the law of action and reaction, of cause and effect.

GO TO CHURCH MOVEMENT.

Go to church that you may win in the great battle of life.

The greatest battlefield on which a man ever fought is within himself. The greatest defeats are there and the mightiest victories. Victory on the field of one's own heart means victory elsewhere. The greatest mastery is self-mastery. Every true man, every true woman, recognizes this. Sin first stole our self mastery away. It must be charged and flanked and gripped. What the particular enemy is each individual knows, openly or secretly. What is it, O, woman—back-biting, gossip, mischief-making, selfishness? You, O, man—blasphemy, temper, appetite, passion.

Have you gone down to defeat again and again—seen your colors drag at the very time you should have been most easily the triumphant victor? That's good. Then you know the weak point in your line. That's where the hottest conflict is to be fought. There is the key to the whole situation. You'll have to mass your batteries there. Temptation to dishonesty? Fight it. "Are those goods all wool?" said a woman to a little shopkeeper. "They were, madam, before the revivals at our church. They are not now." Uncleanliness, cowardice and discouragement, are the soldier's weakest points. Find out that point and defend it with all your strength. Victory consists in holding on a moment longer.

Home Health Club

By Dr. David H. Reeder

True Economy: It is, of course, the big thing for all of us that we produce food. I am devoting all of my spare time and am enlisting the energy and enthusiasm of my four little boys in the production of all the food we can raise on nearly two acres of a fairly fertile garden patch. We will have our half an acre of potatoes and hope for enough corn to feed our hens through the winter. Vegetables that can be kept in a fresh state until they can again be grown we shall so keep, but there are many that cannot be kept in their natural state and canning is going to be out of the question for most of us this year on account of the shortage in both tin and glass containers.

"When I was a boy my mother used to dry pumpkins, squash and sweet corn as well as fruits and this can be done by you and me this season. The reason that all kinds of fresh fruits and vegetables rot so quickly or are spoiled by freezing is because of the water that is in them. Remove the water and they can be kept in warm or cold temperature almost indefinitely. One of the great troubles that the commercial drying of vegetables has experienced has been that in applying artificial heat for the purpose of dehydrating the delicate volatile oil which gives odor and flavour to them is quickly destroyed or lost and while the vegetable retains the nourishing elements it is not at all pleasing to the sense of taste or smell.

The home-dried product is therefore a better product than that which is obtained through the usual factory methods for the reason that the water is slowly evaporated by gentle artificial heat or by the action of the sun and wind, the result is a product that will keep well and retains the qualities of the fresh vegetables.

A new method of commercial dehydration is now about ready for the market and I am informed that a small plant can be set up that would care for the surplus fruits and vegetables of several farms and the cost according to the size of the plant would run from $500.00 up to $5,000.00. By this new method the vegetables are first subjected to a thorough immersion in very intense live steam for a certain period, after which the process of dehydration is completed and the odor, flavour and colour is all retained in the bone-dry product.

One of the big features of this new process is that the now useless property in bone-dry states, formerly used for beer making, is admirably adapted for making this splendid product. There is another way, in which we, as a people, ought at once to economize and that is by saving the tin cans. Thrown away they are a nuisance, but if carefully handled and cleaneed as soon as emptied they can be readily used again and all that is required is a new top. The old top that is spoiled by the can opener is easily removed and a new one easily put on. If well cared for there is no reason why the average tin can should not do duly several times instead of once.

Dear Doctor: I am one of those mortals who have scarcely known a well day, but keep on plodding, even when I do not feel able to do so. I have a weak spot about the size of my hand in the pit of my stomach, or I call it that as it is just below the breast bone in the waist line. I get deathly sick in that spot. It is a feeling I cannot describe for it is beyond words. I will have the spells quite often and then will have no trouble for quite a while. They seem to come on more often if I lift anything very heavy in front of me, for instance lifting a pail of water onto a table. I try to be very careful not to do this, but sometimes get in a hurry and forget. Sometimes I have pains across the lower part of the stomach also.—Mrs. H. S.

(Answer) The condition which you have described is one which can be overcome by proper treatment, but this treatment must be a revolutionary character, the old tissues replaced, and practically the body must be torn down and rebuilt. This may seem to be a strange statement, but it can be done more easily than you might imagine. If you had been reading my lecturers long enough you would know that I have frequently made the statement that a person is what he eats. Your body is composed of what has lain on your plate, nothing else; therefore it is fair to presume that if a change is to be made in your body it is first to be made on your plate. In order to aid you in making suggestions in regard to diet it will be necessary for me to know what you eat and drink, how much and how often, whether you drink while eating, also whether or not you are subject to worrying spells; if you get angry easily or not.

In the meantime until I may be able to map out a system of treatment for you, when the spells come on you should lie down, have hot applications placed on your stomach, take a third of a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper. If you have some charcoal tablets on hand take two of these and drink immediately after, a cup of hot water.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

TEN YEARS AFTER

By SADIE OLCOTT

Algernon Witney was a romantic youth. His mother was the very opposite. She was a hard headed, matter of fact woman. When Algy was growing up there lived near by the Witneys a family of Bentons. They were wealthy, while the Witneys were in moderate circumstances. Alma Benton, an only child, was about Algy's age, and the two children were playmates.

Alma was a delicate child and was very much petted. When Algy reached an age to think of marriage his mother noticed that he and Alma were beginning to look upon each other in a different light from what they did as children. One day she said to her son:

"I wish you to understand that on no account will I consent to your marrying Alma Benton."

"Why not, mother?"

"That I don't care to tell you. If you see her ten or fifteen years from now you will know without my having told you."

Algy was somewhat surprised at his mother's objection. The Bentons being wealthy and Alma being the sole heir to their property, he had supposed that his mother, who seemed to have a keen eye to pecuniary advantages, would have urged rather than opposed the match. Alma was just the kind of girl to please a young man of nineteen. All her motions, her words, her acts, were subdued. Even her laugh was delicate. Despite his mother's warning, Algy lost his heart to her.

There was another girl in the neighborhood that Algy met occasionally, but did not fancy at all, whom he reckoned his mother would be pleased to see him marry. Martha Bonfield was next door to homely, but she was barely sixteen, and some girls when passing from childhood into womanhood are like a grub changing into a butterfly.

Martha inherited from her mother a good deal of hard sense. But this was lost on Algy. The pink and white complexion, the coral lips of Alma were quite enough with him to outweigh all the common sense of a dozen. But when Martha's red hair and freckles were considered the comparison was especially odious.

There was trouble for the young lovers on both sides of the house. The Benton family were as much opposed to the match as the Witneys. They designed their daughter for a rich husband. A taste for riches is a growing taste—the more we have the more we want.

The upshot of it all was that Alma was dominated by her mother. Her lover had the manliness to choose for himself. But since the girl he wanted would not marry him without her parents' consent he was obliged to content himself without her.

Several years passed. Alma Benton, under her mother's leadership, made a matrimonial campaign abroad, but came back to America unmarried. Algernon Witney after her departure found nothing to remember about her any more than a figure painted on china, and, though he struggled hard to make himself believe that he was heartbroken, he was finally convinced that, though he could never love again, he was not suffering.

Meanwhile Martha Bonfield's hair had turned from its original dull red to auburn, and her freckles had disappeared. When Witney felt bored he used to go to see her for an evening's chat. Some of his romance had evaporated, and he was entering upon an age when a career interested him. When he fell into romance Martha shut up like a clam; when he talked in a practical vein she occasionally said something that struck him forcibly. One day he said to his mother:

"Mother, I have always believed that you would like to see me make a match with Martha Bonfield. I have decided that if Martha is willing I am ready to accede to your wishes."

"Nonsense! You're not going to accede to my wishes at all. You have discovered that there's something in Martha that you want."

This turned out to be true. Algernon Witney, without fortune, married Martha Bonfield, without a cent. Witney became interested in money making, and in his wife he found a good manager, who was interested in money saving. The two got on together well enough till they saved enough money to work with, then began to accumulate a fortune.

Ten years passed. A good deal may happen in ten years. The Witneys were now well to do and paid some attention to social life. One evening when at a function Witney was introduced to a Mrs. Hetherington, a scrawny woman of about thirty, whose scantily covered collar bones did not deter her from wearing a decollete costume. Witney was about to move on to avoid getting tied up with this unprepossessing bunch of skin and bones when she said:

"Algy!"

He looked at her, vainly trying to place her.

"Can it be that you have forgotten me, Algy?"

Heavens! Could this be Alma Benton, the woman he had loved? The cheeks were hollow; the teeth, once white, though fragile, were interspersed with gold ones or braced with gold bands. But this was nothing to what she said when she began to talk of former times. It was all—well, he called it horrible.

She had married a man for his money!

A Mild Threat.

The following story is told of the late Dr. Timothy Dwight. In his early days, when he was a tutor in charge of student discipline at Yale—a sort of proctor, apparently—he was called out of his room by some midnight escapade. He was obliged as a matter of duty to pursue the disturbers, and with his long legs he soon found himself gaining rapidly upon them. Thereupon a solemn voice rang out suddenly into the night:

"Gentlemen, if you don't run a little faster I shall be obliged to overtake you."

Hunting a Penny.

More than a year ago the balance in the Bank of England showed the loss of a penny. The working force was told to find it and has been working since without success. Governments are exact in their small financial dealings, and even in this country a postmaster has received a check for a cent.

Poor Business.

"The milliner, as usual, is six weeks behind with my hat."

"Serves you right," growled her husband, the eminent magnate. "You women will deliberately place a big construction order without a sign of a penalty clause."

Very Likely.

"Saturn has eight moons."

"I wonder if moon songs are eight times as numerous with them as with us."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Photographic Films.

The photographic film was developed in the larger sense by the Rev. Hannibal Goodwin. This man made possible moving pictures. Goodwin died poor—poorer than if he had never invented anything—after a long fight in the courts with a photographic company that fought his right to obtain a patent.

Curious Extinct Animal.

The Amblypoda was one of the most curious of the extinct species of mammal. They were the size of the elephant and had five toes on each foot ending in hoofs instead of nails. Remains of these have been found in England, but the best specimens have come from North America.

A Domestic Sacrifice.

If husband becomes angry on Monday and tells wife she can't buy a certain thing the poor woman knows she must do without it until Tuesday.—Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

The Flavour Lasts

Disraeli and Gladstone.

Mr. Shaw Leslie, an Irish author, tells the following:

"My grandfather witnessed an effective piece of play in the house during a duel between Disraeli and Gladstone. During a heated fight of oratory Gladstone upset some pens on the table between them. Disraeli rose and, calling attention to the fact, slowly replaced them one by one. The effect of Gladstone's speech was lost by the time Disraeli had finished."

Speaking of Dickens and Thackeray, Mr. Leslie says:

"My grandfather recalled the ludicrous incident which brought them together. As they both left the Athenaeum, unknown to each other they seized the same hat. The effect was ludicrous enough to appeal even to professional humorists, and they shook hands."

The Larch in Labrador.

The soil and atmosphere are so cold and dry in Labrador that scarcely any vegetation thrives at all. The larch is a species of pine tree which is found in all northern countries, but its growth is so stunted in Labrador that a specimen found on the most southern part of that dreary land was but nine inches in height and the trunk was but three-eighths of inch in diameter. A careful examination of the miniature tree revealed its age to be at least thirty-two years, for there were that number of ring growths shown in its small trunk. The very cold currents pouring down from the north and the fact that Labrador has less sunshine than Alaska, together with several inland climatic conditions, make the summer seasons shorter and colder than are those of Alaska.—Exchange.

Eggs Sterilized by Gas.

A method of preserving eggs which is said to keep them absolutely fresh for an indefinite length of time is in use in France. New laid eggs in tin cases holding 1,000 each are placed in an autoclave, from which the air is exhausted until all the gas within the shells has been drawn out. Then carbonic acid gas and nitrogen are introduced from tanks of these gases in liquid form, and the tins containing the eggs are sealed with solder. Any germs of decay are killed by these gases, and it is said that the flavor of the eggs is in no way affected.

ANXIOUS TO REACH BAGDAD TO RETRIEVE GALLIPOLI FIASCO

One of the Elements in the Mesopotamian Disaster

LONDON, June 27.—The storm of indignation following the Mesopotamia exposure vigorously expressed in the afternoon papers must lead to much plain talk in Parliament. The story of how Major Markham Carter risked being 'broken' in order to expose the shameful lack of medical transport is prominently displayed. The Evening News declares: "For two months no one would be seen talking to Carter, who was practically sent to Coventry, but he was vindicated in April, 1916" After Carter's criticism of the appalling conditions at Basra Major-Gen. Cowper threatened to arrest him and said he would have his hospital ship taken away from him as the meddlesome, interfering of a faddist. This much Cowper testified before the commission. But Carter persisted in declaring in one report: "There is little chance of recovery for men suffering from severe gun-shot fractures, who lie on the bare decks of the boats and barges for thirteen days amid septic discharges," the remainder of this passage being too horrible to print. Prominently displayed also is a message of Sir Beauchamp Duff, commander-in-chief in India, who never visited Mesopotamia nor even Bombay, the shipping port, but severely rebuked Sir Percy Lake for the wording of a telegram which Lake transmitted from Gen. Cowper. Duff actually cabled: "Please warn Gen Cowper that if anything of this sort again occurs or I receive any more querulous, petulant demands for shipping I shall at once remove him from the force and refuse him any further employment of any kind."

As the Star remarks, after repeating this particular message: "And our children were dying like dogs in the desert." There is a loud demand for punishment, but as the Times said this morning: "Hardly anyone who is specifically criticized in the report can have anything to do with the campaign on the Tigris to-day. One Government decided to invade Mesopotamia, another Government ordered the advance from Kut to Bagdad. Both in turn have been changed and reconstructed. There is another Viceroy of India, and to some extent a new Government in India. None of the generals or medical officers who have to bear the heavy share of the blame are associated with the expedition any more. All the lamentable defects of field organization have been amply rectified. Risks admittedly the Ministers of that day had, with the abominably bad advice from military and naval counsellors, but their own anxiety to push on to Bagdad was too clearly inspired by the hope of redressing the probable political consequences of the failure at the Dardanelles. Because military considerations were subordinated to supposed political needs, the banks of the Tigris are thickly strewn with British and Indian dead." The Premier's coming speeches in Scotland are awaited with anxious interest.

CALLAGHAN: KING OF CANADA'S SCOUTS

Picturesque Youth Who Performed Daring Exploits in the Boer War and Died at Vimy

There was killed on Vimy Ridge a gallant soldier, who was as daring as he was picturesque. Major T. C. Callaghan, D.C.M., was killed while leading his men against the Germans. "Cassey" Callaghan, as he was nicknamed, was well-known in both Eastern and Western Canada, and his earlier exploits during the Boer War were widely written about, both in Great Britain, the United States and Canada. In his scouting in South Africa, where he did valuable work, he adopted the old Indian tactics, which he was so familiar with, and was marvellously successful in everything he undertook. In his day Callaghan had no superior in the West as a cattleman, horseman, rifle shot and hunter. When the Boer War broke out he applied for enlistment, and finally landed in South Africa with the men from the West, and advanced rapidly, becoming in a short time a famous scout. He was one of the best known scouts from Canada, Major Ross being the other.

His Most Notable Feat

The young Canadian, who was born and brought up in Toronto, to trek West later on, first attracted attention when he surprised eight Boers in a farmhouse and captured them single-handed. He was soon promoted to the rank of corporal, and held that rank when he first came under the attention of General French. General French having received information that 400 Boer transport carts could be easily captured, called for volunteers to go through the enemy's lines to General Smith-Dorrien's army, a distance of 70 miles. Nine men offered to carry the despatch, each by different routes. Of the nine, five were captured, three were shot dead, and Corp. Callaghan was the only one to get through after a desperate effort. Gen. Smith-Dorrien sent out a detachment and captured the transports. For this feat the corporal was promoted by Gen. French to the rank of lieutenant, and was awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal.

A Glorious Record

After a short period he assumed command, at the request of Gen. Kitchener, of a body of surrendered Boers, who wished to become scouts. This body of men, who did good service, were known as Callaghan's Scouts. The late scout was present at five large engagements in the Boer War. He was one of the Canadians present at the battle of Hart's River. He was despatch bearer to Gen. Kitchener at Diamond Hill, and was one of the Imperial army escort which went out to negotiate terms of surrender by Gen. Botha. The late officer had charge of the sacking operations of Gen. Botha's home, when that officer would not surrender. A short time before the close of the war he was promoted to the rank of captain, though at the time he was little more than a boy.

After the close of the war he settled in San Francisco, where he became an expert as an aeronaut. In the earthquake he escaped from the ruins of an hotel in which forty people were killed. In later years Major Callaghan was engaged in mining in Stewart and Granby, B.C., with Gen. and Col. Leckie. On the outbreak of the present war he came east to take out his commission. He left for England with the Canadian Mounted Rifles, from Victoria, and reverted from the rank of major to the rank of lieutenant in order to get to the front.

Y.M.C.A. AT CIRO'S

Club for Fighting Men and Their Women Friends

Ciro's Club, Orange-street, Leicester-square, famous for Tango suppers, entered upon a new phase when it was opened as a Y.M.C.A. "hut" for soldiers and sailors in uniform. Presumably as a concession to the club's traditions, men using it may bring their women friends. Amid cream and gold fittings and under crystal chandeliers our fighting men are provided with cheap teas and fruit by a committee of women workers, headed by Lady Asquith. Each afternoon and evening some well-known woman acts as hostess. Twice daily an entertainment is provided. The women members of an instrumental quartet which played there had all been at the front. Newspapers, writing material, and games are provided in the gallery.

DOGS BITE PRISONERS

"Military Necessity" is Excuse for Maltreating British

When a number of British prisoners returning from various camps in Germany reported their experiences Viscount Grey protested against the use of dogs as guards, and pointed out that police dogs were not used in English camps, says the Westminster Gazette. The Germans, however, defended the practice as a "military necessity," and not a breach of the "principles of humane and reasonable treatment of prisoners," and added that, "having regard to the inferior number of prisoners in England, no comparison can be drawn between conditions in the two countries." This apologia furnishes no sort of excuse of any kind. We have a good many more German prisoners than the Germans have British, but we certainly do not intend to make savage dogs the warders of those we have captured. The whole thing is only another piece of inexcusable savagery of a "ruthless" foe.

Kitten in a Dug-Out

An officer writing of his experiences among the deserted towns on the Western front says: I have had no experience in the war at all like entering these silent avenues of skeleton houses. Not a sound of war was in the air till one very distant Archie (anti-aircraft gun) gave a muffled crack. The only live thing seen within the walls, beyond the few engineers going about their business, was a tortoise-shell kitten that rubbed itself against my leg as I crawled down into some deep and blackened dug-outs under the town hall.

FRECKLE-FACE

SUN AND WIND BRING OUT UGLY SPOTS—HOW TO REMOVE EASILY.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is but trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine — double strength—from any druggist, and a few applications should show you how easily it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles, and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

ROB ROY OF CAUCASUS

Bandit's Wife and Revolution Ended Great, Romantic Feuds

Bandits of Kakhaetia, in the Caucasus, who under a local Rob Roy, Achmet Juti, for ten years terrorized the dwellers in the valleys, murdering, plundering and kidnapping women, effected a reconciliation with their victims under romantic circumstances. After the Russian revolution the Kakhaetians organized self-defence societies, and a short time later called a mass meeting at Gudjian railway station, from which a raid against the robbers was proposed. During the meeting armed envoys of Achmet appeared and announced that, although they had no conscientious objections to continuing the feud, they were willing to conclude peace.

The obdurate Kakhaetians replied that bandits captured by them must be handed over to the authorities for punishment. The meeting promised to end in a general disagreement when more bandits appeared, escorting Achmet's wife, a beautiful young woman of Christian origin, whom Achmet after kidnapping in 1913, converted into a devoted partner. Following the example of the Sabine women the bandit's wife fell on her knees, shed tears and so touched the hearts of the incensed citizens that peace was concluded on the spot. A resolution was adopted declaring that the infamies committed by the bandits were due to the demoralizing influence of the autocracy.

Was Troubled With Shortness of Breath

When the heart becomes affected, there ensues a feeling of a choking sensation, a shortness of breath, palpitation, throbbing, irregular beating, smothering sensation, dizziness, and a weak, sinking, all-gone feeling of oppression and anxiety.

The nerves become unstrung, you dread to be alone, have a horror of society, start at the least noise and are generally fatigued.

On the first sign of the heart becoming weakened or the nerves unstrung, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills should be taken. They are just what you require at this time. They regulate and stimulate the heart, and strengthen and restore the whole nerve system.

Mrs. C. M. Cormier, Buctouche, N.B., writes: "Since two years ago I was troubled with a shortness of breath, and sometimes I could hardly breathe. I went to see several doctors, and they said it was from my heart and nerves, but they did not seem to do me any good. One day I got one of your B.B.B. Almanacs and read of a case similar to mine.

"I bought a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and after taking it I noticed such a change that I kept on taking them until I had used four more boxes, when I was cured."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box, three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co.,

HUNS DRAFT LUNATICS

Asylum's Report Says Imbeciles Make Poor Soldiers

Lunatics do not make good soldiers, says a report of the lunatic asylum at Stettin, Germany, which advises against any more of its inmates being conscripted for service with the colors. "The asylums are proud that their inmates are allowed to serve the fatherland," says the report, "but the results have not been satisfactory because the lunatics have generally proved to be an unbearable nuisance in the various armies in which they have served, refusing to obey orders, deserting from their companies and becoming vagrants. Hardly any are of any real value for military purposes and many have had to be sent back to their asylums."

Food Shortage Incidents

For feeding pigs with wheat, Eli Barber, farmer, Royston, Yorkshire, was fined $25 and costs. Messrs. James Cottle, Ltd., proprietors of a Chester restaurant, fined $25 for wasting bread, said that it was left by customers after dining. A man named Hamilton, who advertised seed potatoes at $125 a ton, was fined $100 or 59 days' imprisonment, at the London Mansion House. The Crown offered three acres in the borough to Windsor people for allotments.

The observers who are about to ascend in a captive balloon to photograph the enemy's positions are here seen putting on parachute harness. The views taken by these and other observes in the British army were of the utmost value in the recent drive in France.

Type of German shelter, built of solid concrete, used by a machinegun squad. The position of which it formed part was destroyed by the French mines, but despite the force of the explosion the shelter remained intact, though turned upside down. It is fortifications of this kind that give the famous Hindenburg line its so-called impregnable character.

A Hold-up at Sea - - British and American News in Picture

Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. "Atlantic" fleet, Sir David Beatty's coadjutor in "Maintaining the Chivalry of the Sea," Admiral Mayo.

Remarkable photograph of a German submarine, the U-65, halting the Spanish Liner Antonio Lopez several hundred miles at sea on her way from Barcelono to Havana. A boat from the Lopez can be seen alongside the submarine, the captain of the Spanish vessel parleying with the German Commander. The holdup took place on the morning of April 12 last.

This picture is a striking illustration of the part English women are taking in the war. Queen Mary is visiting a shell factory. The women in white or khaki are forewomen in charge of the other women who have taken the places of the men who are fighting.

Dr. Page was photographed here just after receiving an honorary degree at Cambridge.

King George visiting the Vickers munition works at Barrow, England. There is a military air about the picture. The scene is typical of the new spirit in England, the spirit which arises out of recognition of the fact that victory in the field depends as much on the workers at home as on the men at the front. So the lads clustered back of the shell cases receive honors once reserved for soldiers. (Top photo.)

Children who Know Little of Peace.—These children of Monastir, who have been growing up during the two Balkan wars and now the European war, are far more accustomed to an atmosphere of armed conflict than of peace. They are fetching water for the soldiers, from whom one of them has apparently received the helmet which he proudly wears.

Big Business Means
A BIG MARKET

The one has always followed the other as day follows night. It is inevitable that a wave of commercial prosperity should find dedication on the exchanges where the stocks of the prosperous corporations are traded. American business is already readjusting itself to war conditions, and the readjustment is proceeding with a minimum of disturbance of our everyday affairs. Already the market is tending upward. Sooner or later market prices of stocks adjust themselves to company earnings. The ratio between earnings and market prices at the present time shows conclusively that the market can still expand by a good many points before reaching a stage where prices may be considered too high. Judging the future by the past (and there is no other way of judging it) the crest of the market has by no means been reached and higher prices may be looked for all along the line, but particularly in those stocks that are on a producing and earning basis.

CROWN PRINCE OPENS NEW DRIVE ON FRENCH AT VERDUN

TREMENDOUS DRIVE ON VERDUN WHILE LENS TOTTERS TO BRITISH

Crown Prince Selected for Theatrical Manoeuvre To Lighten the Blow in the Expected Fall of Lens — Few Details from Haig

GERMAN ATTACK FAILS

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 30.—Germany is striving desperately to-day to retrieve on the French front an impending disaster on the British front. With the fall of Lens apparently now only a matter of days, the Crown Prince has once more been entrusted, with picked troops and prodical supplies of ammunition, to direct a drive on Verdun. Official statements reveal that this stroke is of tremendous power. Despite the concentrated fury of the attack the German gain, a little ground on the west slope of Dead Man's Hill, has been disproportionate to the loss in men and expenditure of munitions. This is at least the fourth major offensive operation which has been undertaken against Verdun, and the fourth time the initial smashes were checked.

Field Marshal Haig has been very chary of details of the British operations around Lens. It appears certain, however, that the British troops have by now almost reached the city limits of the French coal metropolis. Of secondary interest is a continuation of the German drive along the Chemin Des Dames. It is manifestly designed to relieve the increasing French pressure around Laon, the base city of the Hindenburg line. The French statement records a failure of the general attack.

GERMANS PENETRATED VERDUN FIRST LINE

But Were Immediately Driven Out Last Night With Heavy Losses.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 30. — Picked troops, driven forward in perhaps the most savage attack the German Crown Prince has attempted in six months, succeeded in penetrating the French first line trenches near Verdun over a front of nearly a mile and a half last night, but were immediately driven out. Fearful losses were inflicted on the attackers and the net gain was a small bit of ground held on the west slope of Dead Man's Hill, according to the official report.

"U-BOATS" IN PAIRS.

Two of Them Attacked British Vessel Simultaneously.

Special to The Examiner:

AN ATLANTIC PORT, June 30.—Evidence that German submarines are now operating in pairs was brought here to-day by the crew of a British steamship which was attacked simultaneously by two U-boats when about thirty miles from the Atlantic coast. The ship escaped by zig-zagging at full speed. Another ship engaged the attention of one submarine and was sunk.

Good Fishing at Burleigh Falls

Visitor Lands Twenty-five Pounder

BURLEIGH FALLS, June 30.—Dr. Herbert Watson and wife, who are spending their vacation here, succeeded in landing a twenty-five pound lunge besides three others of a smaller size and four bass.

Walter Metheral and Reid Jenise, of Sutton, Quebec, are registered at the hotel. They report fishing good.

Other guests registered are: Mr. and Mrs. Grant and children, Mr. and Mrs. W. Sangster, Miss McCabe, Mr. and Mrs. J. Butcher.

On Thursday St. Johns choir visited the Falls and judging from the remarks, everybody went home happy.

The cottages and hotel are rapidly filling up and everything points to a successful season.

GASOLINE LAUNCH SEVERELY SCORCHED

Mr. Ben Schweier Struck a Match in Mr. Asa Huycke's Boat.

A lighted match in a gasoline launch is almost as dangerous as a loaded gun. Mr. Ben Schweier was assisting Mr. Asa Huycke at the foot of Lock street in putting some finishing touches on his launch, the "Awawegang" preparing for the holiday, when he dropped a rule on the floor. Thoughtlessly he lighted a match to look for it, and with a flash the whole boat seemed to catch fire. Schweier jumped overboard to extinguish his flaming clothing, and Mr. Harold Ryle quickly put out the fire with wet sand. The boat was damaged about fifty dollars worth, and Schweier was burned about the hands.

GREECE RAPIDLY SEVERING WITH CENTRAL POWERS

Diplomatic Representatives Recalled and Army Chiefs To Consider Use of Army

HAVE 300,000 MEN

Special to The Examiner:

ATHENS, June 30.—Greece moved rapidly to-day in action against Germany. All Greek diplomatic representatives in the Central Powers' capitals were formally recalled and all Greek army chiefs were summoned to Athens for a conference as to the best utilization of the army. In the capital, it was confidently expected that Germany would respond immediately with a declaration of war against King Alexander. The full war strength of Greece is somewhere around three hundred thousand men, according to best available data. It appears likely that Greece will throw her forces into the Macedonian campaign, releasing several hundred thousand French, British, Russian and Italian soldiers now there for service on the western front.

Relentless Lash Is Teaching Huns Humility

Special to The Examiner:

DUNDEE, Scotland, June 30.—"We now have such reserves of munitions that whatever the German submarines do they cannot prevent our successful prosecution of the war," declared Premier Lloyd George in a speech here to-day. "We have driven the great German army underground," he continued, "and that means the beginning of the end. It means pounding a sense of inferiority into every pore of the German mind. The Prussians possess many virtues, excepting humility, which is now being taught them by a fierce, relentless lash."

Lloyd George was given an enthusiastic welcome by the townspeople. Discussing economic conditions, he was cheered when he said: "If necessary, the Government will itself pay the difference in the price of bread so as to bring it within compass of the bulk of the people."

Germans Claim An Advance Near Cerny

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via London, June 30. — East of Cerny, German troops extended their gains of the previous day, capturing several trenches south of LaBovelle Farm, to-day's official statement declared. The number of French prisoners was increased. Around Cerny French attacks were repulsed in hand-to-hand fighting.

DETAILS OF EVENTS FOR CELEBRATION OF DOMINION DAY

The details of the celebration in Peterborough of Confederation Day have been generally published during the past week and should be familiar. It should not be overlooked that in practically all the churches there will be special sermons to-morrow on the national holiday and what it represents.

Monday's Programme.

Monday's events will be divided into three parts, morning, afternoon and evening.

The morning parade leaves the Armouries sharp at 9:30 o'clock in the following order:

Great War Veterans' Association and other returned soldiers.
57th Regimental Band.
The 97th C. E. F.
Non-commissioned officers and men who are home on leave or who are visiting Peterborough.
Officers in uniform.
Collegiate Institute Cadets.
Veterans of '66 who will march.
Trades and Labour Council.
Veterans of '66 who do not desire to walk.
Members of Parliament, City and County Councils, Government officials, members of School Boards, City Officials, Board of Trade.
Citizens in automobiles.

The Afternoon Parade.

In the afternoon the big motor parade leaves the Market square at one o'clock sharp and will make its way to the Exhibition Grounds by a circuitous route for the main celebration. The Salvation Army Band will play in Victoria Park on Monday night, completing the generous round of festivities.

RECORD ONE FOR PRIDE

Premier Sir Robert Borden Issues Message to the People of This Dominion

FIFTY YEARS OLD

OTTAWA, June 30.—"Let us, with resolute spirit, so maintain our purpose and our effort that in this last and greatest chapter of humanity's suriving and triumph, it shall be recorded of Canada that, as at the first, she never hesitated, so to the end she never faltered."

With the above inspiring words Sir Robert Borden concludes a message to the people of the Dominion of Canada on the occasion of its semi-centennial. The Premier reviews the growth of the country in the fifty years which have elapsed since Confederation, and refers to the great problems with which the country is faced on its fiftieth anniversary. The Premier's message reads:

"Amid the welter and horror of a war which devastates civilisation, we pause for a moment to consider the Canada of half a century ago and the Canada of to-day. Much has been added to us; our boundaries have been vastly extended so as to embrace half a continent; our population has nearly trebled; there has bees a measurable development of our resources; we have grown enormously in production commerce and wealth; facilities of communication and transportation have been provided beyond all anticipation; the general conditions of life and the standards of living have been conspicuously raised; educational facilities have been greatly enlarged. In all these and many other incidents of the world's progress Canada has more than held her own.

Confidence in Destiny.

"All this is impressive; but still more inspiring is the thought that during the half century which now draws to a close Canada has come to a fuller knowledge of her heritage and of the responsibility which it entails; to a clearer consciousness of national purpose; to a firmer confidence in her destiny.

"The greatness of any nation rests in the last analysis upon the character of its people as exemplified in their ideals and by their capacity for science and devotion in fulfilling the national purpose. Judged by this unfailing test, Canada stands unashamed before the world. In 1866, the year before our confederation was born, Prussia snatched from Austria the German states and took her first step along the awful path that has led her to the relentless issue which she forced upon humanity three years ago. Her challenge to civilization and human freedom is being answered beyond the seas by the free democracies of the world. Among them Canada has worthily taken her place and proudly borne her part. Thus would they have wished it, who in 1867 laid the foundation of our liberties. Let us with resolute spirit, so maintain our purpose and our effort that in this last and greatest chapter of humanity's striving and triumph, it shall be recorded of Canada that as at the first she never hesitated, so to the end she never faltered."

W. C. T. U. Urged to Sustain Activities

The annual meeting of the W.C.T.U. was held on Wednesday afternoon in the green room of the Y. W. C. A., Mrs. C. H. Shield in the chair. There was a very good attendance and reports were presented by the officers of the various departments of their work during the past year.

Mrs. Wilson Taylor took the chair during the election of officers. The following ladiers were elected to office:

Mrs. C. H. Shield—President.
Mrs. (Dr.) Morrison — 1st Vice-President.
Mrs. K. P. Ellis—2nd Vice-President.
Mrs. J. F. Thornton—3rd Vice-President.
Mrs. H. A. Fife—Recording Secretary.
Mrs. J. S. Knapman—Assistant Recording Secretary.
Mrs. A. E. Micks—Treasurer.
Mrs. A. A. Goodfellow—Corresponding Secretary.

Mrs. Taylor earnestly requested the Union not to think because we have prohibition there was nothing else to do. Now that women have the franchise the W.C.T.U. was the best place for women to learn how to use it.

It was decided not to hold any more meetings until September.

Bulgars Fear An Advance of Allies

Special to The Examiner:

BERNE, Switzerland, June 30. — Fear that General Sarrail, commanding the Allied expeditionary forces in Macedonia, may be preparing a general offensive, has led the Bulgarian army chiefs to ask the German General Von Mackensen to preside at a general war council, according to despatches received here to-day from Bulgaria.

Children Collect $260 by "Mile of Pennies"

The monthly meeting of the 57th Regt. Chapter, I.O.D.E., presided over by the Regent, Mrs. Walker, was held in the Y.W.C.A. Thursday afternoon.

A very interesting report of the National Annual Meeting of the I.O.D.E., recently held in Victoria, was sent by the Chapter's representative, Mrs. Hazen Ritchie.

Miss Flora Davidson submitted the report of the tea room. This was a most encouraging one.

Mrs. Sharpe reported that 49 visits had been made during the month.

The report of the Knitting committee is as follows:

Since last meeting on May 31, 54 pairs of socks have been sent overseas.

Pte. Allen C. Sharpe, 2nd Battalion, 17 pairs.

Drummer Jas. Carr, 52nd Battalion, 17 pairs.

Signaller Wm. Cumming, 3rd Battery, 17 pairs.

Pte. Lyburn, Pte. Smith, Pte. Geo. White house, 1 pair each.

Letters acknoweldging receipt of socks received from:

Pte. A. H. Daniel, 14 C.M.R.
Q. M. S. Gordon, 2nd Battalion.
Canadian War Contingent Association (128 pairs).
Driver Ernest Hamlin, 3rd Div. Amn. Column.
Gunner W. C. Dunford, A.A.A. Battery.

One hundred and one pairs of socks have been received and five spindles of wool purchased. Your committee wishes to thank the Womens' Teacher's Guild for a donation of nine pairs.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

M. COTTRELL,
Convenor.

It was also reported that the public school children of the city had during the month of May collected over $260 toward the mile of pennies. This splendid work on the part of the children is very much appreciated by the Chapter. As a considerable number of the holders still remain to be filled, the Chapter hopes that its members and friends will endeavour to fill these as soon as possible.

A donation of fifty dollars each was given to the Prisoners of War Fund and the Military Y.M.C.A.

KNOX CHURCH.

At the evening service at Knox Church on July 1st, a temporary honour roll of Knox men who have enlisted will be on view for the first time. This will doubtless prove of interest to the whole congregation.

DELIBERATE WRECK OF A C. N. R. PASSENGER TRAIN AT THURLOW

BIG FLOATING ISLAND DOWN CHEMONG LAKE

Wind Drove it From the Marsh at the West End—Now Opposite the Park.

A floating island of five or six acres blew down Chemong Lake early this morning and stranded near the shore opposite the pavilion. The wind had evidently loosened it from the extreme end of the lake, and the expansive "island" of weeds, brush, and other marshy material slowly drove down toward the Park. With the change of the wind it may be headed back to its habitat. Otherwise it will have to be broken up.

TROUBLE IS TO TAKE FORCES FROM LENS

Almost as Difficult and Dangerous To Leave as To Hold Them — Bitter Fighting on Outskirts

SHELLING IS HEAVY

British Headquarters, June 29.—The Germans are finding it about as hard to let go of the positions before Lens as to hold them, and are having a dreadful time trying to extricate themselves. The Lens defences are not of a nature to permit a great infantry attack, as against a definite trench line. The whole area is a veritable warren of minor defences, one behind the other and of indefinite depth, running through the ruins of Avion and Lens. Over the whole wide area last night we subjected the enemy to a merciless pounding. At each of four appointed places not only did our men go forward, here raiding, there seizing a trench, but around Lens itself, methodically cleaning out burrow after burrow and disposing of resistance wherever encountered, sending back a constant stream of prisoners from the rearguard defence, machine gun posts and strong points. It was tactics admirably adapted to the situation.

Geographically the result in this area was a general pushing forward of our line to Lens 500 yards. Half of Avion is now in our hands, as well as a large part of the maze of ruined railway buildings and workshops east of here. The chief object was probably not a large geographical advance, but the hammering of the enemy and disorganizing his retirement. His casualties we know in prisoners were heavy. The invisible effects of our shelling behind the whole front must have been terrific.

Members of Parliament and Merchant Princes Were Aboard — Five Coaches Piled Up In Ditch —Engine Rushed Through Open Switch—Rail Was Also Loosened

PROMINENT PASSENGERS

Special to The Examiner:

This morning's wreck on the C. N. R. provides fresh evidence of the hand of some criminal, who has been working in this district during the past week. On Thursday a C.P.R. passenger train was derailed at Dunsford, near Lindsay. The engine and two cars were ditched. The recent trespass cases in the local police court followed a report of evidence to wreck a train in this locality. Similarity of method in the three cases indicates the work of one individual.

NAPANEE, Ont., June 30.—Buckled up in a series of "V's" with the engine hanging half way over into a swamp, the tender and two baggage cars minus their trucks, the day coach nosed down into a marsh, and two Pullmans off the track, the C.N.R. train from Ottawa came to a sudden stop just east of Thurlow at 8:26 a.m. to-day. People who have seen many wrecks declare that this morning's was one of the worst in their experience, yet not a soul was injured.

Deliberately Planned.

There is conclusive evidence that the smash was the result of a deliberate attempt to ditch the train. It was apparent from the first that the switch had been open, but closer examination revealed the diabolic nature of the plot. The first south rail of the switch had been disconnected from its fellow by removing the tie plates. These were nowhere to be found. This evidence of a deliberate attempt to wreck the train was confirmed by examination of the switching apparatus. The lack on this had been broken off with a stone and carried away. That very stone, with the marks of brass upon it, was found lying beside the track. Furthermore the miscreant had placed stones between the south rails of the switch to ensure it staying open. These also were found in a crushed condition.

Prominent Men On Train.

The night train from Toronto to Ottawa had passed safely over the spot less than half an hour before and had "crossed" the ill-fated westbound train at Shannonville. At the rear end of the wrecked train, Sir William Mackenzie's car was not very severely jarred, and Sir William, President of the C.N.R. himself, slept blissfully on. Sir John Aird, of the Bank of Commerce, another pasenger on the car was early on the scene of trouble and was followed shortly afterwards by Messrs. E. R. Wood and Z. A. Lash, both big C.N.R. men.

"The evidence is conclusive," said E. R. Wood after examining the switch, that it was deliberate."

Passengers in the first Pullman car included Messrs. Wm. Weichel, M.P., and H. B. Morphy M.P. Other members of Parliament on the train were Messrs. Hugh Clark of Bruce, and Colonel Lewis of Huron.

SUNDAY MORNING DOMINION DAY

It has been suggested that in view of our 50th Dominion Day falling on Sunday this year, and that since this outstanding Anniversary comes at a time when our fair Dominion is engaged in the most terrible war and the most righteous war that has ever called for the resources of the Christian World, that on the morning of July 1st every man, woman, and child in Peterborough should be found

IN THE HOUSE OF GOD

And that nothing but illness or most unusual conditions should prevent this great day witnessing the entire population at prayer and

FIFTY YEARS OF NATIONHOOD.

To-morrow marks the fiftieth anniversary of the Confederation of the Canadian provinces—the golden jubilee of our nationhood. For the past fifty years we have loyally celebrated Dominion day, and every year with increasing appreciation of the increasing importance of the event signalized. This year we come to a culminating point; and we can regard it with mingled feelings of pride of accomplishment, and concern for the bristling problems the past few weeks have made prominent.

In the matter of national accomplishment we may regard Confederation as having passed the experimental stage and to have justified the great emprise of our statesmen of half a century ago. A few retrospective moments will suggest to our minds a contrast of the present condition of Canada and that of fifty years ago. Then Canada was composed of a few isolated provinces scattered like islands in a vast continental land-sea, with no connecting link except the Imperial bond; without the cohesion of common interests and by none of the material connections that bring people together—no railways and only the most primitive avenues of intercourse. Now the Dominion is bound together by the steel girders of three transcontinental railways, the whole country gridironed by connecting links; a splendid system of canals, connecting and utilizing our magnificent inland water ways. We have immensely grown in commerce and industry, though in these things we have only yet touched the edge of our resources, our potentialities of national achievement. In material things, in material accomplishment we have done great things. We have achieved a very creditable literature and have made good advance in art, and in all matters of the flesh, as contrasted with moral and spiritual forces, we have done well.

But have we made great political advances? Have we as great statesmen to-day, as we had in the persons of those forseeing and self-sacrificing men who laid the foundations of Confederation fifty years ago? Have we as a nation of statesmen and people as fine, quick and sensitive political conscience as was prevalent a half century ago? Have we as wide and large a spirit of national harmony as was embodied in the action of union and expressed through it in our statesmen and people? When we study the present scene at Ottawa, peer into the "kettle of fish" that is stewing there to-day, have we reason to regard the circumstances and conditions as furnishing in themselves an example of the highest succes of fifty years of Confederation, or as a fitting celebration of so momentous an event as its golden jubilee?

Passions are at work, partizanship is rampant and the fires we thought dead, the distrusts and jealousies we hoped were, at least, dormant and smouldering, have developed, are emerging in the golden jubilee year of Confederation, that bodes ill for the second and succeeding half centuries, unless the wisest councils, the steadiest judgment, the most magnanimous, self-effacement and biggest patriotism of statesmanship comes to the rescue.

This picture of foreboding ill is, however, offset by the part taken by Canadian soldiers in this great war. Canada's soldiers have, by their sacrifice and service of conquest, crowned with an aureole of glory, whatever achievements stand to the credit of Canada in her half century of nationhood. Our people at home individually, men and women, have done their share.

What of the future? We are laying great plans for material achievement. We are talking of reconstruction after the war, but all our talk is of material things; things of the flesh, buying, selling, trading and traffic; but as a Christian country are we not of those "who trust in horses and chariots?" Are we not forgetting, and in danger of forgetting further, the things of the spirit, ignoring the higher Power in whose hands are the lots of nations, the good of the people? The Jewish nation forgot their loyalty to the Divine hegemony, and we know their fate. Confederation day number fifty comes on a Sunday, and suggests recollection of what was seem to have forgotten, that the hand of the Lord of the Sabbath should be recognised in an individual and national attitude to our individual and national duties. We may legislate and fight, sow and reap and build, but in all these things, if we trust to our own wisdom and our own work, we forget the divinely asserted truth—"Except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." We have the half century anniversary falling upon a Sunday, an auspicious happening if to realize, or even recognize that the destinies of nations are in the hands of a Supreme power, upon whose favour or frown, our rise or our fall depends. Are we forgetting that. Let us spare ourselves such in forgetting.

Far called our navies melt away
On dune and headland sinks the fire;
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre:
Lord God of hosts be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget.

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tribe and iron shard,
All valiant dust that builds on dust
And guarding calls not. Thee to guard:
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on thy people Lord.

As far back as 1690, Sir Frederick Nicholson, a British statesman, proposed the Confederation of all the Anglo-American colonies.

FEDERATION DAY IN FRANCE

While we in the peaceful environments of home are celebrating the fiftieth Dominion Day in our comparaitvely frivolous way—parading, sporting, speech-making, picnicing, excursioning, fishing ,what is the attitude of the Canadians in France? They fight to save Canada, while we hold festival, with, perhaps, imperfect perception and memory of the spirit really behind the day; of the significance and meaning of it.

Prophesying is perilous work for the ordinary reputation, but if we may indulge a forecast, it seems safe to suggest that the Canadian soldiers in France will celebrate the fiftieth Confederation day in a way worthy of them—of a piece with the splendid record they have been compiling ever since they entered the war. We should not be at all surprised if our Canadian boys would celebrate the day by the capture of Lens, to which they seem to have been working up for the past few days. In so doing they may break the Sabbath, but this pardonable rupture of the fourth commandment, in view of the exigencies of war, will be, forgiven if the breaking of the Sabbath goes with the breaking of the Teuton defence, and another stride is made toward the victory that is surely, if somewhat slowly, coming. If the Canadians do this, or help to do it, they will be doing more to worthily celebrate Canada's golden jubilee than all the festivals and fireworks we perpetrate.

God save the King, God save Canada and give us godspeed for another happy and prosperous fifty years of Confederation.

MUSIC AND MILITARY MORALE

Military efficiency is not a matter of manhood altogether, or discipline, or munitions, but of morale—spirit—a state of mind that acts on muscle and makes for getting the best—and that's a good deal—out of the British Tommy. The British Government is spending millions a day—a sum that takes the joy out of forty millions dollars—to equip, munitionize, feed and keep fit, her soldiers. Anything besides that can inspire the morale of the soldiers, from a cigarette to a grand piano, is provided. Things that people at hime think that soldiers can do without, but they are one of the contributory elements of victory. A cigarette against the teeth of soldiers standing knee-deep in trench water, waiting their turn to go over, is a tremendous pick-me-up; keeps the soldier in better spirit, that will find its fruit when the order to advance comes. We see in the papers the picture of a four-in-hand escorted by an officer, drawing across the Sahara desert a sand-sled laden with a piano which the British government furnished the Tommies to accompany their crude songs. The British government feels that by furnishing music, and other entertainment, for her soldiers she keeps and has kept up the morale of her soldiers to the highest point of fighting efficiency, one of the things that, grafted upon native grit, makes the greatest fighting soldiers in the world—chirrupy and cheerful as sparrows, obstinate as mules, and tenacious as bulldogs, when the tug-of-war comes.

If music to the tune of thousands of pounds is used to keep the British soldier up, is it not logical to assume that music for the masses—park concerts—will keep the armies of peace in Peterborough, the masses, who by their industry and toil, are fighting one element of the battle of liberty, will not have their morale improved, their efficiency strengthened, their citizenship bettered, by the entertainment and uplift and inspiration of music? We and they feel the importance of this when it is taken away, or its loss is threatened.

This line of reasoning or rambling may be taken as a little drive at some of the Aldermen. Take it at that. Think the matter over, and see if it is not easily possible to become penny-wise and pound-foolish.

The Kaiser has a good many hard nuts to crack, and now he will have to try his teeth on a Brazil nut.

Duty of Canada To Provide Food for the Fighting Allies

Discussing Britain's food problem and the measures that are being taken to meet it, Mr. Prothero, British Minister of Agriculture, gave the Associated Press this statement:

"There is risk that the strain of food may strain endurance to the breaking point. There is as yet no indication that we even have distantly approached that point but endurance might snap if for instance the milk supply failed through inability to feed the dairy herd, because then lives of little children would be threatened. Thus, there is a greater question involved in food supply than the loss of ordinary comforts of life or even reduction in its accustomed necessities. For this reason it is a welcome relief to us to know that the farmers of the United States are co-operating with the Allies, that they fully realise the essential part they play in this struggle for freedom, that they are bringing into their work the spirit of self-sacrifice and endurance and that they are determined to put out the last ounce of their strength to win the war on the plough lands of the United States. Here and there, God speed the plough."

Every word thus addressed to the United States, applies with equal force to Canada. We are facing the stern reality—there is no use blinking facts—of a probable twelve months more of war. Are we, so far as production, is concerned, doing all that we can to meet the situation? Our Governments, federal and provincial, have not been lacking in effort. We gladly give them full credit for their work, but, at the same time, we are convinced that it is possible to do more.

Political economists who declare that the world is facing famine may be charged with pessimistic exaggeration but the facts are hardly calculated to discourage their frame of mind. Examination of data of the world's production of cereals for the crop year 1916-17, and comparisons with the previous year and the average for the five previous years, indicates that all reserves are being rapidly exhausted, and that world-wide suffering will be inevitable unless strictest economy is practiced. United States authorities state that, according to all indications, the 1917-18 cereal crops will show improvement compared with the preceding year, but they add that in view of extra-normal demands created by war, and reduced reserves, it is probable that the continent shall face the necessity of finding substitute foods for cereals, especially for wheat.

In the face of such possibilities, in view of the tragic consequences which possible famine in Britain might bring, Canada's duty is imperative and plain; we must produce all we can and we must economize all we can.

"What strikes me most forcibly about your great country is the way your people waste," a noted European statesman observed to Sir Robert Borden a few years ago. The indictment was a just one, and, what is more discreditable to us as a people, it is equally deserved to-day. Three years of war have not taught Canadians the need of real economy. There is waste of foodstuffs going on in this country to-day which in the light of suffering in Europe, and in the light of the grave situation which confronts the world, is a reflection upon our serious understanding of what is at stake in this war.—Ottawa Journal-Press.

CHEESE AND RICE BATTER.

Make a batter of one cupful of flour, one egg well beaten and one half cupful of milk. Beat it thoroughly and set it aside for at least half an hour. Then add one-half cupful of milk, one half teaspoonful of baking powder, four tablespoonfuls of grated cheese, one-half teaspoonful of salt, and a dash of Cayenne pepper. Mix well, put into a buttered baking dish and bake in a hot oven twenty to thirty minutes. This must not stand after it is taken from the oven.

Gillette

Are You Using the Razor Chosen by the Allied Armies?

ONLY proven efficiency survives in this war. Men, weapons and equipment must make good beyond question—or go to the scrap heap. A year's active service is a sterner test than a decade of peace!

Beyond all question the Gillette has proved itself the Razor of the Great War—in all the Allied Armies, on all the Fronts. Gillette Razors and Blades have gone Overseas in a steady stream from Canada and the United States—by thousands, by hundreds of thousands and by millions!

Compact enough for the lightest kit—always keen—always ready for instant action—the Gillette has served with the fighting men everywhere. On the firing lines its clean, smooth, refreshing shave is relished as a bit of home comfort in the wilderness.

To you—the man in Canada—the Gillette Safety Razor offers just the same advantages that have won such favor Overseas. There is not a man living with a beard to shave who cannot shave better with a Gillette—if he will use it correctly, with a light grip and the sliding, angle stroke. If there is a man who is not enthusiastic over the Gillette, it is probably because he has not caught this simple knack of using it.

If you already have a Gillette Safety Razor yourself, you'll appreciate how much some lad you know Overseas would enjoy one as a gift from you. 263

Standard Sets, "Bulldogs" and "Aristocrats" cost $5.00 — Pocket Editions $5.00 to $6.00—Combination Sets $6.50 up.

Pershing Conducts His War Preparations Like the Head of a Great Corporation

PARIS.—General Pershing and his staff have struck a steady gait at their headquarters in the Rue de Constantine organising for American operations. It is the busiest corner in Paris—begins work earlier, closes later, and takes the shortest luncheon time. General Pershing is in his element, as, but for the General's ingrained objection to making his movements public, an account of a sample day at headquarters would show. It would make interesting reading and enlighten the American public without giving Berlin information to use against us. It was said of Kitchener that he had genius that would make him an ideal manager of the United States Steel Corporation. Seeing Pershing at work four days suggests similar qualifications. His good temper, unwearying industry and constructive instinct make a good showing of accomplishments at the end of each day.

It doesn't require much imagination to understand the nature and extent of preparations for half a million or a million men. Eventually the American camps in France may aggregate a city as big as Chicago. Engineering, transportation, and supply problems are on a huge scale. The study of these problems and the actual work are proceeding with the same system in the Rue de Constantine as if being worked out in the offices of a big corporation at home.

To mention one illustration of General Pershing's talent for organization: I learn that an arrangement has just been made to bring all American Red Cross activities under the direction of the General and his staff. The Red Cross people are delighted, as they feel that through the instrumentality of this recognition their official status and the scope of their work may be very greatly extended and facilitated.

All day long General Pershing was closeted first with one, then another department head. Work of this kind doesn't tire him. Big difficulties challenge his zeal and interest, and even after the closing of headquarters he keeps everybody busy till a late hour at the hotel.

Much interest was shown here in the publication of the details of General Pershing's Alsatian ancestry. It is a fact that the first Pershing came from Alsace to Pennsylvania. Indeed I learn that President Poincare himself asked the General about his ancestors at an official luncheon the other day at the Elysee, and expressed the greatest pleasure when General Pershing replied that they were genuine Alsatians. But the ancestry most distinctly stamped on the General is Southern, his mother having been Miss Thompson, of Tennessee. His manner and personality are Southern.

At the end of a week in France it may be said that there has been not a single unhappy incident. Among many opportunities for slips there has been not a single jarring note. A reception of unparalleled intensity of feeling has been concluded, and the workaday programme has been strenuously inaugurated. The French people have been stiffened in their faith in America and confident belief in the victory of the French and British armies heartened to new efforts because of the knowledge that the United States is on its way with all its huge resources.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

My boy Frank, seemed weak chested, and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D. Stevens, Minga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." No treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

NO DAYLIGHT SAVING YET.

Little Chance of Bill Going Into Effect This Year.

OTTAWA, June 28.—Daylight saving for Canada will not likely go into effect this year. The bill introduced by Sir George Foster, has only been given its first reading, and like everything else has had to make way for the conscription bill. It if it does become law this year, t is little chance of it being put effect before this summer is over.

Vacation Death Roll

During every holiday season the newspapers record a startling number of accidental deaths among pleasure seekers.

Supposing you should lose your life while on your vacation this year, what will happen to your family? Do you realize that you've a duty towards them that doesn't end with your death?

Perhaps your wife hasn't been trained to be a bread-winner. But your failure to protect her until she dies —till the children are educated and self-supporting— may force your widow into the business grind in spite of her incapacity.

It's not a pleasant prospect, it it? But isn't it a possible contingency? To offset it you need an Imperial policy to perpetuate your income after you're gone.

Visit to Farm House Where Canada's Greatest Fighter Was Reared

How Farm Boy Rose To the Command of Armies of Canada --- Interview with Aged Mother of General Sir Arthur Currie — Be Honest With Yourself

STRATHROY, Ont., June 30. — "Are you Mrs. Currie?"

"Yes."

"The mother of General Sir Arthur Currie?"

"Yes."

The quickest way into the sitting-room lay through the kitchen. A wood fire was roaring in the stove making it too hot even for the cat.

"We're baking the bread," said the general's mother, referring to herself and the Miss Currie who presided over the stove. "Come in here, it's cooler."

The shortest—possibly the best — recruiting speech ever delivered was repeated in a farmhouse four miles from here by a woman of seventy. It was not new, even in the farmhouse. So far it has directly recruited only one soldier. That soldier, however, was General Sir Arthur Currie, commander-in-chief of the Canadian forces in France. The "speech" was from his mother. It was: "BE HONEST WITH YOURSELF!" It was the maxim of the farm house hold from which General Currie has risen to honour and responsibility.

Up the Shady Lane.

A long journey by rail, a four-mile drive down a sleepy country road, a shady lane and a little path— these lead to the birthplace of General Currie and the home of his mother, his two sisters (a third is in England with his wife, and two children), and his big brother, John. Other Canadian soldiers may have come from palatial homes in busy cities, with a portochere to receive the arriving motor cars. The mothers of other Canadian fighting men may live in cities and ride in street cars, but that Canadian whose word is law over three hundred thousand fighting men and upon whose authority these other Canadian sons risk their lives — still addresses his letters "home" to a plain Canadian farmhouse, and one of those sturdy Canadian farm mothers that is more at home in an apron than a silk dress, and still bakes her own bread.

Call Him "Art" Now.

There are many people in Strathroy to-day calling General Currie "Art" who never knew him before as anything but "the big Currie boy, who went West." It is a token of the community's pride in him. They tell you at the hotel in Strathroy that it's four miles out to the Currie's, and the best thing to do is telephone big John Currie — the general's brother, that you're coming. They refer you also to the druggist's wife, who sent a Christmas basket to the general last winter and had a twelve-page letter back from him, in his own hand, recalling the days when he went to High school in Strathroy. Not a few of the older townsfolk spend their spare time recalling early episodes connected with "the big Currie boy, Arthur"; how he raised particular Ned on a certain Hallowe'en; how he pestered the old station agent; how he played football and hockey and drilled his fellow-schoolboys even in those peaceful days.

Greatness Begins.

But it is out on the Currie homestead that the real beginnings of a distinguished soldier's career are traced. If anyone doubts the power of the Canadian farmhouse to produce great men —if anyone questions the ability of merit, and merit alone, to succeed in the Dominion, he has only to visit General Currie's birthplace.

A maple tree shades the entrance to the Currie lane. Parallel with the lane and running from the road to the farmhouse is a strip of lawn. Beyond the lawn, the orchard and a few pigs ranging in it. The lane leads past the end of the house to the barnyard. There, walking slowly toward the kitchen door from the vegetable patch, is an old lady with her apron caught up to hold the rhubarb she has picked. Following her, at a respectful distance, are some young chickens cheeping loudly for another dole of bread and sour milk.

A Mother's Message.

"Have you a message," asked the correspondent, "that would interest other women in Canada as coming from General Currie's mother."

Age-bent the fine old lady in the rocking chair and plucked at the edge of her apron.

"No," she replied, after long thought, "I don't think there is."

"But what you say might help other mothers to let their boys go to the front," urged the newspaper man.

"No," she replied gently, as though speaking merely to herself. "It's a decision every mother must make for herself."

A heavy thunderstorm was coming up. The rain was beating red petals from a full blown peony growing at the edge of the lawn. The row of trees beside the lane was swaying violently in the wind. Sharp lightning and violent thunderclaps suggested at least to the mother, the flash and roar of artillery.

Wishes War Over.

"I suppose," she ventured, during a lull in the storm, "that this would seem nothing to him—to any of the soldier at the front."

Presently the reporter offered another question.

"What do you think about this war, Mrs. Currie?"

Pause.

"I wish it was over." Pause. "I hope and pray that it will soon be over — and that he'll come back." Pause. "Without a scratch."

"Did you know he intended going when the war broke out?"

"Yes. We knew he would do."

"And you approved his going?"

"Yes."

"But what would you say to the people who refuse to see their duty that way?"

A long pause.

"Well," she said. "I've said before, it is for them to decide—not me. . . . . I taught my boys to be honest with themselves. If men and women are that — they don't need much advise."

"To be honest with one's self?"

"That's it. That's all I asked my children. Be honest with yourself."

Did Everything Well.

Arthur Currie according to his brother John, had no special hobbies, and no special tastes. "He liked everything, and was interested in everybody." He was a good farmer, a good athlete, a good business man, and a good soldier.

VACATION TIME HERE

Great Lakes Trip Appeals to Many

Schools have closed for the summer, and now the small boy can pursue, without restraint, his quest for pleasure. But it is not he alone who has been eagerly awaiting the summer season, for we grown-ups are also planning on relaxing from our every day labours.

The summer vacation should also provide a change from the every day scenes, and already thousands of vacationists have wended their way to the Great Lakes, and particularly to Lake Erie, where are to be found the finest and largest steamers plying the inland waters of the world.

The largest and most magnificent of these steamers, the Great Ship "Seeandbee," is now running daily between Cleveland and Buffalo, and her immense popularity is attested by the large volume of passenger traffic carried.

This trip not only appeals to the vacationist, but also to the weary commercial traveller who, by boarding the steamer at Cleveland or Buffalo at 9.00 p.m., may break the monotony of his all rail journey, enjoy a refreshing night's sleep and reach destination at 7.30 the following morning, in plenty of time and with the inclination to start the day's struggles early.

THE VOLUNTARY SYSTEM HAS BEEN EXHAUSTED

Statement by Sir Robert Borden — Claims "Tremendous Success for Voluntary Recruiting — The Proposed Bill

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, June 30—Sir Robert Borden in an interview in the New York Post says: "Voluntary recruiting in Canada has indeed been a tremendous success. Every true Canadian reflects with pride on his country's marvellous achievements.

"Under the unparalleled demand of a war like this there comes a time in the history of every nation that commences with the voluntary system when the resources of such a system are exhausted. That time has arrived in Canada. The bill, as now submitted, provides for the application of the same principles in every province in the Dominion, if and when the bill becomes law, Canadians of every province and race will loyally observe its provisions."

THE TECHNICAL SCHOOL AND ITS VALUE TO AN INDUSTRIAL CITY

Mr. Sprague, of Hamilton, Pointed the Way for Peterboro in Fine Address Last Night — Saves Boys Who Now Drop Out at 14 Years

COST ABOUT $5000 A YEAR

A practical and illuminating address on the subject of the scope and operation of the Hamilton Technical School, by its Principal, Mr. G. L. Sprague, attracted a representative, if not a large, audience, to the Collegiate Institute Assembly Hall, last night. This meeting incidentally drew attention to the new and broader activities of the Board of Trade, under whose auspices it was held. Mr. J. J. Turner, who presided, expressed the hope that the citizens would, in future, take a keener interest in the Board, and by their co-operation, would help to promote the work that would be undertaken.

Technical schools afford the greatest boon to those children who would otherwise be set adrift in life with only the limited education of the primary schools. From eighty to ninety per cent. of the children leave school between the ages of fourteen and sixteen years. They have had little or no direction toward the vocational work in which they eventually become engaged, and more particularly in that work to which they would naturally be most responsive. Not only do they lack the training which would be immediately helpful to them, but in far too many instances their ambition is dormant and their energies unaroused. It has been stated that the ranks of mere job-hunting youth have been largely maintained by just this condition, to the seriousness of which the general public is now gradually awakening.

FOR NATIONAL EFFICIENCY

Mr. Sprague dwelt upon the wastefulness of the time and talent of the country's youth resulting from this great deficiency. "Get the child as early as thirteen years, help him to find out what he is adapted for, and bend his energies and his ambition to that end. The boy of fourteen who leaves school has no idea what he wants to do. Eliminate the terrible waste represented by the children who drop out of school from 14 to 16 years old, aimless and with only a smattering of rudimentary knowledge. The technical school, which I have designated to the boys as the education shop, will have a great influence on our national efficiency.

Mr. Sprague mentioned a number of examples of what had been accomplished with Hamilton boys, and the places that were open to the graduates of the Technical School. He discussed the importance of technical training to industry, but emphasized its advantages and beneficial influences upon the boys who are otherwise unprovided for in vocational work.

Those who have followed the affairs of the Board of Education are aware that this question has been fully investigated and discussed during the past few years from the position of Peterborough's particular needs. And it has been frequently pointed out that this city's dependence upon manufactures renders it imperative that technical education should be supplied as soon as possible. Trained and intelligent workmen, it has been stated, will not only improve and strengthen Peterborough's industrial position and attract new industries, but it will make for a higher type of citizen.

THE HAMILTON SCHOOL.

The departments in the Hamilton Technical School includes machine-shop, pattern-making, carpenter shop, electrical working, plumbing, tool making, drafting, automobile mechanics, and others. In its equipment and its work the school approximates as closely as possible the conditions of actual experience in commercial shops. In the wood-working shop the boy is first taught to handle tools and to make something. He design the article, estimates the cost lays it out, and proceeds to fashion it. Incidentally his arithmetic is directly co-related to the needs of his work. He realizes its importance, and its impressions are lasting. In the other shops the work is just as practical, basic and gradually enlarging.

APPRENTICES TRAINED.

The school also receives apprentices from the city shops. The apprenticed printers spend one-half a day a week in the printing shop, and plumbers, one or two days a week in their department during January, February and March. Other unions are similarly co-operating. The school builds up habits of steadiness and perseverance, arouses ambition, and the graduates are not running around from one job to another.

Mr. Sprague spoke of the night classes, the training of returned soldiers, but asserted that of most importance were the day classes. The boy of from 14 to 16 years needs to be kept busy and in the Hamilton school works from six to eight hours a day. Mr. Sprague added that he hoped to keep the school open during the entire twelve months of the year. There was now far too great a waste of school property as a public investment.

A technical school should become the centre for local chemical, electrical and other testing and experimental work. At the present time twenty firms are sending employees to the Hamilton school and paying them for the time spent there.

SUGGESTION FOR PETERBOROUGH.

For Peterborough's needs, Mr. Sprague suggested a central location and a modest beginning. A wood-working shop should have band and rip saws, lathes and turning machines; the machine shop, lathes, and shaper, and milling machines, with others to be added from time to time. The municipality must provide the building, fifty per cent. of the teachers' salary and the cost of operating. The Government bears the rest of the expense, including machinery. A technical school would cost Peterborough less than any other form of public education.

Following the address many questions were answered by Mr. Sprague, including one from Mr. J. J. Hartley as to the probable cost of maintaining a school in Peterborough. Five thousand dollars a year was the estimate given. Mr. Hartley remarked that during the past ten years there had been practically no apprentices in the building trades.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Sprague, on a motion by Mr. W. R. Breyfogle, seconded by Mr. Hartley.

THE QUAIL FAD IN JAPAN

(East and West News).

The latest fancy among the wealthy people of Japan is the collecting and breeding of rare species of quails. It threatens to rival the mania for tulip bulbs that once mised the Hollanders. Enormous prices are paid for rare birds. Mr. Yoshida, a millionaire, recently gave 17,000 yen ($8,500) for a white quail—king of the race in beauty and price. One of the large Tokio shops has caught on the idea as a fashion novelty and is selling kimonos embroidered with white and golden-hued quail designs. The modiste had Mr. Yoshida's king quail sketched and is reproducing the splendid bird in high-priced garments.

With the Fingers! Says Corns Lift Out Without Any Pain

Sore corns, hard corns soft corns or any kind of corn can shortly be lifted right out with the fingers if you will apply directly upon the corn a few drops of freezone, says a Cincinnati authority.

It is claimed that at small cost one can get a quarter of an ounce of freezone at any drug store, which is sufficient to rid one's feet of every corn or callus without pain or soreness or the danger of infection.

This new drug is an ether compound, and while sticky, dries the moment it is applied and does not inflame or even irritate the surrounding tissue.

This announcement will interest many women here, for it is said that the present high-heel footwear is putting corns on practically every woman's foot.

Farewell Concert to Mr. and Mrs. King

A very fine entertainment was the farewell concert given by Mr. and Mrs. George H. King on Friday evening last in the North Street Methodist Church, assisted by the choir and a number of the talented musicians of the town, many of whom have come under the tuition of Mr. or Mrs. King. The programme was a lengthy one, and several encores were given, but it would be perfectly correct to say that everyone present enjoyed every number and there was a good sized audience.

Just before the closing number, the pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. Hager, expressed in well chosen words the appreciation of the people of Goderich of the part Mr. and Mrs. King have played in the musical life of the town and their gratification at the programme rendered that evening. The promotion coming to them in their new positions in Peterborough, was well deserved, though we in Goderich were sorry to lose them.

The last number on the programme was a solo by Mrs. King, Tosti's "Good-Bye," which was beautifully rendered, and at the conclusion Mrs. King was presented with a lovely bouquet.—Goderich Star.

Mr. and Mrs. King have removed to Peterborough, Mr. King having assumed charge of the organ of Trinity Methodist church.

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, of North Planford, N.S. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her and on the recommendation of a friend I used Dr. Chase's Ointment which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

THE GOODWIN RECITAL

A varied and altogether delightful programme made the song recital by Wilmot Goodwin, baritone, assisted by Florence Austin, violinist, and Samuel Quincy, pianist, in the Conservatory Hall, last night, one of the most enjoyable events in a musical season that has been replete with good things. Mr. Goodwin, who is the possessor of a rich baritone voice of remarkable range and power, made a most favourable impression, and it is safe to say that last night's large audience will be surpassed to-night, when the second recital will be given in the same hall Mr. Goodwin was most generous, singing no fewer than twelve numbers. His offerings were well chosen and varied enough to demonstrate his capabilities as a singer of splendid ability. He sings with a refreshing ease and with a clearness of enunciation and a cleverness of shading that makes his every number a delight. His opening offering, Purcell's stirring "Arise Ye Subterranean Winds," was a fitting introduction to a series of charming numbers. Guonod's "Vulcan's Song" was rendered with a full appreciation of its possibilities and a new patirotic song, "My Boy," was splendidly presented. Searle's rollicking song, "In the Days of Long Ago," was another gem, and the old favourite, "The Auld Plaid Shawl," furnished another proof of Mr. Goodwin's versatality. The singer, however, scored his greatest triumph of the evening by his sympathetic singing of the ever popular "Love's Old Sweet Song," with violin obligato by Miss Austin. Other numbers were "The Toreador Song" Cadman's "The Brooklet," and Tschaikowsky's "Pilgrims' Song."

Miss Florence Austin proved herself a most brilliant violinist and won instantaneous favour with her first number, the 'Adagio and Finale from Vieuxtemps' Fourth Concerto," which was a masterpiece. Miss Austin's performance throughout demonstrated a sureness in technique, and a sweetness in tone that were most delightful, and the enjoyment of the audience was indicated in no uncertain manner. One of her daintiest numbers was Boccherini's "Minuet," played with muted strings, in sparkling fashion by Miss Austin. Even more effective was her brilliant playing of Sarasate's "Gipsy Airs," and Musin's Mazurka No. 1.

Mr. Quincy had a large share in the honours of the evening as soloist and accompanist. His piano numbers included Liszt's "Rhapsodie No. 8"; Chopin's "Impromptu in A Flat," Schuman's "Night Piece," and Paderewski's "Caprice," a programme that made exhaustive demands upon his talent, but Mr. Quincy came through with flying colours, his performance being at all times brilliant. In addition to his solo numbers he played all the accompaniments with a rare skill.

The Peter Robinson Chapter I. O. D. E. are to be thanked for providing the opportunity of hearing such a talented trio. An entirely new programme will be offered to-night.

STRENUOUS WORK SOON TELLS ON YOU

Business Men and Breadwinners the Victims of Nervous Exhaustion

When worry is added to overwork men soon become the victims of nervous exhaustion—neurasthenia—the doctor calls it. Some have no reserve strength in their systems to bear the strain; others overtax what strength they have. If you find that you are nervous and not sure of yourself, that you sleep badly, and wake up tired and aching, your nerves are out of order. Other signs are inability to take proper interest in your work; your appetite is fickle; your back feels weak, and you are greatly depressed in spirits. One or more of these signs mean that you should take prompt steps to stop mischief by nourishing the nerves with the food they thrive on, namely the rich, red blood made by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills have cured thousands of cases of nervous disorders, including nervous prostration, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance and partial paralysis. Here is an example. Mr. P. H. Callan, a well known business man in Coleman, P.E.I., says: "I owe my present health, if not life itself, to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had always been an active man, and when I began to run down in health paid little attention to it as I thought it only a temporary weakness. As time passed however, I found myself growing worse, and consulted a doctor, who said that I was only badly run down, but that my nervous system was badly shattered. I lost flesh, my appetite was poor, I slept badly and notwithstanding the doctor's treatment grew so weak that I had to leave my business and was confined to the house Time went on and I was steadily growing weaker, and my friends were all greatly alarmed for my condition In this condition I was strongly recommended to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills, and as the doctor's medicine was not helping me I decided to do so. By the time I had used three boxes I could tell that they were helping me. When I had taken eight boxes of the pills I felt able to attend to my business again, and people were surprised to see me out. I continued the use of the pills until I had taken twelve boxes, by which time I was feeling as well as ever I did, and was being congratulated by all my friends on my full restoration to health. I feel now that if I had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills at the outset I would not only have saved much money spent in doctor's bills, but would have had renewed health sooner. I cannot speak too highly of this medicine, and would recommend it to every man who feels weak, nervous or run down."

You can get these pills through any medicine dealer, or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

NUMBER OF GRANTS MADE

Meeting of the Finance Committee

At a meeting of the Finance Committee yesterday afternoon, the reports of the indigent patients at the two hospitals were read and passed.

A communication from Mr. A. Stevenson advising the committee that the City Trust was unable to pay the deficiencies in certain by-laws, was read and a committee consisting of the mayor and chairman of the board was appointed to meet Mr. Stevenson and make arrangements for the payment.

A bylaw will be prepared for the appropriation of $850 to the Horticultural Society and $600 to the Exhibition, to be paid on the same terms as last year.

Grants were made to the Central Charity Board, the Protestant Home and the House of Providence.

A grant of $10 was made to the Textile Press.

Provision was made that the city printing will be given to the Garden Printing Company for the balance of the year.

An account of $36 to G. W. Hatton for his services in liquor cases in the police court, was ordered to be paid.

An account for $25 was ordered to be paid H. J. McCannon for his services in endeavouring to secure an option on some land for the city.

WIRELESS HERO IS COMING TO TORONTO

"Jack" Binns of the Doomed Liner Republic Will Learn to Fly in Canada.

NEW YORK, June 27.—John Robinson, "Jack" Binns, wireless hero of the White Star liner Republic disaster on Jan. 23, 1909, when he saved hundreds of lives through his calls for aid, to-day joined the British Royal Flying Corps at the recruiting station here, and left here at once for a training station in Canada.

Gustave F. Touchard, former indoor tennis champion, also left New York to-night for Canada, where he will enter the aviation corps. Touchard first tried to join the United States aviation corps, but was rejected by the examining officers as physically unfit He then tried the Canadian corps, and because of his known endurance on the tennis court, was accepted.

Will Attend Edison Dealers' Convention in New York

At a time when the country is expected to be at the height of its war preparation, one thousand Edison dealers will meet at the Waldorf-Astoria and raise the cry that music in the home is more necessary to-day than never. Coming as it does about the middle of next month, the National Convention of Edison Dealers will serve to emphasize the sustaining, stimulating and sturdy part played by the New Edison in arousing the youth of America to answer the call to the colours. Many speakers will point out the strong influence re-creations of folk songs and patriotic airs have had in appealing to the manhood of American boys. The convention will be held on July 12th and 13th, in the grand ball room of New York's most famous hotel, the Waldorf-Astoria.

Personal testimony by owners of New Edisons will be one of the features of the convention to be held at the Waldorf. In a series of talks the owners of instruments will tell what they know and think of Mr. Edison's invention.

From the time W. D. Wilmot, of Fall River, Mass., a veteran Edisonian, opens the convention, it will be absolutely under the control and direction of the dealers. Every section of the country will be represented. Forty papers have been prepared by prominent merchants and the reading of these papers will be followed by general discussion. The carrying problems of the phonograph business will be treated from every point of view.

Artists from the Metropolitan Opera Company will be guests of Mr. Edison himself, who is expected to attend both the convention and the banquet.

Many of the dealers, at the end of the convention Friday afternoon, will complete arrangements for their visit to the Edison Laboratories in Orange.

Among the papers to be given by Edison Dealers, will be one, "How I Use "Along Broadway," a monthly journal published by the Edison Co., and mailed to New Edison owners and others. This paper will be given by Mr. J. M. Greene, of the J. M. Greene Music Co., Charlotte street, Peterborough, and who are the only licensed representatives for all the immediate counties, with branches at Lindsay, Belleville, Kingston and Madoc.

DOMINION DAY AT ALL SAINTS

Both services at All Saints' Church on Dominion Day will be of a patriotic nature. The boys and girls of the Sunday School will attend the morning service in a body and join in the special patriotic music, while the Rector's address will be particularly for the young people. The parents of the children are urged to be present at this service, which will be followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion.

At the evening service the Rector will read the names of those from All Saints' who are defending the liberty of Canada in the Great War, and will preach a sermon appropriate to Dominion Day. Let every member of the congregation set apart the day for congregational thanksgiving and intercession, in accord with this solemn hour in our national history.

Proper Thing Now Is To Peel Off Soiled Skin

Those who abhor sticky, greasy, shiny, streaked complexions should resolutely avoid creams, powders and rouges during the heated days. There's no need for them, anyway, since the virtues of mercolized wax have become known. No amount of perspiration will produce any evidence that you've been using the wax. As it is applied at bedtime and washed off in the morning, the complexion never looks like a make-up. Mercolized wax gradually takes off a hazy complexion, instead of adding anything to make it worse. It has none of the disadvantages of cosmetics and accomplishes much more in keeping the complexion beautifully white, satiny and youthful. Just get an ounce of it at your druggist's and see what a few days' treatment will do. Use like cold cream.

Another effective warm weather treatment best tending to cause wrinkles and freckles—is a skin-tightener made by dissolving one ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. Its use (as a face bath) leaves no trace. Remarkable improvement is noticed immediately, and there is no harmful effect whatever.

Two Cockneys Dug Dead German's Grave

It was an infantry working party driving a road across what had once been a battlefield. The French had fought there but now the English had taken over the line and were opening up a half destroyed road.

A soldier working in front leaned on his pick and called across to his mate.

"Say, Tom give us an 'and with this 'ole 'un, and shift 'im off the road."

"What 'ole 'un,"

"This 'ere. See 'is boots a-stickin' out of the ground."

"Oh, shove some stones on 'im."

"Dunno, 'e might 'ave bin a decent cove for all you know. Don't be so 'Unnish. 'E seems to have put up a decent scrap, anyway."

"'Ow can yer tell that, Mr. Knowing."

"Well, look at the 'ole 'e's in. Them there, Mauser, cartridges—dozens of 'em 'e must 'ave fired—lying about. There's 'is steel 'elmet, too, with an 'ole in the front—bullet at close range looks like. An' there's 'is bayn't broken. An' look at them Frenchies' graves just 'ere. Reckon 'e strafed some of 'em before they did 'im in. "E must 've been left behind when the others retired like. Not much bloomin' 'Kamerad' about 'im. I reckon."

"Oh, orl right. Gimme a spade. We'll shove 'im in by those Frenchies. P'r'aps 'is pals'll do the like to us some day. I don't think."

They worked for a while and placed the remains under the shadow of the nearest wooden cross. Then said the first man. "Wot do these 'ere 'Uns 'ave on their graves—wording like?"

"'Ere's one. "An Allemand,' it says." "That's French, I believe."

"You'd best put 'Ere lies an 'Un. Rest in peace.' Then you'll know what yer talkin' about. 'Ere's an inky pencil."

So there is a wooden cross in France which bears the name of a French soldier on one side and the rough English tribute to a brave foe on the other.—Manchester Guardian.

Covered Canaries Deceived in Dark They Sing After Union Hours

NEW YORK, June 29—It long has been an axiom in New York that chickens, speaking in the vernacular, change their hours when they come to the city. But that the contagion of night life also would affect canaries, sweetest and gentlest of trillers, was not known until the Cascades, atop the Biltmore Hotel, were opened for the season recently.

When the manager of the Cascades told Mr. John McE. Bowman that he thought fifty Orkney canaries would make pleasing music, interludes for the orchestra of the Cascades, Mr. Bowman told him to go ahead and tell old man Orkney to send up fifty. But the problem arose after delivery. It consisted in the willingness of the canaries to run the gamut all day, but as soon as night and the crowds arrived at the Cascades they tucked their heads under their wings, poor things, and went off to the canary land of Nod.

Yesterday, however, the manager thought up something. Early in the morning he covered the canaries' cages with black cloth, so that, being without the ankle watches the chickens wear, they slep through the entire day. At seven o'clock, when the diners arrived, the cloths were removed and the canaries, lifting their heads in thanksgiving at having lived through one of the longest nights they had ever experienced, greeted the effulgent gleams of the roof garden with thrills and runs that had formerly been reserved for the morning sun.

HOME-MADE MARGARINE

A Well Tested Recipe for the Use of Examiner Readers

The Examiner is indebted to Mrs. F. W. H. Young for the following recipe for the manufacture of home-made margarine. The recipe has been thoroughly tested.

Take 1-2 lb. of butter and cream it with a fork. Then add slowly 1 small cup of lukewarm milk. Beat well and add salt, put on ice or in cold place to harden. Care must be taken not to have the milk too warm. Butter and clarified dripping mixed in equal quantities and creamed thoroughly, makes nice cake. To clarify dripping melt fat in oven. For every 3 lb. of fat add 1-4 teaspoonful baking soda and one pint boiling water. Boil slowly on top of stove in saucepan, skimming the surface till the fat is clear and the water boiled away. Keep in a cold place and it will keep sweet for a long time.

A MESSAGE TO THE CHURCHES.

The Work of God or the Work of Man.

I wish to say at the commencement of this article, what I would not willfully wound by anything I write here any minister of the Gospel in this city. I believe we have some of the best of men in our pulpits here, and if I say some thing here which do not reflect to the credit of the churches I know the matter is too deeply rooted and too widespread for them to root up. I want to show them in this article if I can some things which in these days are regarded by many church members as Christian works, while the real work of God which as silently perhaps as the dew is at work in their midst, they neither have eyes to see no hearts to appreciate. The Jews came to Jesus and said unto Him, "What shall we do that we might work the work of God," and His answer was, This is the work of God that ye believe in Him whom He hath sent. Now, as Dr. Alexander MacLaren points out in one of his sermons, they were thinking of many separate acts, but Jesus gathered them all up into one supreme act, the act of faith, which is indeed an inward work calling us away from self and all confidence in ourselves to utterly trust and obey Him who declared Himself to be the way, the truth, the life. We have many in the churches today fussily doing all manner of things and yet it is all too patent they have never yielded up their own lives in consecration to God, and apart from this I would say in all earnestness that as far as spiritual things are concerned, their works are not accentable to God nor man. A man can tell the difference instantly between a cold mechanical action and a warm impulse, it is impossible to get warmth from a make-believe fire and the Heavenly Father says, son, daughter, give me thine heart, and if that is done works of the right kind will follow, works that spring from love and not from duty. Someone has truly written that the chief end of life is to do the will of God, whatever that will may be, it may be to fill a prominent place or it may be to shine in some obscure corner. God places His lights where He wants them and it is the duty of the light to shine where it is placed; in fact it can do no other; it cannot move itself where it likes; it must be moved by a living power. There is all too much of this running about doing the more conspicuous thing and neglecting to be and to do things at our very door. Let us remember that Jesus said, he that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much and will have committed to their trust the true riches, and if I may intrude by putting in a personal note here I would say I have never been what one would call very robust and I have found that to be a good wife and mother and a sympathetic neighbour has demanded from me every ounce of my strength and more. Sometimes I am tempted to rebel against my limitations, but yet through those very limitations I have learned patience. They have kept me pretty humble. They have made me sympathetic, and can I not truly say with the Apostle Paul, most gladly then will I glory in my infirmity that the power of God may rest upon me. In concussion I would say then there is not need to preach works, for by doing so hypocrites are emboldened and saints are disgusted, or if not disgusted they are discouraged by being flung back upon themselves, and are tempted like wounded snails to crawl into their shell and never venture out again.

HOPEFUL.

While The World Sleeps

By CANADIAN OVERSEAS

The light was dying; in the silent blue the young moon shone and the dark pine trees stirred across it, while beyond, the sand and the sea gleamed, and clouds crept into the sky.

At the siding I was waiting for the train. There was a strange silence; sadly the night mocked the day's long travail with its tears and groans and wasted agonies. From the shadows came the murmur of voices and the humming of the motors could be heard as they drew into place. They were like two long lines of monsters, blinking their followers to sleep.

I sat for some time looking at the moon, the sky, the pine trees, and the sky. What were my thoughts? How can I express them? One cannot think, not even wonder, but merely watch the thoughts go by.

In the distance a faint red light appeared, so faint at first and so uncertain as it passed the dark trunks of the pine trees, that one was not sure they had seen it. Slowly it grew until it became clear and defined, and the dark outlines of the train could be seen. Slowly and noiselessly it crept along; the light which streamed from its windows played with the shadows as it passed, until finally it reached the siding and was no longer a shadow creeping along in the night, but a train full of tragedies—a train full of men shattered and suffering.

I moved to the open doors of the coach. Inside I saw the men, some some smoking, some sleeping, some suffering. There were several bad cases, and I wondered if I should have them. Perhaps I knew some of these men. They began to unload, and as they put the stretchers in, the dim light of the ambulance revealed their features; they were worn and weary, and marked with pain, yet they smiled. It is always so when the day has gone. Well for them—that is all they care about.

The moon was sinking, the world was becoming gray and old, and the hill pines were sighing. I returned for my next load, wondering how they could endure such pain so cheerfully.

For a time I watched the sitting cases leave the train—dazed, blood-soaked men; once strong fighters; now worn and weary, stunned, bewildered, sad and glad.

Old men and young men, once laughter loving and full of joyous life, helping one another as best they could; their bandages dragging in the dirt, clothes ragged and soiled in blood.

They were life's helpless children these strong men who had been through Hell for the sake of Freedom. They seemed an endless stream of broken down humanity; the persistent monotony of it was maddening!

Once again I neither thought nor wondered. Strange all this! I felt suddenly that it had always been thus, that I had always been to unload trains full of men who had been battered and lashed by the furies of a Hell beyond all the imaginative powers of a Dante.

The moon had vanished behind the clouds, the wind was wailing in the pine trees and the spirits of the night lashed the rain into torrents, and then vanished in long trailing moans. This time I had one case. He uttered no sound, nor did he appear to suffer—he was almost beyond that.

A nurse sat beside him and watched him anxiously; talked to him quietly though he did not hear.

I groped slowly into the darkness eagerly listening for the merest sound through the wailing of the rain and the flapping of the curtains. At the hospital I looked at the nurse and knew. We were too late.

A life is a strange thing; it takes so much to kill it, and yet the line between is infinitesimal.

As I drove back through the blackness my lights picked out a straw. Tommy and a poilu tramping along the highway—both part of the vast octupus.

It was just a vision and they were left in the darkness; now and again it was a frightened hare or a fat rat that the lights dazed; there was no sound but the wind, the rain, and the humming of the cars as one passed them in the night.

Among the sand dunes "star shells" shot up and momentarily dazzled the darkness; visions appeared and vanished before the eye could focus itself; the soul cried out against the tragic cruelty of it all, and against this grovelling in the mud of abject materialism, but that too was only for the moment, for this conflict must be finished.

The clouds were breaking and the storm was dying in the west. The train was empty and ready for its next load, and so it goes on—this shedding of blood, this mutilating and giving of life for Freedom and Humanity.

A Minister's Evidence

That Piles, or Hemorrhoids Can be Quickly Cured---A Justice of the Peace Cured Many Years Ago.

Toronto, Ont., June 4.—There has come to us recently these two letters from prominent men who bear unquestionable testimony in regard to Dr. Chase's Ointment as a prompt and lasting cure for piles.

These men give their evidence freely because they know what it means to suffer from the tortures of piles and then be cured. They feel it a duty and a pleasure to let others know how they too may be cured.

Rev. Frank N. Bowes, Methodist Minister, Priceville, Ont., writes: "In the winter of 1912, I was stationed in Cobalt. I went for a snowshoe tramp one day, and sat for only a few minutes on a cold stump waiting for some comrades to catch up to me. From sitting on the damp stump I contracted piles, and suffered so severely that it caused me great pain to walk. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Ointment, and I immediately purchased a small box which very rapidly effected a cure. I always keep a box on hand, and find it excellent for any kind of wound or sore."

Mr. W. B. Thorne, J.P., Alderside, Alta., writes: "It was twenty-eight years ago that I became acquainted with the merits of Dr. Chase's Ointment and would not be without it on any account as it never fails to do its work. I was first induced to try it for piles. Less than one box cured me, and I have never been troubled since. That was twenty-eight years ago, so I think the cure is permanent. It is good for sore lips and hands, chafing and, in fact, all sorts of sores. You are at liberty to use this statement for the benefit of others."

You can put Dr. Chase's Ointment to the test in any case of piles with the utmost assurance that you will obtain relief from suffering and ultimately lasting cure. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Sunday Sermon For Those Who Do Not Go To Church

(By JAMES SUTHERLAND)

Our Saviour's miracles were intended for the lost sheep of the house of Israel. Yet one, like a crumb, fell from the table to a woman of Canaan; so this one miracle, Elisha wrought for Naaman a Syrian. Naaman was a great man, he had been very serviceable to his country, God made his so. Though the Syrians were idolaters and oppressors of God's people, yet the deliverance of which Naaman had been the instrument, is here ascribed to the Lord. Such is the correct language of Scripture, while those who write common history too evidently show that God is not in all their thoughts. So great was he, so high, so honourable a mighty man of valour, a worshipper of idols, but he was a leper, he was afflicted with an incurable disease. No man's greatness ,or honour, or interest of valour, or victory can set him out of the reach of sickness, calamity or death, for in the midst of life we are in death—there is many a sickly body under rich and gay clothing. Every one has some, but, or other in his character—something that blemishes or diminishes him. some alloy to his grandeur, some damp to his joy, he may be very happy, very good, or like Haman, the favourite of the King, there may be a Mordecai sitting in the gate. Naaman was as great as the world could make him, and yet as Bishop Hall remarks, the basest slave in Syria would not change skins with him. The Bible narrative says that the Syrians had gone out by companies and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel, a little maid, and she waited on Naaman's wife. This little maid publishes Elisha's fame, to the honour of Israel, and Israel's God. The unhappy dispersing of the people of God, has sometimes proved the happy occasion of the diffusion of the knowledge of God. Acts 8-4 The little maid could give an account, though but a girl, of the famous prophet they had among them, children should be taught early, and should be made acquaint with the wonderous works of God, that wherever they go they may be able to talk about them. As became a good servant she desired the health and welfare of her Master, though she was a captive, a servant by force, much more should servants by choice, seek their Master's good. The Jews in Babylon were to seek the peace of the land of their captivity. Jer. 28-7. Elisha had not cleansed any lepers in Israel. Luke 4-27. Yet this little maid from his other miracles infers that he could cure her master, and that he would do it, though he was a Syrian. Servants may be blessings to the families, where they are by telling what they know of the glory of God and the honour of his people. Naaman did not despise the kindness of the little maid, though he neither loved nor honoured the Jewish nation; yet if one of that people can cure him of his leprosy he will thankfully acknowledge the obligation. So he prepared to set out to see the prophet being furnished with a letter from the King of Syria, his master to King Jehoram, the King of Israel. He set out with a great retinue. He took with him gold, silver and raiment to present to his physician. What will men not give for health and strength and soundness of body? They will spend fortunes and travel over continents to secure the blessings of good health—so he went supported with the interest of two Kings. It would be well if men were as sensible of the burden of sin, as they are of bodily troubes. But when they seek the blessings which the Lord communicates in answer to prayer. They will find it is only humble suppliants, whose prayers are answered. King Jehoram read the letter sent by the King of Syria and I considered the language as idle, being against God, as well as an insult to himself and therefore rent his clothes Elisha hearing of what was done told the messenger to send Naaman to him. It was not for his own honour, but for the honour of God, that he coveted to make them all know that there was a prophet in Israel, Naaman attended at Elisha's door, he expected to have his compliment returned, but Elisha would not go to the door to him, but sent the message with his servant saying, Go wash in Jordan seven times and thy flesh shall come again to thee and thou shalt be clean. It was not intended as the means of the cure it was merely as a sign of the cure and Naaman to be a proud man, and he would let him know, that before the great God all men stand upon the same level. The minister of God should aim to convince men of his desire to do them good. All God's commands make trial of men's spirits, especially those which direct a sinner how to apply for the blessings of Salvation. They accord not with the pride and prejudices of an unhumbled heart, nor will be attended to without that implicit faith, which produces perfect obedience. Two things displeased Naaman. That Elisha as he thought put a slight upon him, in sending orders by a servant, and not coming himself. He had been fancying how the cure would be wrought, he counted on a great deal of pomp and parade, he scorns to be healed unless he be honoured in the healing. He took it hard that he must be sent to wash in the Jordan, a river of Israel, when he thought Abana and Parphar rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel. How slightly does he speak of the prophets directions. He was angry that the prophet bade him wash and be clean, he thinks that too plain, too common a thing for so great a man, to be cured by. He did not believe at all that it would affect the cure, what medicinal virtue was there in Jordan, more than in the rivers of Damascus He did not consider that Jordan was the river appointed, and if he expected a cure, that he must aquiesce in the Divine will. So he got in a great rage, the way of a sinner's acceptance of pardon and forgiveness, through the blood of Christ, through faith alone in His name does not sufficiently please the carnal and sinful heart. Human wisdom thinks it can supply more suitable methods—the natural plans and devices of many seem more preferable to the fountain opened for sin. On the other hand some would hope to be saved though they refuse self denial, or attending to the appointed means of grace; but the sinner burdened with a sense of guilt, and desirous to flee from the wrath to come ready to do great things if required to obtain forgiveness of sins and eternal life, finding that none of these, in that use of them, can avail rejoices in the fountain opened and will wash and be clean as the Lord appointed. Naaman turned away from the prophet's door in a rage. They that observe lying vanities, forsake their own mercies. Jonah 2-8. Proud men are the worst enemies to themselves. His servants drew near and made bold to reason with him, masters must be willing to hear reason from their servants. Job 31-13-14. As we should be deaf to the counsel of the ungodly though given by those whom the world honours, so we should be willing to listen to those in the humble walks of life. Their reproof was very modest and respectful, they call Him Father, for servants must honour and obey their masters with a kind of filial affection. In giving reproof and counsel. We must make it appear that it comes from love and true honour and that we intend not reproach, but reformation. They reason first. From his earnest desire of a cure—wouldest thou not do anything. Second. From the easiness of the method prescribed it is but, wash and be clean. So it is with the sinner, believe and be saved, repent and be pardoned, wash and be clean. The cure is effected in the use of the means prescribed. This men get by yielding to the will of God, by attending to His work and the guiding of the Holy Spirit. God will magnify His word, when we apply for Salvation and follow the directions of Christ. He was healed from guilt and is admitted into the family of God. So Naaman and his company drove to the river Jordan and did as the prophet desired him, he went down and dipped himself seven times in Jordan according to the saying of the man of God, and his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, and he was clean. Jesus is still the great Physician and says to everyone according to your faith so be it unto you, we must leave the latter part of the story at this time, as our space is filled.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES SUTHERLAND,
852 1-2 Water Street.

Yes, Builds You Up in 5 to 10 Days

Iron For the Blood and Phosphorus For the Nerves

Weak, anaemic, run-down, nervous persons will be glad to know that they can be restored back to their youth vigor by the discovery of this new drug called Bonised Phosphorus with Iron.

It is spring time now and every person needs something to build them up. Now you know as well as any doctor will tell you, the curse of spring time is impure blood. It takes many people to their grave, ruins health, makes you weak, runs you down and finally you are a physical wreck.

This new drug is a combination of iron and phosphorus. The iron acts directly on the blood while the phosphorus soothes and strengthens the nerves. You start today and take two or three tablets of Bonised Phosphorus with Iron after meals and in 5 to 10 days you will be 100 per cent stronger.

This drug does not act like other iron tonics you have taken, but instead, it does not blacken the teeth, upset the stomach or make you constipated. This new drug is dispensed by one druggist in each city. F. O. Weber dispenses it for Peterborough.

Entries for Monday's Races Close To-night

Special 2-Mile Race for Boys Under 18 Added to Programme

Entries for Monday's bicycle races close to-night. With the big field of out-of-town riders and the local boys already entered, some fine sport is anticipated.

A special race of two miles for boys under 18 years of age has been added to the programme. This will give Peterborough boys a chance to show their friends how fast they can pedal.

The Exhibition track has been put in shape for the occasion. Roland Denne, Charlie Banks and Fred St. Onge say the track is in fine shape for speed. These three enthusiasts have inspected the track and are satisfied that Peterborough will uphold its name for having the fastest half mile track in Canada.

With Doc. Morton Fred McCarthy, Jimmie Martin and Norman Webster and the rest of the Toronto cracks time will certainly be annihilated. The bicycle has come back.

The manufacturers are contributing generously in the way of prizes for these events. Now it is up to the public to show their approval. It is to be hoped Monday will find a big crowd at these races. The prizes include a gold watch, a $50.00 bicycle and other useful articles.

Fred St. Onge, now a traveller for A. E. Bregent of Montreal, the biggest jobber of bicycles in Canada, has kindly volunteered his services and will do his tramp bicycle act on the track in front of the grand stand. This will be his first performance on a race track since July 1st, 1898, when he appeared at the opening of Queen's Park in Montreal. St. Onge will surely hand the boys a laugh. Now then, this is the last call. Don't miss the bicycle races, St. Onge and the Athletic events, Monday, at Exhibition Park.

Entries for the race close to-night at Banks' Garage.

LARRY LAJOIE IS SUSPENDED

Barrow Benches His Indefinitely on Charges of Baiting Umpires.

RICHMOND Va., June 29.—Manager Lajoie was informed this morning that he has been suspended indefinitely by President Barrow for umpire baiting. He occupied a seat in the grandstand here to-day before time for the game to start. Rain interfered and prevented the contest, giving the Leafs a day in which to reorganize.

Lajoie apparently has given no trouble here, but it is said he has a habit of surreptitiously baiting the 'umps' so that the fans cannot see or hear him. His suspension came as a surprise to local fans, with whom he is popular.

A double-header will be played Saturday. Blackburne, who has been out of the game, because of an injury, has taken charge of the team on the field, and will return to shortstop to-morrow, Warhop going to second in place of Lajoie.

The Leafs will start home Saturday night, and will arrive in time for the morning game Monday. They will go by train to Rochester, and take the boat from there to Toronto. Cancellation of trains because of war conditions necessitated this route.

SHOCKER FINED FOR BREACH OF RULES

He and Ray Caldwell, Highlanders' "Bad Boy," Break Loose in Boston.

BOSTON, June 29.—Pitcher Ray Caldwell, Bill Donovan's best box man in this campaign, is in trouble again. Failure to observe the rules of training has brought about a fine of $100 and a suspension with loss of salary for the next ten days. Urban Shocker, another member of the Highlanders' pitching staff, has been notified of a fine of $50. Both men were guilty of breaking the training rules. In announcing the suspension to-night Donovan said that Caldwell had not appeared at the Lennox Hotel, where the team is stopping here, last night. This afternoon he failed to put in an appearance at Fenway Park, where he pitched and lost the second game of yesterday's double-header. He telephoned one of the players to notify Donovan that he would not be there. The fine and suspension were the result.

Shocker's offence was failure to observe the rule which require that all players be at their hotel by midnight. As it was his first offence Donovan did not add any suspension.

Caldwell, while not ranking high in the pitching records, has done the best work of all the Kilty boxmen this season. Most of his defeats were due to poor hitting by the team rather than to his own work. He has been in trouble with the club before, having ben fined and suspended by Frank Chance, in 1914, and by Donovan last season.

Public School Cadets To Parade

The Public School Cadets will have a place in the parade on Monday. They will be "brigaded" with the Collegiate Institute Cadets. The parade will form at Central Park, at 9.15 o'clock, and it is urged that all public school cadets will be on hand, sharp, at that hour, and a little before, to be on the safe side.

FARMERS IN WEST ALARMED

Want Fixed Rate of At Least $2.25 On Wheat.

WINNIPEG, June 29. — There is great alarm all over Western Canada at the prospect of $1.70 as the fixed price for wheat in the United States, following President Griffith's Chicago announcement, it costs $23 an acre now to raise wheat in Western Canada and nothing less than $2.25 at Fort William will satisfy the farmers here and stimulate production. It would appear as if this country can be flooded with cheaper products from the United States.

STREET RAILWAY MEN FOR WAGE INCREASE

Request Will Be Laid Before Hydro Commission.

It is understood that the Street Railway employees' petition for an increase of wages will be laid before the Hydro-Electric commission next Thursday by their representative, Mr. Sinclair, who at the same time will voice the claims of London men. The car men, it was stated, are asking for 30 cents an hour. They are now receiving 25 cents.

THREE MONTREAL MEN ARRESTED IN TRANSIT TO TORONTO

Rosario Desjardins, Alfred Leduc and Arthur Godfraw, three Montreal men, were arrested at Havelock last night by Constable George Greenham and appeared before Acting Magistrate Rush this morning charged with trespassing on the C.P.R. They were stealing a ride in a box car, it was stated, and apparently were migrating from Montreal to Toronto.

COMING TO PETERBOROUGH.

Prof. Dorenwend of Toronto, the originator of the celebrated patent hair-structures, for men and women, will be at the Hotel Empress, Peterborough, on Saturday, July 7th, with a special new display of transformations, pompadours, self-dressing waves, switches for ladies and toupees and wigs for men, who are bald. Anyone requiring anything in this line is invited to call at the hotel on day of visit, when a demonstration will be given free of charge.

WHO WILL SACRIFICE THEIR HOLIDAYS FOR FARM WORK?

By what means can the citizens be brought to realize that their assistance is needed during July and August to harvest the crops in this district?

This is a most urgent problem. To a large extent it places a serious obligation upon the city. Responsible citizens of the Organization of Resources committee gave the assurance that, as the farmers sowed, this city would help them reap. Manufacturers, business, professional and labour men gave their assent to this definite promise.

From all reports the area under tillage has exceeded the average of recent years. The seed has been blessed by a season that has been almost ideal. A bonteous harvest is fast ripening for the reapers.

Thus, the greater production that was so fervently desired in the early days of the present year is now within the country's grasp. To the agencies that have transformed the bare, brown fields of Spring to their present richness, every acknowledgment should be offered. There is no doubt that the people's prayers have been answered even as they had hoped. Farmers testify that the season has been so fructiferous that single-handed and unaided they will be unable to gather all the crops that are smiling and bursting in their fulness. Last year, hay, for instance, was abandoned in the fields for the sole reason that many farmers had neither the time nor the help to bring it in. This year, the grain crops are going to be exceptionally heavy in their yield. Temporary labour for the critical days of the harvest is absolutely necessary, and the farmers are already appealing to the city to fill the places of the farm hands that are now in France.

If the idea should be created that this is a hysterical call for help it should be quickly dispelled. The farmers can, by their own efforts, harvest a large part of their crops, but what of the extra acreage? These may be regarded as the fields the city made itself responsible for. The farmer can get along without this grain, if such a choice should arise, but can the city afford to evade the duty of rendering the farmers whatever assistance that can be provided.

It has been suggested and farmers welcome the idea that citizens spend their holidays in the hay and grain fields instead of at some water resort, Toronto, or other places where they spend their time and money without even the measure of renewed health that farm work will give. Who will be the first to register with Mr. G. A. Gillespie their readiness to sacrifice their holidays for the praiseworthy and pressing object of assisting the farmers in their extremity.

MILITARY NEWS

The Peterborough Branch of the Overseas Tobacco Fund has received the following card:

Gentlemen,—I take this opportunity of personally thanking you for your gift of tobacco and cigarettes, which reached us safely and were very greatly appreciated by the members of my platoon. I remain,

Yours faithfully,

LCE.-CPL. A. E. BAGGS,
No. 7933, 15 Platoon, No. 4 Co'y., 2nd Batt., Can. Infantry, B. E. F., France.

Kingston, Ont., June 29.—There is one very proud young woman in Kingston, and she is Miss Flora A. Davis, of the Young Women's Christian Association. She had ten brothers in uniform, serving King and country. The boys are sons of Mrs. John Davis, Gladstone Avenue, Ottawa. One boy, Private Earl Davis, served with the Princess Patricias, and it is believed that he is the only one of the original Pats who is now on active service in France. One son was killed at Vimy Ridge, and another on the Somme.

Halifax, N. S., June 29.—There arrived at Halifax to-day by steamer from England a party of 545 officers and men of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, some of them maimed for life and the rest returned for further medical treatment.

Among the returned was Lieut. Owen B. Jones, D.C.M., popularly known in the Canadian army overseas as "The man who came back," as well as Major K. M. McCrimmon, 18th Battalion, D.S.O.; Lieut. C. Pouliot, 22nd Battalion, D. C. M., and Lieut. W. O. Hamilton, M.C., 13th Battalion.

In the case of this party, all the men, no matter to what part of the Dominion they belong, will go through the discharge depot at Halifax. This is an innovation and means that instead of all but the Maritime Province men, immediately entraining and setting out for the Quebec discharge depot, they will be here for a considerable time until all cases have been decided upon.

London, June 29.—The Canadian Associated Press has received the following statement from an authoritative source. Since Major-General Turner has been in England he has carried on with marked ability the organization and training of the Canadian forces and has been constituted by the Overseas Minister his chief military adviser in all matters relating to the organization and administration of the overseas forces. Questions of policy and administration, including appointments, promotions and granting of commissions, will continue to be submitted to the Overseas Minister through the general officer commanding the Canadian forces in the British Isles who in so doing will record in each instance has recommendation. In his capacity as chief military adviser to the Overseas Minister it is essential that the general officer commanding the Canadians in the British Isles shall be constantly and closely in touch with conditions in the field. Arrangements will therefore be made for him to visit the war zone at frequent intervals. As the delegate of the Overseas Minister he will be authorized to discuss with the British General Headquarters all matters.

EXTENSION OF STREET RAILWAY HELD UP

By Scarcity of Labour and Other City Work.

The extension of the Street Railway on Monaghan Road is being held up by the scarcity of labour experienced by the city. Before the company begins building a road bed the city must gravel and straighten out the road, but City Engineer Parsons states that it is next to impossible to secure men without taking them from other city work.

ONTARIO TO BENEFIT IF COAL PRICES DOWN

Canada's Fuel Controller Has Not Yet Received Official Word of Decrease.

OTTAWA, Ont., June 29.—While Canada's fuel controller has received no official information as to the decision of the United Coal operators to decrease the price of coal at the pit mouth, he expressed the opinion this morning that if such a decrease were made Ontario and Quebec would secure advantage from it.

Mr. McGrath, however, is awaiting information of an official character on the result of the coal operators' conference.

RECRUITING LAGS IN UNITED STATES.

News of Arrival of American Troops in France Fails to Stimulate It.

WASHINGTON, June 29. — Hope that President Wilson's call for the filling up of the regular army and its reserves by June 30 could be realized, was abandoned to-day when the figures for recruiting yesterday showed that only 1,313 men had been accepted for service throughout the country.

Even news that American regulars had arrived in France failed to [illegible] recruiting and the present [illegible] cations are that regulars will [illegible] be substituted.

New York led yesterday [illegible] men obtained. The State [illegible] more than 4,000 men short of [illegible] ta. Nebraska which was within [illegible] of completing its quota yesterday slumped badly and a total of five men was all that was furnished for the day. California, next in line, supplied 46 men, making 4,366 the state has furnished since April 1 on a quota of 4,754.

The Man Birds

High in the air where the cloud banks lie
I watch the man-made swallows fly,
And my thoughts speed far to that battle line,
Where the cannon roar and the bullets whine—
Out to those war-swept fields of France,
Where a daring man takes a brave man's chance.

Eyes of the hawk and frame of steel,
Steady hands at the pilot wheel;
He waits for the enemy he must meet
With spitting flame from the gunner's seat;
Ah! that is a risk that brave men chance
Over the battlefields of France.

* * * * *

High in the air where the cloud banks lie
I watch the daring man-birds fly,
Silhouetted against the blue,
Doing the things that the Eagles do!

Big Russian Drive Opened Against Hun On Extensive Scale

Over a Front of Nearly Nineteen Miles in Galicia Russians Storm German Positions—Teutons Claim the Attackers Are Repulsed With Heavy Losses.

BERLIN IS CHARGINED

NEW YORK, July 3.—The Associated Press issued the following:

The soldiers of new Russia have assumed the aggressive. For the first time since the revolution last March Russia troops have begun an attack on an extensive scale.

Along a front of eighteen and one-half miles in the region of Brezany, Galicia, Russian troops have stormed the German positions. Berlin says the Russians suffered heavy losses and were compelled to retire before the German fire. The attack was made between the Upper Stripa and the Narayuvka River, a tributary of the Gnila Lipa, in the section southeast of Lemberg, the Galician capital, where the artillery firing has been heavy recently. The Russians also made night attacks on both sides of Brezany and near Zwyayn, and Berlin reports that assaults between the Zlota Lipa and the Narayuvka have brought on new battles between the opposing forces. The artillery arm of the Russian forces has been active, and from the Berlin report it is learned that an intense duel has been in progress from the region of Brezany to as far northward as the middle Stokhod, in Volhynie, a distance of about 175 miles.

BERLIN IS CHAGRINED.

Berlin declares that the Russian attacks, which it says were powerful, were brought about through the pressure of the leading Entente powers.

The text of the official statement says:

"The Russian Government having been constrained to yield to the pressure of the leading Entente powers, part of the army has been induced to attack."

The region of the Narayuvka and Upper Stripa Rivers has been the scene of much bitter fighting since General Brussiloff ended his victorious campaign last year and Brezany is one of the keys to Lemberg.

WHAT TEUTONS SAY.

Berlin, July 1.—The Russian troops in the Eastern theatre of the war have opened a heavy attack on the Germans along the Stripa front. They stormed the German positions along an eighteen and a half mile line but, according to the official German report, met with heavy losses and were forced to retire.

This was the most extensive attack delivered by the Russians since the revolution.

Another German report says:

"Army Group of Prince Leopold of Bavaria—The Russian Government having been constrained to yield to the pressure of the leading Entente powers, part of the army has been induced to attack. After a destructive fire lasting all day against our positions on the Upper Stripa as far as the Narayuvka River, there followed in the afternoon powerful attacks by the Russian infantry on a front of about thirty kilometres (18 1-2 miles). The storming troops, who sustained heavy losses, were compelled everywhere to retire by our defensive fire.

"Nocturnal attacks, into which the Russians also were driven without artillery preparation by the Entente leaders, were unsuccessful, and broke down on both sides of Brezany and near Zwyayn. The artillery duel extended northwards as far as the Middle Stokhod, and south, as far as Stanialau. There have been attacks on this front up to the present."

The night report reads:

"In the east the attacks of the Russians near Koniuby and between the Zlota Lipa and the Narayuvka occasioned new engagements."

RUSS SPIRIT REVIVED.

Petrograd, June 29.—(Delayed in transmission.)—Renewed activity of the Germans indicated in the report from the front in the last few days presumably is the result of a revival of the Russian fighting spirit and a joint conviction that a separate peace is impossible.

The correspondent at Minsk of The Birsheviya telegraphs that the Germans, who, during the period of fraternization, almost completely laid bare their battle front, are now feverishly fortifying their trenches and are creating a new defensive line twenty miles behind the first in preparation for a retreat. Fraternization the correspondent says, has entirely ceased, and soldiers immediately fire upon parlementaires. The Germans have been obliged to return to their former system of propaganda-dropping from airplanes, the pamphlets containing abuse of Russia and her allies.

From the Riga front comes a similar report. The Germans there are said to be fortifying their lines and to have been obliged to ask for reinforcements. The Germans at Mitau are reported to be awaiting the arrival of Field Marshal von Hindenburg and Quartiermaster-General von Ludendorff.

A Niagara Gorge Car Plunges Into the Rapids With Disastrous Results

Trolley Packed With Sightseers, Going From Lewiston to Niagara Falls, N.Y., Jumps into River, as Heavy Rains Undermine Roadbed—Soldiers Aid in Rescue Work.

MANY KILLED AND INJURED

Marion Lloyd Schumacher, Akron, Ohio; J. R. Muck, Princeton, Pa.; Mrs. Bertha Seastrom, Jamestown, N. Y.; Mrs. G. J. McCoy, Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. D. W. Bail, Arcadia, Florida; Alec. Heron, No. 1,412 First street, conductor; Mrs. B. M. Rastery, Chicago; James S. Kent, Scranton, Pa.; H. G. Phelps, Schenectady.

Dead, ..; unaccounted for, 4; in hospital, 28. These figures were given out at 1 o'clock this morning by N. Biddenhagen, General Auditor for the Gorge Route. The information came to the Canada Steamship Lines who were anxious to know if the line would be in operation to-day for the holiday travel. The reply was that it would be in operation.

NIAGARA, July 1.—Nature's mightiest symbol of headlong force, witnessed Sunday afternoon a human spectacle similar to its own when a Gorge Route Railway car leapt from its tracks on the verge of the rapids and plunged into the seething waters, hurling thirty happy pleasure-seekers to their doom. Swift and terrible was the fate which met these men, women and children in the path of pleasure. Those who escaped death possibly suffered more than those who were thrust beneath the rushing stream and pinned hopelessly inside the submerged car.

INTO THE WHIRLPOOL RAPIDS

The car started on its fated career up the Gorge from Lewiston about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. It has passed the lower rapids, and its passengers had gazed with fascinated eyes upon the leaping and foaming Whirlpool Gorge, which holds the sightseers spellbound with awe and admiration. It was speeding along in full view of the great Falls, just south of the Cantilever Bridge when the roadway collapsed, the rails parted, and the car was precipitated foward the sideways down the steep embankment twenty-five feet into the Rapids above the Whirlpool. By the sudden instinct by one who realised what had happened, the driver of the car, along with two other men on the platform, jumped for his life; other passengers were flung free from the car, some falling upon the embankment, while others fell into the water and saved themselves by grasping at rocks; some who were stunned by the fall were carried down like straws on the surging flood.

TORONTO STIRRED BY NEWS

The news of the fatality reached Toronto in the quietest hour of the afternoon, when the children were at

Sunday School and their parents were enjoying their siestas. Within half an hour the telegraphs and telephones were flashing the messages and questions about the wreck. Many people in Toronto had gone over the lake, and their friends were anxious to learn the whole truth. The bulletin boards were scanned by excited groups of people, who discussed the possibilities of the accident. The general feeling seemed to be that the Gorge cars travelled at too high a speed on so risky a track. When it was learned that the fatal car was returning to Niagara Falls, Toronto breathed a little easier; but was none the less shocked.

MOTORMAN CRANDELL'S STORY

The story of Motorman Louis C. Crandell of No. 1,027 Main street who is suffering from shock, and whose account of the affair is somewhat hasy, gives the first connected version of the accident.

Crandell says he was going along at the usual rate of speed when he suddenly felt the car sink beneath him. Realising the imminent danger, he and two men who stood on the platform with him jumped for their lives. They managed to get clear of the car, which rolled down the embankment, a distance of about twenty-five feet. Crandell and the two men who jumped with him climbed down the bank to give what aid they could to those who managed to get out of the car. They worked like trojans and hauled twenty-two persons to the shore. One of these, a woman, expired just as she was placed on the shore.

Crandell says that he had noticed the register just before the car made the plunge and saw that eighty-five fares had been rung up. He believes that this was about the number of people on the car.

One of the first men to arrive on the scene of the accident was D. A. Sanson, a barber, of No. 44 1-2 Bridge street, Niagara Falls, Ont. He was crossing the new steel arch bridge when he saw the car slide into the river. Sanson rushed down the river bank by Bidder, and assisted some soldiers in pulling the first woman out of the wreckage. She was a young lady, and pleaded with the men to save her escort. A few minutes later he was brought out, with the assistance of his sweetheart.

The roadbed was weakened by the incessant rains, and it is believed the rails spread as the car passed over with its heavy load.

The George Railway have the platform, or bottom, of the wrecked car partly raised from its bed of water and mud by means of a derrick, and expect to find other bodies, from the check of passengers on the car. They have three of four searchlight cars throwing their glare of light on the scene and adjacent river, watching for bodies, if they have not already floated down through the rapids. From ten to fifteen thousand people crowded the banks and bridges until sunset, watching the scene of rescue of the living and the bodies of the dead being exacted 200 feet below.

Russia Has Started In To Do Her Bit

Simultaneous Resumption of All Allied Offensives is Expected To-day

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 3.—Simultaneous resumption of all allied offensives, now that Russia has at last started in to "do her bit" was expected here to-day with General Brussiloff's troops fired with their initial successes continuing to gain ground. Back in the winter the allied plans had called for a synchronous offensive campaign in the spring, to be waged on the western northern Italian and Macedonian fronts. The Hindenburg "strategic retreat" on the western front hastened the British and French attack. Then came the Russian revolution and total inaction of the Russian troops. From now on, military experts pointed out to-day Germany cannot weaken her Rusaian front to stiffen up yielding sections on other fronts, as she has done. She must guard against penetration on every side. But of the vastly greater satisfaction than the mere fact that Russia has started an offensive, was the realisation that this time it is an army imbued with full knowledge of the principals of democracy for which the allies are fighting. Every man in the ranks now knows exactly what he is fighting for, ruslians Russia must win to hold her freedom and can be counted on for this reason, as trebly effective in fighting.

"The Postmaster's Daughter"

By LOUIS TRACY

"Very well," smiled Grant, rising, "put the sherry and the bitters on the sideboard."

"Say," murmured Hart, "is this chap really a detective?"

"Yes. He stands high at Scotland Yard."

"Never more than five feet four, I'll swear. But I would not have missed this for a pension. I have a revolver in my hip pocket, of course. One would feel lonely without it even in England. But I hope you can stage a few knives and daggers and a red light. I can cut masks out of a strip of black velvet. That girl will have a piece stowed away somewhere."

The two entered the dining room study where the table was now laid for dinner. Furneaux was seated on the edge of a chair in the darkest corner. His eyes gleamed at them strangely.

"Can you trust Bates?" he asked Grant.

It was a wholly unexpected question, and Grant answered sharply:

"Of course, I can."

"Tell him to make sure that no one trespasses on your lawn between now and ten o'clock. Close that window, draw the blind and the curtains, and block that small window, the one through which you saw the ghost."

"Ye gods!" cackled Hart ecstatically.

"Why all these precautions?" demanded Grant, rather amused now.

"I'm supposed to be on the very verge of arresting you and it would weaken the faith of my allies if I were seen drinking your wines, and eating your chicken."

"By the way, how did you know I had chickens in store, and a spit on which to roast them?"

"I looked you over at five-thirty this morning, having travelled from London by the mail train. I must lecture you on your inefficient window catches, Mr. Grant. Several self-respecting burglars of my acquaintance would give your house the go-by as being too easy. And one other matter. I suggest that any man who mentions the Steynholme murder again before the coffee arrives shall be fined a sovereign for each offense, such fine or fines to form a fund for the relief of his hearers. Cre nom d'un pipe! Three intelligent men can surely discuss more interesting topics while they eat!"

CHAPTER VIII.

AN INTERRUPTED SYMPOSIUM.

"Have a cigarette," said Grant to Furneaux, when the blinds were drawn, a lamp lighted, and the sherry dispensed.

"Thank you."

The self-invited guest took one. He sniffed it, broke the paper wrapping, and crumbled some of the tobacco between finger and thumb.

"Ah, those Greeks!" he said sadly. "They simply can't go straight. This brand of Turk used to be made of a tobacco grown on a slope above Salonica. A strip of sun-baked soil built up a reputation which is now being bartered for filthy lucre by the use of Egyptian 'fillings.'"

"You're a connoisseur, Mr. Hawknose—try these," said Hart, proffering a case, from which the detective drew a cigarette, throwing the other one aside.

"Why 'Hawknose'?" he inquired.

"A blend. First syllable of Hawkshaw and second of Furneaux—the latter Anglicized, of course."

"And vulgarized."

"You prefer Furshaw, perhaps?"

"Either effort is feeble for a man who can can write about South America and be lucid. Do you smoke this stuff, may I ask?" While talking he had smelt and destroyed the second cigarette.

"If it's a fair question, what the devil do you smoke?" cried Hart.

"Nothing. I'm a non-smoker. My profession demands a clear intellect, not a brain atrophied by nicotine."

"Piffle! Carlyle and Bismarck were smokers."

"Who reads Carlyle now-a-days? And what modern German pays heed to Bismarck's dogmas? Look at that pipe of yours. It was once a pure ivory white. Now it is black—soiled by tobacco juice. Your lungs are slowly emulating it, and your wits will cloud in time. Read Tolstoi, Mr. Hart. He will teach you how nicotine deadens the conscience."

"At last I know why I smoke like a Thames tug," laughed Hart, "but I am blest if I can understand why you make such a study of the vile weed."

"Most criminals are addicted to the habit. I classify them by their brand of tobacco. For instance, a clever forger would never descend to thick twist, while a swell mobsman would turn with horror from a woodbine."

Minnie entered and nodded, whereupon Grant led the others upstairs to wash. From the bathroom he looked out over a darkening landscape. Doris's dormer window was open. She was leaning on the sill, but he could not tell whether or not her eyes were turned his way. Her attitude was pensive, disconsolate, curiously forlorn for a girl normally high spirited. He was on the point of signalling to her when he remembered Furneaux's presence. There was something sinister, almost diabolically clever in that little man's characteristics which induced wariness.

The dinner was a marvel considering the short notice given to the cook. Luckily, Mrs. Bates, a loyal soul, had resolved to tempt her employer's appetite that evening. Village gossip had it that the police were about to arrest him, and she was determined he should enjoy at least one good meal before being haled to the prison. Hence the materials were present. The rest was a matter of quantities, and Sussex seldom stints itself in that respect.

The chatter around the table was light and amusing. The three were well matched conversationally. Furneaux evidently held the opinion once expressed by a notable Walrus—that the time had come—,

To talk of many things:

Of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—
Of cabbages—and kings.

He was in excellent form, and the others played up to him. Hart's slow drawl was ever trenchant and witty, and Grant forgot his woes in congenial company. As for the mercurial detective himself, it might be said of him as of the school-master of Auburn—

And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew,
That one small head could carry all he knew.

It was he who dropped them with a bounce from the realm of fancy to the unpleasing region of ugly fact. No sooner had Minnie cleared the table, and brought in the coffee than he whisked around on Grant as though hitherto he had been only awaiting an opportunity of scarifying him.

"Now," he said, propping an elbow on the table, and supporting his chin on a clenched fist, "the embargo is off the Steynholme affair. You didn't kill Adelaide Melhuish, Mr. Grant. Who did?"

"I wish that I could tell you," was the emphatic answer.

"Do you suspect anybody? You needn't fear the libel law in confiding your secret thought to me, and I assume that Mr. Hart is trustworthy—where his friends are concerned?"

"Why that unkind differentiating clause, my pocket Vidocq?" put in Hart.

"Because two kings and a baker's dozen of presidents have, at various times, sent most unflattering reports to this country about you."

"I must have annoyed 'em most damnably."

"You had. I congratulate you, but Heaven only knows where I may convoy you some day on an extradition warrant....Proceed, Mr. Grant."

"I assure you, on my honour, this the only reasonable suggestion I can make is that put forward by my gardener, to-day," said Grant. "He thinks that the murder must have been committed by a lunatic. I can offer no other hypothesis."

"Your gardener may be right. But what lunatic, barring yourself and the horse coper Elkin, is in love with Doris Martin?"

Like Elkin the previous night, Grant struck the table till things rattled.

"Keep her name out of it," he cried fiercely. "You are a man of the world, not a suspicious idiot of the Robinson type. You heard to-day the full and true explanation of her presence here on Monday night. It was a sheer accident. Why harp on Doris Martin rather than any member of the Bates family?"

"Who, may I ask, is Doris Martin?" put in Hart.

"The Steynholme postmaster's daughter" said Furneaux. "A remarkably pretty and intelligent girl. If her father was a peer she would be the belle of a London season. As it is, her good looks seem to have put a maggot in more than one nut in the village."

Hart waved the negro's head in the air.

"The lunatic theory for mine," he declared.

"If one woman's lovely face could bring a thousand ships to Ilion, why should not another's drive men to madness in Steynholme?"

"Well phrased, sir," cackled Furneaux delightedly. "I'll wangle that in on a respected colleague of mine, who is whale at deducing a proposition from given premises, but cannot induce a general fact from particular instances to save his life.....Now stifle your romantic frenzy, Mr. Grant, and listen to me. If you were minded to instruct me in the art of writing good English I would sit at your feet an attentive disciple. When I, Furneaux, of the 'Yard,' lay down a first principle in the investigation of crime I expect deference on your part. I tell you unhesitatingly that if Doris Martin didn't exist, Adelaide Melhuish would be alive now. That as a thesis is nearly as certain a thing as that the sun will rise to-morrow. I go farther and hazard the guess, not the fixed belief, though my guesses are usually borne out by the event, that if Doris Martin had not been in this garden at half-past ten on Monday night, Adelaide Melhuish would not have been killed some twenty minutes later. It is useless for you to fume and rage in vain effort to disprove either of these presumptive facts. You are simply beating the air. This mystery centres in and around the postmaster's daughter. Come now, you are a reasonable person. Admit the cold, hard truth, and then give play to your fancy."

"Sir," said Hart, brandishing his pipe again, "I suggest that you and I here now, form a mutual admiration society."

"It is a cruel and a bitter thing, that an innocent girl should be dragged into association with a foul crime," said Grant stubbornly. "I am not disputing the force of your acumen, Mr. Furneaux; my only desire is to shield the good name of a very charming young lady."

"What's done can't be undone," countered the detective, well knowing that Grant confessed himself beaten.

"But what is all the pother about? You heard from Miss Martin's own lips absolutely the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Put her in the witness box, and what more can she tell you?"

"I am not worrying about her appearance in the witness box," said Furneaux dryly. "Long before that stage is reached I shall be hunting a star burglar, or perhaps looking into the Foreign Office dossier of our worthy friend here, as to-day's papers hint at trouble in Venezuela. No, sir. The county police will get all the credit. P. C. Robinson will be awanking about then, telling the yokels what he did. I, with Olympic nod, say, 'There's your man!' and the handcuffs' brigade do the rest. So far as I can foresee, Miss Martin's name may be spared any undue prominence in this inquiry. I go even farther, and promise that anything I can do in that way shall be done."

HUSBAND SAVED HIS WIFE

Stopped Most Terrible Suffering by Getting Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Denison, Texas. — "After my little girl was born two years ago I began suffering with female trouble and could hardly do my work. I was very nervous but just kept dragging on until last summer when I got where I could not do my work. I would have a chill every day and hot flashes and dizzy spells and my head would almost burst. I got where I was almost a walking skeleton and life was a burden to me until one day my husband's stepsister told my husband if he did not do something for me I would not last long and told him to get your medicine. So he got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking the first three doses I began to improve. I continued its use, and I have never had any female trouble since. I feel that I owe my life to you and your remedies. They did for me what doctors could not do and I will always praise it wherever I go."—Mrs. G. O. Lowery, 419 W. Monterey Street, Denison, Texas.

If you are suffering from any form of female ills, get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and commence the treatment without delay.

WOMEN'S AILMENTS

Come from Heart and Nerves

Young girls budding into womanhood, who suffer from pains and headaches, and whose face is pale and blood watery, will find Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills build them up.

Women, between the ages of 40 and 50, who are nervous, subject to hot flushes, feeling of pins and needles, smothering feeling, shortness of the breath, palpitation of the heart, etc., are tided over this trying time of their lives by the use of this remedy.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have a wonderful effect on a woman's system, making pains and aches vanish, bringing color to the pale cheek, and sparkle to the eye.

The old, worn out, tired out, languid feelings give place to strength and vitality, and life again seems like living.

Mrs. Alfred Winter, Castor, Alta., writes: "I should like every woman who is suffering from nerves or heart trouble to know how much Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have helped me. For two years I kept a hired girl and was doctoring all the time. After having taken four boxes of your pills I am able to do all my own work. I would especially recommend them to women between 40 and 50, as at that time they are more liable to be far from well. One of my neighbors knows how they helped me, and she is now using them."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c., or three boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CHEAP POTATOES IN PLENTY.

Pennsylvania Railroad Makes New Record for New York Market.

NEW YORK, June 27.—All previous records for the shipment of potatoes to the New York market have been broken by the Pennsylvania Railroad during the first twenty working days of June. In that period, as shown by records given out yesterday, 278,362 barrels of the new crop from the Southern States have been delivered for consumption in this city. This exceeds by 53,183 barrels the quantity delivered in the corresponding period of 1916, and is far ahead of the deliveries of any earlier year.

In the last four weeks the wholesale price on the piers for the best grade of potatoes has declined from about $12 a barrel to between $7 and $8.

Notwithstanding the unprecedented shipment of the current season, fewer cars are being used in the trade than were employed for the lighter shipments of last year. This is due to the campaign of education which has been carried on among shippers, to make better use of car space. The potatoes arriving here in the first twenty working days of June were handled in 127 less cars than were required to handle the smaller shipments made in the same interval of 1916.

An unfavourable feature of this year's shipments, due apparently to the large crop and the ready market, has been the employment of the poorest quality of barrels in which potatoes have ever been offered to the railroad for transportation. In consequence the percentage of loss and damage has been extremely high. Last week, 1,200 barrels of potatoes arriving in poor condition, due to broken or headless barrels, or to having been shipped wet or mixed with dirt, were sold on the street in front of the piers for from 50 cents to $2 a barrel, when the prevailing market ranged from $5 to $11 a barrel, according to size and quality.

Potatoes have precedence over practically all other forms of freight arriving for delivery in New York City. Pier 28 has been converted into an open market, by agreement with the produce dealers of the city the market opens at 7 a.m., and deliveries to the trucks or teams of buyers may be made as late as 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

In anticipation of still heavier potato shipments, the Pennsylvania Railroad is endeavouring to extend its receiving facilities further. For this purpose arrangements are being made whereby several additional stations, both in New York City and Brooklyn, will be available.

Batters of all kinds require one scant quart of milk to one quart of flour.

A pleasant drink is made of ice water and sugar with bruised mint leaves.

Never salt and pepper meat until it is at least half done.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

The Golden Acre

It Was Half a Century Before It Produced Crops

By F. A. MITCHEL

In 1850 Elihu Deane and Herbert Dodsworth got into a lawsuit over a piece of prairie land located a couple of miles from the center of the city of Chicago. The property was worth nothing, and the expenses of the suit were heavy. They were advised by their lawyers to meet with a view to effecting a compromise. They came together, and Deane said to Dodsworth:

"It is impossible for either you or me to realize anything out of this acre of worthless land. We're too old. But I think there's going to be a big city here some day, and the property in, say, fifty years from now may come within the town limits. It will then be worth something. Suppose we leave it jointly to our heirs?"

"That would be like dividing an apple into a couple of dozen parts. Families multiply, and I doubt if the inheritance will ever be worth more than, say, a hundred dollars. Suppose we arrange so that it shall go to one person yet unborn?"

Dodsworth was ready for any proposition that would relieve him of further bother concerning the property, and legal documents were drawn up bequeathing it to such descendant of either as should be nearest to twenty years old on June 1, 1900. Both men were over fifty at the time the arrangement was made and both had sons and daughters.

But none of these sons or daughters took the slightest interest in the property that had, so to speak, been put away for the enjoyment of some one yet unborn. If, indeed, any of them ever visited it they saw a part of the prairie, on which, after a rain, stood a pool of water varying from one to twelve inches in depth.

When forty years had rolled round neither Deane nor Dodsworth nor any child of either was living. There were many grandchildren, none of whom knew anything about the acre of property that had been tied up for half a century. Before the death of the testators a fund had been provided from which the taxes were to be paid, and a certain firm of lawyers were to pay them. In 1890 this firm dissolved, and the duty devolved upon their successors. By this time the property had become a snug fortune, and there was no danger of any Deane or Dodsworth who lived in Chicago not knowing something about it. But both families had spread out fanlike and had scattered.

In 1898 Ackley & Thorp, attorneys, were charged with the payment of the taxes on the acre, and the sums were sufficiently large to be noticeable. Sidney Walker, a young man who had just been admitted to the bar, was a clerk in the office of Ackley & Thorp, and the payment of the taxes was intrusted to him. In this way he came to a knowledge of the strange joint will of Deane and Dodsworth. It occurred to Walker that when the time came round to put the property into the hands of the legitimate heir it would be important that all the members of the Deane and Dodsworth families should be accounted for. Realizing that whoever did this work would doubtless be paid for it, he began a search for every member of both families. But he kept his investigation to himself.

Roger Deane, aged twenty-two, a grandson of Elihu Deane, a party to the will made in 1850, resided in Chicago between 1890 and 1900 and had his eye on the acre as being the possible heir. He was a member of most of the clubs of the city and prominent socially. He hunted up all the Deanes and Dodsworths he could find. There was none nearer than he to the required age. But he found one Dodsworth, a woman about his own age, who might be nearer than he. He made inquiries as to her age, but she declined to give it on the ground that a woman's age is her private property. The truth is that if he knew her age and it was nearer the prize than his he might prepare himself to prove that he was older or younger than she was.

Miss Julia Dodsworth was equally as prominent in society as Roger Deane, and the possession of property worth several hundred thousand dollars would be as much of an advantage to her as to him. She therefore concluded to cultivate him, with a view to getting out of him his age. Neither would be on June 1, 1900, much less than two years above twenty, but no one of the descendants of the original Deane or Dodsworth had turned up nearer the required age, and it seemed probable that one or the other of these two would get the fortune.

As the time drew near for the turning over the acre to the designated heir Messrs. Ackley & Thorp wrote to the Deanes and Dodsworths to state their ages. Roger Deane and Julia Dodsworth were included in the inquiries. Each had been endeavoring to learn the other's age, but neither had succeeded. Therefore neither had any advantage over the other in this respect. There was nothing for either to do but give the true date of birth.

Soon after doing so each received a letter saying that both had been born on the same day, and this would render the will inoperative since it distinctly specified that the property be turned over on the 1st of June, 1900, to the one person nearest to twenty years of age. No one had yet appeared to be nearer than they to the designated age, but the property, under a literal interpretation of the will, could not be given to either.

Roger Deane and Julia Dodsworth visited the attorneys with a view to a compromise. They at first suggested that the property be divided between them. But the lawyers would not do this without an order from the court of chancery. Deane took the man of law aside and asked him if marriage would settle the matter. The reply was that though man and wife were one in certain respects in the eye of the law they were not in all respects. After much delay the lawyer suggested that the only way out of the matter was for one to lay claim to the estate and the other to dispute the claim. This would bring the matter before the court, who would give a decision.

However, nothing could be done before the 1st of June next, and that was still three months distant. Meanwhile Roger Deane and Julia Dodsworth had a common interest. They met quite often with a view to finding some way by which they might at least divide the inheritance. It was suggested that they hunt up the doctors who presided at their birth in order to discover which had been born at the earlier hour of the day. Deane was successful on his part. He found the doctor who brought him into the world, who by reference to certain notes he had taken down with regard to his patients found a record that Roger had been born at 2 o'clock in the morning of April 10, 1878. This, the lawyers said, would not give him the property unless proof was adduced that Miss Dodsworth had been born at a later hour of the day. So there was nothing gained for Deane. And as for Miss Dodsworth, it simply meant that by hunting up her own record she would run twelve chances to one of giving the property to Deane.

By this time this matter of mutual interest had drawn them so closely together that if it could have been settled by their marriage there would have been no further difficulty.

Miss Dodsworth remembered that a woman named McCann had lived with her mother as housekeeper or upper servant for many years. When Julia was about twelve years of age Mrs. McCann had left the family. She was with them when Julia was born and might remember the hour of her birth. Julia began a system of advertising for the woman, and a response was finally elicited. She wrote Julia that she had kept a letter blank book, in which she had noted important events. This book was, with other effects, in a trunk in a garret of one of Mrs. McCann's relatives. She would get it and see if it contained the required information.

While waiting for this Julia told Roger about it. Roger said that if the book contained a memorandum of the hour of Julia's birth he or she would inherit the acre. But he had a dozen chances to one of being the heir. Then he told her that he had become attached to her and proposed that, whether he or she or neither the one nor the other inherited, they pass the rest of their lives as man and wife. Julia was of the same mind, and they plighted their troth, their union to take place irrespective of what by this time they had come to call the golden acre.

A few days after their betrothal Mrs. McCann sent her notebook by registered mail to Julia. Julia turned over the leaves hastily till she came to May and June, 1878, and there found an entry, "At 10 o'clock in the morning of April 10, a little girl was born."

Miss Dodsworth construed this as proof that she had won, since she was born nearer to the 1st of June, 1900, than Roger. She sent the notebook to the attorneys, wrote Roger that she had made up her mind she did not love him as much as she thought she did and broke the engagement.

This break prevented any further conference, and when the 1st of June came round each received a notice to appear at noon on that day at Ackley & Thorp's office. They found there quite a number of descendants of the original Deane and Dodsworth of various ages. Mr. Ackley thus addressed those present:

"By the terms stipulated fifty years ago today by Elihu Deane and Herbert Dodsworth a certain acre of land was bequeathed to such one of their descendants, male or female, who should be nearest to twenty years of age on the 1st of June, 1900. There are four persons living who were born near that date and who are descendants of either Deane or Dodsworth—viz, Roger Deane, Julia Dodsworth, Edward Payne and Emma Osborne, born May 20, 1880. Emma Osborne, having produced satisfactory evidence of birth, will undoubtedly be adjudged the heir by the surrogate."

There was an involuntary hum of dissatisfaction throughout the assembly. Roger Deane and Julia Dodsworth looked at each other and laughed. Both being rich, they could afford to laugh.

Mr. Ackley walked up to a demure looking girl dressed very plainly and congratulated her on attaining the possession of the golden acre. Mr. Sidney Walker also congratulated her. Yielding to an impulse, she threw her arms about his neck.

Walker during his investigations as to who would inherit the golden acre had found a little schoolteacher living in Missouri who was about the required age. He corresponded with her, told her of the fortune that was to be turned over to the legal heir and helped her to obtain undoubted proof of the day and even the hour of her birth. This he did merely in the line of business. The girl came to love him, but did not show her love till the day she was adjudged an heiress.

HIS CHEERFUL RECEPTION.

The Compliment Came After He Made His Little Talk.

A Washington newspaper man was once a member of congress from an Ohio district. He is not an orator and rarely makes a speech. When he was running for congress he got word that he must come to a small town on the edge of his district to attend a meeting. A famous "spellbinder" had been secured, and the candidate was expected to be there, to shake hands and show himself.

When he arrived at the village he was horror stricken to find that the speaker of the occasion had missed his train and would not be there.

"Come right up to the hall," said the chairman of the delegation that met him. "There's a big crowd there, and they are anxious to hear some talking."

The candidate went in fear and trembling. He was introduced and talked for fifteen minutes. He started to sit down, but the chairman motioned him to continue. He went on for another quarter of an hour and by that time had told all he knew or ever expected to know that was of interest to his audience.

Then he dropped into his chair. The man who was presiding came cheerfully forward and said: "We have heard our candidate. Now, if there is any one present who can make a speech we shall be glad to hear him."—Youth's Companion.

TEETH MENDING IN CHILE.

Not an Easy Matter For Foreign Dentists to Practice There.

Not every foreigner who comes along with the claim of being a dentist can practice that profession in Chile. The government sees to it that any one who is to look after the health and preservation of the teeth of its people must first demonstrate his qualifications.

The law provides that before a license may be granted a foreigner to practice dentistry in the country the applicant must secure permission from the rector of the University of Chile to take the examination. His foreign diploma, duly certified and authenticated, must be attached to the permit, and a fee of 500 pesos (about $75 in United States money) must be deposited for the license in the office of the secretary of the university. If the applicant passes the examination successfully the license is issued, and he is authorized to open his office for business.

Any applicant who holds a dental diploma from a school not known or recognized by the Chilean authorities is required to complete the third year's work of the dental department of the University of Chile and must also pass a satisfactory examination before he can obtain a license to practice.—Pan-American Bulletin.

GAUDY HEAD COVERINGS.

Girls and Women in Haiti Have a Fashion All Their Own.

There are in Haiti probably 800,000 women and girls over ten years of age, and at least $95,000 of them wear the "mouchoir tete," or headkerchief. This is wound around the head bandanna fashion. One of silk or a mercerized goods, with brocaded figures woven in it, and locally called "foulard" is usually kept for Sundays and special occasions; others of prints or calico are used for everyday wear, according to "Commerce Reports."

The tastes run the whole gamut of colors. Women who are in mourning—and the practice of putting on mourning for deceased relatives not of the immediate family is common—wear solid black or black and white or black, white and blue designs. Black is a favorite color with the people anyway. Combinations of black and red are well liked; also stripes in blues and blacks on a white ground. Yellow and red, black, red and yellow and blue and white checks called "madras" are very popular, particularly yellows and blacks or a combination of yellow, black and white and various other startling color schemes.

These hues, except the blacks, do not appear to be very "fast" colors, and it has been suggested by a dealer that more enduring dyes would soon find favor among the buyers, particularly if some distinguishing mark could be put on each kerchief by which the desired brand could be easily distinguished.

Warning Before Command.

In bringing up my children I found that at night when they were tired they were spared many tears by being warned before I gave them a strict command. Instead of saying "Now it is time to go to bed. Put away your blocks at once," I would say: "It is nearly time to go to bed. Finish your house first and then put away your blocks." In this way the children were fully prepared to go, and there was consequently no begging and no temptation for me to show my lack of firmness by being persuaded to allow them to build "just one more house."

Imagine a mother in the midst of an absorbing chapter being told by one in higher authority to put down her book at once and go to bed. Would it not save a frown of impatience to be told to finish the chapter first?—Harper's Bazar.

Preserving Spiders' Webs.

Naturalists employ an ingenious method of preserving all kinds of spiders' webs. The webs are first sprayed with an atomizer with a thin solution of artists' shellac, and then, should they be of the ordinary geometric form, they are pressed carefully against a glass plate, the supporting strands at the same time being severed. After the shellac solution has dried the plates carrying the webs can be stored away in a cabinet. Even dome shaped webs may be preserved in their original form by spraying them with shellac and then allowing them to dry before removal from their supports. Many spiders' webs are very beautiful, and all are characteristic of the species to which they belong, so that from a scientific standpoint their permanent preservation is very desirable.

DON'T DOUBT THIS! WORKS LIKE A CHARM

Read how to lift painful corns (or) callouses, off without any pain.

Lift your corns out with the fingers. Not a twinge of pain or soreness before applying, or afterwards. This may sound like a dream to corn-pestered men and women who have been cutting, filing, and wearing torturous plasters. Yes! Corns lift out and callouses peel off if you will follow the advice of this Cincinnati authority.

Ask any drug store man for a small bottle of freezone. Tiny bottles like here shown can now be had for small cost. Apply a few drops directly upon your tender corn or callus, and instantly the soreness disappears; then shortly the corn or callus will be found so loose that it lifts right off.

Freezone is an ether compound which dries instantly. It doesn't eat out the corn or callus, but just shrivels it up so it lifts away without even irritating or smarting the surrounding or underneath tissue or skin. Genuine freezone is only sold in these small bottles, packed in a little wooden case bearing a yellow wrapper. Don't accept anything else.

HYGIENE IN THE BEEHIVE.

The Way Intruders Are Sealed Up In a Tomb of Wax.

It has been observed that bees have a most ingenious and sanitary way of disposing of a living creature that may by accident or design chance to find its way into their hive. When the intruder is killed, as killed he must be, whether he be large or small, the problem arises how to deal with the body.

If the bees find that it is impossible to expel or dismember the creature they will proceed cleverly to inclose it in a veritable sepulcher of wax. In one of his hives a beekeeper discovered three such tombs side by side, erected with party walls like the cells of the comb, in order that no wax might be wasted. These tombs the prudent bees had raised over the remains of three snails that had strayed into the hive.

As a rule the bees will, when dealing with snails, be content to seal up with wax the opening of the shell. In this case, however, the snails' shells were more or less cracked or broken. The bees had therefore considered it simpler to bury the snails entire, and the bees had further contrived, in order that traffic might not be impeded in the entrance hall of the hive, a number of galleries exactly proportionate not to their own girth, but to that of the male bees, which are almost twice as large as the workers.—Exchange.

Epitaph of a Cynic.

John Goodman of Sulton, Surrey county, England, was a cynic. His own will convicts him of so being. He directed in this document that no woman be allowed in his funeral cortege. And on his tombstone he bade that the following verse be carved:

Farewell, vain earth, I've had enough of thee,
And now am careless what thou say'st of me.
Thy smiles I car'st not, nor thy frowns I fear.
My care is past, my head lies quiet here.
What faults you see in me take care to shun
And look at home, enough is to be done

JAPAN'S FIRST GLASS.

Used In Railway Cars, the Natives Put Their Heads Through It.

That observation car would have done credit to any railroad in the world. A Japanese fellow passenger, an official in the Japanese ministry of communications, was amused at our expressions of delight.

"Of course this is all very recent," he explained. "Forty-five years ago there was not a single car nor a single mile of track in the whole of Japan. Why," he laughed, "I can remember the first jerky little trains that were run on the first line to be opened—the one between Tokyo and Yokohama. Glass was a new thing to the Japanese, and there were a great many windows broken and heads bumped during those first few weeks. Passengers persisted in trying to put out their heads without first raising the windows. Finally the glass smashing became so expensive and there were so many complaints over bruised and cut heads that the company was forced to paint a white bar on every window to teach passengers the nature of glass."

Which story we could appreciate, for we had already noticed in the corner of a railroad yard a little old car with white bars painted across the windows. Some of these cars, our companions told us, are still used as third class conveyances on newly opened branch lines, for there are still parts of Japan where the people do not quite understand glass.

PACKING A TRUNK.

Here's the Way to Manage the Job to Get the Best Results.

To pack a trunk first collect everything that is to be put into it. Fold everything as flat as possible. Evening dresses and fancy waists may be put into thin pasteboard boxes, packed in tissue paper and tied with tapes so they won't slip around. These will go on the bottom of the trunk.

Save all the oblong pieces of paper that came home from the laundry in the men's shirts and fold the shirt waists around these. Use stockings and things that will not wrinkle for filling in the small spaces that will happen, even with the most careful packing. Put collars, belts and ribbons into small boxes.

Take folding hangers for dresses and coats. Short lengths of ribbon with a safety pin at one end and a brass ring at the other take up no room at all in a trunk and will be useful for hanging up skirts.

If you have no hat trunk and are obliged to pack your hats in the tray, fill the crowns with tissue paper, place them in position and fasten them there with wide bands of cotton tape held to the side of the trunk with thumb tacks.

Keep always in mind that the more tightly the things are packed in the fewer wrinkles you will find at the end of the journey, provided that you have used care in packing.

BANKER WHO AIDED CANADA'S FINANCING

Sir John Aird Gave Talents to Country as Well as to Employers—Former Lacrosse Player

Sir John Aird was born in Canada—in fact, in the Province of Quebec—but he is of typically Scottish temperament, just as he is of Scottish descent. He is of Scottish parentage on both sides. He is a hard-headed, cool-headed man of business, of somewhat rugged exterior, but compact of sterling virtues. He is a man who, when he has made up his mind, is not easily deflected from the way he has chosen. He can, too, make up his mind quickly, and act quickly." Such is an estimate of the Bank of Commerce official given by a fellow-citizen.

Sir John Aird was of the very greatest assistance to Sir Thomas White, the Minister of Finance, in the extraordinary financial operations rendered necessary by the war. He gave, gratuitously and ungrudgingly, of his time and financial ability to this service. "Few people have any idea," said the informant before quoted, "of the hard work he did in this connection. And, it was all done with such an entire absence of all ostentation. That, again, is thoroughly symptomatic of the man. 'He does not advertise.'"

Long Service in Bank

Sir John Aird started his business career as a railway man. But in 1873, when he was twenty-three years old, he entered the Canadian Bank of Commerce as a clerk. He soon became one of the bank's inspectors, and, later, was made manager at Seaforth, returning subsequently to Toronto as assistant manager of the Toronto branch. In 1903 he was made superintendent of the Western agencies, with jurisdiction over all the bank's branches situate in the district between the Great Lakes and the Rocky Mountains. His work in that post was of such an outstanding character, and marked by so much success, that he was brought to the head office as assistant general manager in 1911, and, four years later, on the retirement of Mr. Alexander Laird, he succeeded to the general managership.

Gave Sons to War

Sir John Aird in his younger days was noted for his proficiency in our national game. He was a contemporary in the lacrosse field with Sir Henry Pellatt and the late Ross Mackenzie. He had two sons, both being in the flying service, one attached to the army and the other with a naval battalion. In June, 1916, the elder son, Lieut. John Aird, underwent an operation for appendicitis in an English hospital. The younger son, Lieut. Hugh Aird, was formerly a well-known Varsity hockey player.

EQUINE HERO RETURNED

"Steve Lane" of Patricias' Bore Farquhar and Gault

Of all the hundreds of thousands of horses that have been shipped to the European battlefields from this country few came back. If there was any such thing as a decoration for gallantry on the field of battle for horses, such as brave men receive, old Steve Lane, honest thoroughbred, would have brought such decoration with him. Back in 1909 Steve Lane, a chestnut son of Chanteum and Dial, became a hero when he won the Hendrie Memorial steeplechase over the three-mile route in Canada, but that was on the good green field of sport. Since then he has become far more of a hero, for he won recognition on the field of battle, and seems to have borne a charmed life, for he is one of the few survivors of the ill-fated Princess Patricias, most noted of all regiments sent to this great war.

When the Princess Patricias, made up of 1,300 of the flower of young manhood of Canada, went away to war, Steve Lane was selected to go along as the charger of Col. Farquhar, in command. It is one of the sad phases of history that Steve Lane is the only surviving charger of the regiment. Steve Lane last raced for Colin Campbell, and came back to Campbell's place, Manor House, St. Hilliare, Quebec, to end his days.

After Col. Farquhar was killed his faithful Steve Lane was presented to Major Hamilton Gault, the gentleman who donated $50,000 from his own purse to finance the "Princess Pats." In one of the famous battles, while riding the old steeplechaser, Major Gault was wounded in both legs. When he was ordered back home, he decided to bring old Steve Lane back with him.

Jailed Italian Army Grafter

A curious war fraud was made known through the condemnation of a cavalry officer at Rome to ten years' imprisonment. In the early part of the war the officer was assigned to commandeering saddles from civilian stables, but, of course, to pay a fair price. Instead of giving orders to pay on the department, he himself paid cash for saddles, usually one-fifth of their value, and collected the proper price from the department.

For Paralysed Soldiers

The Duchess of Portland, who bought a large house and grounds in Nottingham for Nottinghamshire men paralysed in the war, suggests similar provision in every county, so as to save the relatives their journey to the Star and Garter Home at Richmond.

After being held continuously for 138 years, the bell-ringing festival at Braughing, Herts, has been abandoned owing to most of the ringers having joined the colours.

The appeal of Lord Napier and Ettrick (40), refused exemption at Selkirk County Tribunal, was dismissed at St. Boswells Border Tribunal.

BRITAIN'S RECRUITING WAS GREAT REVIVAL

Poster's Appeal was to Individual—Speaker's Call was to Duty—A Frenchman's Interpretation

In Andre Chevrillon's "England and the War," the reader may find, in what is really an analysis of the national mind, special stress laid on the appeal to conscience. He says: "There came the continuous, urgent exhortation to every young man's conscience, an indefatigable propaganda of meetings, sermons, processions, open-air speeches, and all the activity of recruiting sergeants. The root idea was that a man should enlist by virtue of a certain working of his mind, a new conviction, a perception of good and evil, justice and injustice, awakened in him by this active and well-organized campaign. The moral, protestant and puritanic character of this campaign was apparent from a first glance at the picture posters which covered the walls. Through all their gaudiness one word incessantly recurs: Duty. The feeling of imperative duty is the suggestion aimed at by all these pictures, that form a matchless document on the inner nature of the English soul.

Revivalist Devices

"Here, for example, is the familiar face—as Kipling said, 'the war-wise face'—of Lord Roberts, with piercing glance, his air of precision telling of strength and voluntary discipline, of faithfulness and services loyally accomplished. And, beneath it, this motto: 'He did his duty; will you do yours?' Here is the more massive and authoritative face of Lord Kitchener, looking straight into yours with steel-gray eyes; he utters the words printed on the bill: 'Your country wants you.' To stimulate conscience, the old devices of the great Methodist preachers are resorted to. In every individual of his congregation Wesley endeavored to create the sensation that to him personally he was speaking, for him personally Christ died.

"The very same method is adopted by the soldiers and recruiting officers who stand up in motor cars to address the crowd. I remember how one of these, a soldier back from the front, turned suddenly to some tall lads in caps, and pointing to a woman with two children clinging to her, cried: 'For the women and children I am ready to go and fight again! But you, why should I go and risk my life for you?' In such manner a hundred pictures and mottoes, on every wall, clamor at the passerby.

Race of Practical Mystics

His conclusion is: "A slow, inartistic people (they themselves say unimaginative), impervious to the powers of eloquence, but to be moved profoundly by conviction and feeling—above all, a people with a strong sense of duty, who have made conscience the essence of their poetry and religion, and thus, although reacting chiefly to the facts of experience and reality—not forgetting that reality, the soul—are capable of a world of dreamy mysticism. By appealing to conscience, by stimulating its slow meditation on right and wrong, by means of a silent working of the mind, all English reforms have been accomplished."

Ex-Czar's Income of $50,000,000 a Year

The private domains of the Russian Imperial family comprised no less than 21,308,000 acres. From many sources—mines, mills, trading concerns, and so on—a clear profit is derived from these lands of more than $10,000,000 per annum. From the Imperial domains alone during the past century the Royal family received some $150,000,000.

Dog Carries the Big Drum

In most of the regiments in the Serbian army the big drum is carried by a dog. It is not, as in most other countries, slung in front of the man who plays it, but is placed upon a small two-wheeled cart drawn by a large dog, which has been so trained that it keeps it place even through the longest and most tedious marches.

Head of all Transport

MAJOR-GENERAL AND VICE-ADMIRAL SIR ERIC GEDDES, for whom was created the post of Director-General of Transport when he took over the supervision of all Britain's military and naval transport, by boat and rail and all other means. Previously he had reorganized the British military railways in France.

RIFLES OF LITTLE USE

It is constantly said, when the equipment of new armies is being discussed, that the numbers are limited by the output of rifles. That was the formula at the beginning of the war, and in 1915, when the Russians were driven back, we were told, says the Westminster Gazette, that there was only one rifle to every two soldiers, as if this was necessarily a fatal handicap. Yet, if you ask men who were in the fighting line in 1917, the conclusion you must come to is that the rifle is all but extinct as a weapon of war.

I asked a score, and not one of them had fired a shot in six months from a rifle in action. One had fired three shots at night as a sentry and several had used the bayonet. All of them seemed to regard the rifle as a handle for the bayonet. The sniper, who is a picked shot, of course, needs his rifle, and the sentry must have his; but with machine guns to do the firing, the mass of infantry use nothing but bayonets and hand-grenades; become, in fact, pikemen and bombardiers, as in the seventeenth century armies. And yet all the War Offices will go on turning out rifles by the scores of millions and declaring it is impossible to train soldiers without them.

CHILD WELFARE AND WAR

What Britain Lost Through Neglect by One Generation

The importance of infant welfare work at this stage in the nation's crisis is daily becoming more generally recognized by all classes of the community. For many years our public health authorities were sowing on what seemed very barren ground, but the outpouring of the nation's blood, the willing sacrifice of thousands of the best and most virile of the race, caused the apparently lost seed to germinate, and there are prospects of an abundant harvest. Had we looked after our infant life during the last forty years there ought to have been between the ages of 18 and 40 another 1,300,000 men available for the fighting forces. In other words, we have allowed, through our blindness, thousands of men to die in their infancy, male babies born often healthy and in all respects capable in due time, if proper attention had been given them, or if their home conditions had been better, of growing up and doing their full duty to the nation as our splendid sons to-day are doing in the battlefields of the world. Because of ignorance which is curable, because of improper conditions around them which are removable, thousands of these fellow citizens of ours whom we all "too late" wished we had saved, now die within twelve months of their arrival in the world.—W. H. Edmunds, in Journal of the Royal Sanitary Institute.

TORPEDOED HIS CHIEF

Impudence and Efficiency of British Youth in Navy

The men of the American destroyers have something to learn from our fellows as to the avoidance of submarines, says the Dundee Advertiser. Before the war we ourselves had need of teaching. At manoeuvres, up beside an admiral's ship popped a submersible. "I have taken the liberty of torpedoing you, sir," reported the lieutenant. "You be d——d!" sweetly replied the admiral. The lieutenant, under weight of commissatory metal, dived, to reappear on the other side. "Torpedoed you again, sir." "You be d——d again!" Damned and diving seven times, our man morally riddled his admiral's vessel, then homeward sailed rejoicing.

Blame it on His Health

Gazetted out of the Army through ill-health, William Townsend Milner, Ashen-grove, Wimbleton Park, was fined $75 for wearing officer's uniform and the D.S.O. without authority.

The Rev. E. L. Allwork, vicar of Epping, issued an appeal to his parish asking for women bell-ringers.

CANADIANS RUNNING ARABIAN GAUNTLET

River Pilots of Northern British Columbia Describe Navigation of Hospital Ship

From the glacier-fed waters of the Upper Fraser to the Garden of Eden is a far cry, but many of the adventurous steamboat men, scowmen and canoemen who blazed the trails of progress in the North and are remembered as the pioneers of Navigation in central British Columbia made the long trip to the plains of Arabia to play their part in the Empire's battles. Glowing tributes have been paid to the men of British Columbia so active in the inland Water Transport Service, and owing to the efficiency of the rivermen who have learned, through years of experience on the Fraser and the Skeena rivers, how best to master the problem of river transportation, special calls were sent out from Britain for more and more men trained in the Coast Province. The work on the northern rivers is similar to that on the Tigris and Euphrates, and a short period of acclimatization finds the rugged frontiersman of the Far West at home in the land of Caliphs.

"The Real Thing"

A former river captain, who spent several years on the streams of British Columbia, and became a member of the British expeditionary force in Mesopotamia, in writing home said: "I had some strange experiences while training in China, where I was attached to a training ship, but the adventures met with here on the Tigris and Euphrates are the real thing.

"I am second in command of a paddle hospital steamer. She is 232 feet in length by 60 feet beam, and is fitted with wireless. This river is only a canal. Above Amarah it becomes more like a river. There is about 30 miles of narrows and the bends are worse than Tientsin river; it is a cannon game to get around them. Above Amarah the river is wider and it is much the same as a crooked 'S.' continuously winding round from one direction to another, with moving shoals. The river begins to fall in June, and from July to November it is shallow. It is then hard to get four feet of water. We have to tie up to the bank of the river to allow down steamers to pass. Above Amarah we stick her nose into the bank so as to allow them to pass.

The Lower Tigris Desert

There is nothing in it. I take my watch in command. The first trip I sketched it out and got it into my head. We take up troops and bring down the wounded. This country you will have difficulty in picturing to your mind's eye. It is devoid of trees, houses, cultivation and everything, when 40 miles up. There is only a vast stretch of desert through which the Tigris winds. As for life, one can count on his fingers the Arabs he sees the whole journey up. It is the most desolate, barren waste of interminable flat land I have ever seen or shall see. It is like being at sea, with the differences that the sky meets the land instead of water." This writer's experiences apply to the period before the great British advance and the capture of Bagdad. Since then the stories of the transport men became vividly colored with adventure and gayety.

ZOUAVE TOOK GUARDSMEN

Quick Wits Did Not Desert Prisoner and Behold——!

One Zouave, who in peace times is a Parisian confectioner, while making his way across the sieveslike ground at Hurtebise Farm, fell among a patrol of Prussian Guardsmen and was captured. He did not lose his wits, although some of his captors treated him with the greatest brutality. He was ordered to the rear through a communication trench and was accompanied in that direction by a number of guardsmen. His captors, who had come on the scene only that morning, soon lost their way in the maze of twisting trenches and virtually left it to their prisoner to show them the way. Suddenly an idea of tricking them struck him, and instead of turning to the right he turned to the left, and soon he and his captors found themselves looking into the muzzles of Zouave rifles. The prisoner shouted, "Fire, my lads!" He threw himself on the ground and seized an abandoned rifle, with which he killed one of his captors. Most of the others surrendered.

Was Major at Twenty

Major Arthur Ellis, Toronto, left a brilliant record of service. He died of wounds in France. He was decorated by the Premier of France with the Croix de Guerre and with the decoration received his majority. He had been nearly two years at the front, went away as a sergeant and two months after landing was promoted to a lieutenancy. Then in November, 1916, he got a captaincy. He was but twenty on his last birthday. After the Somme fight he was the only officer of his company left.

FOUR MILES FROM EARTH

Immense Altitude at Which British Airmen Fight

The great heights at which airmen fight were mentioned in a lecture to the Aeronautical Society. "When this war began there was relatively little fighting in the air," he said, "and the average flying was do neat anything from 4,000 to 6,000 feet. Our airmen rarely go over the lines at less than 16,000 feet, and fighting has taken place certainly at altitudes of 21,000 and 22,000 feet."

Women Make Big Guns

Of 2,500,000 persons engaged on Government munition work in England nearly half a million were women. Scientific papers say the women have successfully undertaken the most difficult machining operations on big guns, such, for instance, as drilling ventholes in the breech-mechanism of 60-pounder howitzers.

Costers' Savings

A couple of costers once took a fish basket into the General Post Office, London, from which they produced $1,937.50. This represented the savings of their soldier son, and they wished to invest the whole sum in War Loan.

The Russian Drive Continues Unchecked
Thousands More Prisoners Were Taken

NO LET-UP IN NEW DRIVE
RUSSIANS PURSUING ENEMY

To-day's Official Statement Reports Capture of 6300 More Prisoners in Second Day of Great Offensive---Important Towns Are Regained by Russians and German Reinforcements Arriving to Aid the Austrians Are Unable to Stop the Russian Advance.

A SUMMARY OF TO-DAY'S WAR CABLES

PETROGRAD, July 3.—Russia's victorious forces, under General Brussiloff and with the inspiration of Kerensky continue to pursue the retreating and disorganized Austrians in the direction of Lemberg. Additional German reinforcements ordered by Hindenburg have arrived to aid the Austrians, but seem unable to stop the Russian sweep. This morning's reports tell of thousands more prisoners and many guns taken, and also several important towns are again in Russian lines.

Six thousand three hundred prisoners, twenty-one guns and six machine guns with more ground gained was the result of the continued Russian offensive announced to-day by the War Office. "In the direction of Zolochev there was a successful continuation of our offensive," the statement said. These prisoners were all taken yesterday and are in addition to the 10,000 captured in the first twenty-four hours of General Brussiloff's drive. In addition to-day's statement reported 2,200 Teutons taken southeast of Brezezany on Sunday. A number of mine throwers were in the booty captured around Zolochov.

The two cities mentioned, Brzezany and Zolochex are in the same sector in which Brussiloff made initial drive. The continuance of the offensive here was taken to mean that the enemy lines have been penetrated and the enemy flanked in several places. Official despatches declared that the count of prisoners will undoubtedly go higher than twenty thousand.

PARIS, July 3.—Continued counter-attacks made by the Germans on the Aisne front, on both sides of Ailles-Paissy Road, were so badly punished by the French that the Germans discontinued them this morning and made their attempts in the direcion of Hill 304 and Avocourt Wood, where they were also repulsed.

"At six p.m. Monday along the lines from Ailles to Paissy the enemy resumed his bombardment and violently and forcefully attacked the trenches which French forces retook yesterday," the statement said. "A heavy desperate struggle throughout the night ensued, but all positions were maintained.

"On the left bank of the Meuse there was intense artillery firing at midnight in the sector embraced by Hill 304 and Avocourt Wood. At 2:30 a.m. on a front of 500 yards in the southeast corner of the wood, enemy waves started out of the trenches but in our artillery fire did not reach our lines.

"In the Champagne, the French forces blew up an enemy blockhouse."

"The Ailles-Paissy sector is one in which the Germans have twice before attacked in powerful drives during the past ten days. The front here lies directly south of Leon where the French command of dominating positions opens up the valley of the River Lette. Hill 304 is northwest of Verdun where last week's German drive netted them a scant foothold.

(By William G. Shepherd, U.P. Staff Correspondent.)

PETROGRAD, July 3.—Six weeks ago the Teutons knew of and made ready for the Russians' great offensive starting July 1, and yet to-day the army of Free Russia was forging ahead through several breaks in the Austrian line. Some of the twenty thousand prisoners already taken in this offensive were authority for the statement that it was common knowledge among the Teutons that Russia would begin to fight July 1. The perfection of the German espionage system is thus strikingly illustrated, since very few Russians knew of the plans. That it was so completely successful, despite preparations by the enemy to defeat it, is a further tribute to Kerensky's genius in inspiring the soldiers to fight as they never fought before.

War Office despatches to-day showed the troops still victoriously advancing through pierced sections of the line. Just before the offensive opened, on General Brussiloff's orders every soldier in the section where it was planned to strike was advised of the campaign. Any one declining to advance was notified he would be regarded as a traitor. There were no traitors. All Petrograd rejoiced today at the success so far achieved, and the promises of further victories. The temper of the crowds in Petrograd was illustrated by the rough treatment accorded four street orators who attempted to address the people against the Russian offensive. The speakers were dragged down and severely beaten by the crowd. Then they were arrested as spies.

BERLIN, via London, July 3. — Strong Russian attacks broke down with heavy losses, declared to-day's official statement. "With the assistance of reserves we made the enemy halt." On the western front fighting, the statement said: "A French attempt to recapture lost trenches around Labovelle and on the left bank of the Meuse broke down."

WASHINGTON, July 3. — One German submarine was sunk and one captured by American and British warships during last week.

The captured U-boat was taken to a British port. No other details were contained in the report.

PTE. HERB. NICHOLLS.
Formerly of the 93rd Battalion, who is reported dangerously wounded.

93RD MAN IS WOUNDED

Pte. Herbert Nicholls Dangerously Hurt Ottawa Reported—Millbrook and Hastings Men Also in the Casualty List

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

WOUNDED.

Pte. Herb. Nicholls, late of the 93rd Battalion, Charlotte St.

Pte. A. Thorne, late of the 136th Battalion, Millbrook.

Lance Corporal R. R. Richardson, late of the 139th Batt., Hastings.

PTE. HERB. NICHOLLS.

Mrs. Maud Nicholls, 272 Charlotte street, has received official word from Ottawa that her son, Pte. Herbert Nicholls, who enlisted in the spring of 1916, with the 93rd Battalion, is reported dangerously wounded and admitted to No. 7 Casualty Clearing Station on June 30th. Pte. Nicholls went overseas with Lieut. Col. Johnston's unit and crossed to France with a draft to another Canadian battalion.

PTE. A. THORNE.

Pte. A. Thorne, of Millbrook, who enlisted in the 136th Port Hope battalion and went overseas with that unit is officially reported wounded. Pte. Thorne was transferred to another Canadian battalion after going to England with the 136th.

LANCE CORP. R. R. RICHARDSON.

Lance Corp. R. R. Richardson, of Hastings is officially reported wounded. Lance Corp. Richardson enlisted in the 139th battalion and after going overseas with the Cobourg unit was transferred to another battalion in France.

The many friends in the city who have so kindly enquired for Pte. H. B. Boorman will be glad to know that his mother received a letter from him yesterday to say how thankful he was, that although wounded in right leg and side by shrapnel, he was picked up at once by their stretcher-bearers and given every attention. When he wrote he was resting at a comfortable hospital.

All members of the Peterborough Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association are reminded of the semi annual meeting of the Branch, which will be held to-night, in the Barrie Building. A full attendance of members is requested, as business of importance is to come up.

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS.

Police Constable Arthur Blade has received an interesting letter from Walter ("Jeddy") Miller, who went overseas with the 93rd, and has been at the front with the 4th Canadians.

Writing on June 3rd, the Peterboro boy says: "I had four of my section put out before we got to the top to go over on the 9th of April, and we lost one-half of our platoon that day. Doug. Loomis was made sergeant as soon as we came out, and I am one myself, so we are not doing bad. Ernie Abraham got the military medal and has been made a full corporal. There are only some seven or eight of us now left in the 4th. I am down at the first army school of musketry instruction for ten days, and will be here until Friday or Saturday I think. There are about 25 Canucks, and all the rest are Imperial troops.

P. C. Blade has also had a letter from Sergt. George Cookman, formerly of the local police force, who went

SEVERELY BURNED BY USING METHYLATED SPIRITS IN STOVE

Thought It Was Coal Oil and Mrs. Alex. Heron Dashed Some on the Breakfast Fire

TAKEN TO HOSPITAL

Mistaking a can of methylated spirits for the coal oil container, Mrs. Alexander Heron, 384 George street, used some of it to speed up the Sunday morning fire, and in the smothering blaze that leaped up was dangerously burned.

The combustion was so instantaneous and powerful that it almost blew up the stove. Mrs. Heron sustained severe burns about the hands, face and waist. She was removed to the Nicholls Hospital, where it was reported to-day that her condition showed some improvement. Dr. Malcolm McCulloch is attending her.

Rioting Continues In St. Louis

Casualties Estimated at Seven Hundred Including One Hundred Dead

Special to Examiner:

ST. LOUIS, Mo., July 3.—Rioting and burning continues in isolated parts of East St. Louis. Troops are instructed to shoot to kill either negroes or whites who start rioting. The Chief of Police this afternoon estimates seven hundred casualties, including one hundred dead, mostly negroes. The Chamber of Commerce this morning decided to appeal to the Governor and President Wilson for a declaration of martial law at once.

Fine Programme

Dominion Day programme at the "Strand" was the subject of much favourable comment. The five-part play, "Mayblossom," a Southern drama of the early sixties, in which Miss Pearl White, the famous film star takes the lead, was particularly fine. The beautiful coloring of this film is said to be the work of convalescent French soldiers. The same programme will be again shown this evening.

NASSAU LODGE PICNIC.

Fine Outing to South Beach—Had a Capacity Crowd.

Nassau Lodge, L.O.L., scored again yesterday in their annual outing to South Beach. The Geneva carried a full complimen' of passengers, and had to turn back quite a number. The journey was made in good time and was entirely successful, and enjoyed by the large crowd that made the trip.

Conscription Issue May Be Delayed

Special to Examiner:

OTTAWA, July 3.—The much debated Conscription Bill is not on the order paper of the Commons' programme for to-day, owing to technicalities resulting from lack of a quorum when the Commons adjourned for the week-end on Friday. It is feared this morning that opponents of the bill may take advantage of the situation to block, or at least indefinitely postpone, consideration of the bill.

POLICE COURT

John H. Burrans and Esperd Landry were each fined $10 for a week-end drunk when they appeared before Magistrate Rush this morning.

A BIG DAY

The holiday crowds were counted in the fare boxes of the Street Railway this morning. Some of the men expected record receipts.

FUNERAL OF MRS. TIGHE

The funeral of the late Mrs. Tighe, 284 Roger street, East City took place this afternoon. A short private service was conducted at the house, followed by a service at St. Luke's Church, before proceeding to the Little Lake cemetery for interment. The funeral was largely attended.

The last mortal remains of Evelyn, the little 11-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. K. Kennedy, 521 Reid street were laid at rest yesterday afternoon at the Little Lake cemetery.

BIRTH.

PRIMEAU.—To Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Primeau, 32 Cricket Place, on June 20, a son.

DONAGHUE.—In Peterborough on Tuesday, July 3rd, 1917 the wife of Mr. J. T. Donaghue, 241 Rubidge street of a daughter.

Confederation's 50th Anniversary Loyally Celebrated in Peterboro'

THANKS EXTENDED

The Committee of the Greater Peterborough Association and the Ladies of the Peterborough Health Association desire to heartily thank all those who assisted in carrying out the day's programme of events at the Exhibition Grounds yesterday, which was such a financial success. This includes the merchants who kindly contributed to the prize list and all the officials in connection with the various sports and nurses, doctors and judges in connection with the Baby contest, Mr. Denham of the Quaker Oats for the loan of the trucks, the Band, and all those who in any way helped to make the day a success.

First Day's Drive Netted The Russians Over 10,000 Prisoners

Capture of Koniuchy and Other Strongly Fortified Positions With Thousands of Captives, the First Fruits of New Russian Offensive in Eastern Galicia, Inspired by Minister of War Kerensky.

LONDON, July 2.—Prisoners exceeding 10,000 and the capture of the village of Koniuchy and strongly fortified positions southwest of Brezezany are the first fruits of the new offensive movement of the Russian forces in Eastern Galicia. North of Koniuchy the Russians have attacked, and fresh battles are in progress.

Minister of War Kerensky personally led the Russian revolutionary army in its forward movement, and in a message to Premier Lvoff says that the offensive "proved to Russia and the entire world its fidelity to the revolution and its love for liberty and country."

The Premier has authorized Minister Kerensky to give the regiments which participated in the fighting of July 1 red revolutionary flags and the name "Regiments, July 1."

LED BY WAR MINISTER.

A despatch from Petrograd says:

"The brilliant advance, the news of which has sent a wave of rejoicing throughout all Russia, was led by War Minister Kerensky in person.

"For the last four days the War Minister has been continuously at the front, spending every effort to urge the troops to advance. He finally rode to the front-line trenches, and placing himself at the head of the troops, gave the order to advance.

"The spectacle of the popular War Minister on the firing line accomplished what oratory had failed to do, and the Russian line swept forward into the German trenches."

Discussing the Russian victory the Times says:

"The Russian revolutionary army has won its first victory in the field. Responding to the appeal of patriotism, which Kerensky addressed to the army, it assaulted one of the strongest of the enemy's positions in Galicia, and as the first result has captured 10,000 prisoners.

BATTLE ONLY BEGUN.

"The battle has apparently only begun. Prisoners continue to come in. The Germans and Turks are making formidable counter-attacks, from which as yet they can claim no success. Important positions continue to change hands, and the fighting is of a desperate character. The losses of the assaulting troops are admittedly severe, but the Germans unconsciously bear witness to the devoted loyalty of the soldiers of the revolution. Russian losses, they say, surpass any measure hitherto known, and some units have entirely disappeared.

"The object of the attack is Brzezany, a fortified position of immense strength on the Zlota Lipa. As the enemy hold the high positions before the town the assault was on the two flanks. Ten miles northeast the Russians carried the village of Koniuchy. After two days' bombardment, recalling the intensity of the great artillery preparations on the western front, Berlin speaks of the German positions being reduced to a crater field. On the other flank the offensive was taken against the hills to the southwest of Brzezany. Though Petrograd does not claim any great progress, 1,700 prisoners were taken here. The Germans have regained some of the positions, but do not mention the capture of prisoners on any part of the battlefield. Much heavy fighting lies before the Russians before they can take Brzezany. This place is 50 miles from Lemberg—the Russians are nowhere nearer the Galician capital — and is protected by a lake and deep defiles of the Zlota Lipa and high hills reaching 1,300 feet east and south. When Count Bothmer fell back here last summer after a stubborn defence of the Stripa line he established himself on all the high ground where he commands the Russian positions at Koniuchy. The Russians still have many of these higher positions before them before they reach the Zlota Dipa, which is itself a formidable barrier, as the stream is in a deep cleft of hills, like most of the tributaries of the Dniester in this part of Galicia. After the Austrian breakdown last year the Germans reconstituted their army and entrusted these key positions largely to their own troops and Turks, who have held them since. Almost the last success of Brussiloff's offensive was won at this point before even Roumania turned the attention to battle in another field."

MOST CHEERFUL NEWS.

The resumption of the Russian offensive is the most cheerful news the British have had for some weeks. References in recent German official communications to the activity of the Russians have given hope that something really serious was about to occur, but the public was hardly prepared for such immediate successful results, as it was thought that it would take a few days for the artillery to destroy the Austro-German defences, which were under construction for so many months.

The scene of the Russian success, between the Stripa and Zlota Lipa Rivers, was the battle ground of much heavy fighting after Gen. Brussiloff's offensive of a year ago, Koniuchy being on the latter river.

This, like the other demonstrations, is in the direction of Lemberg, the capture of which would be of the greatest strategic and political importance. Gen. Brussiloff apparently has resumed his concentric manoeuvre, which was interrupted by the advent of winter and then by the revolution.

The present offensive is the first undertaken on any front by Russian forces since the revolution. The last heavy fighting in this region was in the fall of 1916, when the Russian army made a series of violent attacks and reached the outskirts of Halicz, the key to Lemberg.

Perfect Weather Conditions Helped to Make Yesterday's Demonstration a Huge Success—War Veterans and Veterans of 1866 a Feature of Morning Parade —Big Programme in the Afternoon.

ADDRESSES WERE GIVEN

Dominion Day, the fiftieth anniversary of confederation was loyally celebrated by the people of Peterborough yesterday. The programme arranged by the Greater Peterborough Association and the military and civic authorities was most successfully carried out and it is a pleasure to be able to state that as a result of the afternoon's event at Exhibition Park the Health Association will realize a substantial sum—in the neighborhood of $1,000. The weather conditions were perfect and many visitors from the surrounding district came into the city to participate in the events the influx, about balancing the rush to the river and lake resorts which took many Peterborough people out of town for the day.

From early morning thousands of the patriotic citizens collected on the gaily decorated streets for the parade, which met at the Armouries. It was decidedly not a large procession, but it was one to be proud of, featured by the presence of the Veterans of '66, followed by the little band of Great War Veterans and other returned soldiers. An outstanding feature of the parade was the impressive silence of the crowd whose feelings as the khaki clad heroes passed down the street were too deep for expression in mere shouts of applause. Following the heroes came the 57th Band, the representatives of the City Council, School Board, Board of Trade, etc., Trades and Labour Council, the Collegiate Cadets and lastly, after the Woodmen of the World's contribution, a number of beautifully decorated automobiles. The parade after touring the principal streets of the city ended at Central Park, where an enthusiastic crowd awaited the speeches from His Worship, the Mayor, Mr. Gillespie, Judge Huycke, J. J. Hartley, Captain Burnham and Colonel Johnston.

MAYOR DUFFUS.

His Worship Mayor Duffus gave the following address:

Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers and Men, Ladies and Gentemen:

Early last week we received word from the Government and particularly from the Militia Department, that they desired us to hold in addition to other demonstrations, a military parade, and by kind permission of Lt.-Colonel Walker, Officer Commanding, we at once got up this splendid parade and demonstration.

On behalf of the O.C., on behalf of my colleagues and myself, I desire to express my sincere thanks for your interest and assistance, without which it could not have been a success.

Many times since the war broke out we have heard it said that but for the men in uniform, other than those who have friends enlisted, we would not know a war was on. However, having regard to the fact that on Canada's national holiday in years gone by we have seen from one thou-

DAYLIGHT SAVING.

In these days of need for saving every sort of resources, there is demand for saving daylight, though in reality the proposal is more like using daylight. The propodal, in its general features, is moving forward the hands of the clock at the beginning of the summer months, so that the working day will begin an hour earlier. A bill has been passed in the United States providing for waking up the country an hour earlier, beginning with April, 1918, and ending the last Sunday in September. It is stated, that in Great Britain, where daylight saving is in force, as a state measure, it is working very successfully, not only in facilitating work in factories, but in actual saving of many resources. In the United States, preliminary trials in factories, have shown its benefits and popularity. It is claimed to increase the efficiency of the men, and that, which is one of its chief recommendations in these times of greater production, it gives the worker an extra hour to till his special vacant lot or home garden. Of course he might spend the earlier morning hour in his garden, but he would go to work tired, and be less efficient and less comfortable during working hours. But the average workman is human like the rest of us, and thinks a good deal of himself and his interests. In the evening the extra hour will be a rest, a welcome change, and in that his work is for himself and his family he won't feel it. We have proverbial proof of this—"Labour is light, where love pays," and Shakspere says "the labour we delight in physics pain." Labour becomes a pleasure when it is done for those we love—and most of us love ourselves best. This is one of the matter-of-fact justifications of daylight saving. There is an aesthetic side. There is no more appealing pleasure than being awake, abroad and alive in the early hours of a glorious summer morning, to see nature waking from its sleep, the bland and gratiful airs awaking to soothe the swelter of the day; the flowers and grass sparkling with the dew of night, the birds all a-tune, and every aspect and act of nature at its loveliest. A girl's "beauty sleep" is best taken by being awake in the early morning, and we all miss the brightest and best hours of the summer day by lying dead to the world in comparatively stiffling rooms, while the beautiful world outside offers a charm that nothing else in the world is like. We can have daylight saving by law, but we can have daylight saving every hour of the day by doing our daily tasks, especially the tasks that the needs and duties of this war present, promptly and faithfully.

"Sweets to the sweet," is shown by the sweets of the office of Lt.-Governor of New Brunswick going to Ganong, the builder of "Ganong's chocolates." (advt., free.)

E PLURIBUS UNUM.

To-morrow, July 4th, the United States will celebrate the anniversary of her independence, but in a new way, in a new spirit. In other years and till recent days, there was a good deal of tail-twisting of the British Lion, but now the lion and the lamb, the eagle, are at one—one in the great fight for liberty. Instead of burning meaningless powder in squibs and rockets, the United States celebrates with shot and shell, an epoch of liberty won. Soldiers representing the United States, will be burning powder to-morrow in France to help the liberty of the world. British "Tommies," and Yankee "Sammies," as the soldiers of our latest and biggest ally are called, will be fighting shoulder to shoulder in the name and for the cause of liberty. The United States can, with good warrant, celebrate her Independence Day with right good will and justification. This day, and the war in which it comes, have given new meaning to words. Independence Day finds the United States finding out that they are not independent, in the broadest and highest meaning of the word—that the world is a big brotherhood, interdependent, not independent in any element. True nationhood is founded upon the brotherhood of man, and no political entity or population group is independent of each of all the rest. When humanity is menaced in a manner to destroy the idea and fact a happy and free humanity, humanity must unite to defend its rights.

The "Fourh of July" finds the United States with a new realization of her duty to the world, and nobly is she measuring up to her new found sense of responsibility. To employ a colloquial metaphor that had origin in the United States, that country is "going the whole hog." Her manhood, many as the sea-shore sands, her money, of uncountable amount, her immense resources, the best minds of her statesmanship, all she has, mobilized and placed at the disposal of humanity in its fight for freedom. To-morrow, the old sores that were won't to be opened on the glorious Fourth, will be hidden, if not forgotten. The 'scream of the eagle will be one of menace to the might that challenges the supremacy of right in the affairs of men. The flag will wave with a new flourish; it will symbolize the fact tha Uncle Sam is in the fight "with both feet". The village orator who was wont to declaim patriotic platitudes under its "glorious folds" will, instead, perhaps, be to-morrow following its advancing gleam in the smoke of the battlefront. History repeats itself in a glorified form. The "revolution," the "Fourth of July" signalizes, witnesses to-morrow, to a greater revolution—the young giant having forsaken the aloofness of its splendid isolation —marching arm in arm, foot to foot, and shoulder to shoulder with the "effete monarchies" of Europe—a logical revolution for the eternal principles of decomocracy are the same, whether the embodied champion ship is under the liberty cap or the crown of the monarch.

E pluribus unum—many in one—comes tremendously pat now, to-morrow and after, with the United States motto applying to the league of half a score of the greatest nations of the world—one in the fight for liberty and humanity. "The star-spangled banner, long may it wave" over a great people, who have cast in their lot with, and espoused with heart and hand, the cause that involves the liberty and happiness of the human race.

Wednesday, July 4th, is "The Fourth of July." Wouldn't it be a charming and gracious thing for our townspeople to hang out their flags, in honour of Uncle Sam's "Glorious Fourth!"

T.A.S. Picnic Was Entire Success

Everything Combined to Make it An Enjoyable Event and Crowds Attended

The annual T.A.S. picnic shared largely in the success that was common to all the holiday events. The attendance was all that could have been expected and everybody reported an enjoyable time. Many citizens visited both the picnic and the celebration at the Exhibition Park. In fact crowds moved steadily to and from the T.A.S. Park from early morning until evening. The grounds were in fine condition, and the attractions up to previous standards. A section of the 57th Regimental band provided a very acceptable programme during the afternoon. The meals served were of a high order, and in fact, every detail of the arrangements fitted into the general scheme without a hitch. A fish-pond gave a very good account of itself, and the ladies who conducted it wish to thank all those who contributed to it. Among the clergy present were Bishop O'Brien, Rev. Dr. Kehoe of St. Augustine's Seminary, Rev. Dean McColl, Rev. C. J. Phelan, Rev. J. J. O'Brien, Rev. Peter McGuire of Ennismore, Rev. Father Meagher of Lakefield, and others. The committee under the supervision of Rev. Father Phelan, left nothing undone, and graced with fine weather, achieved a success that compared favourably with the preceding picnics. The list of sports resulted as follows:

100 yards open—1, J. McMartin; 2, W. O'Connell.

200 yards—1, McMartin; 2, O'Connell.

High jump—1, McMartin; 2, W. Hatrick.

Running broad jump—1, Heffernan; 2, Hatrick.

Running hop, step and jump—1, Hatrick; 2, Heffernan.

100 yards, men over 45 years—1, W. Heffernan; 2, Cronin.

Putting the shot—1, O'Connell; 2, Canniff.

The ladies in charge of the dining tables and booths were indefatigable, and to them the society is indebted for their assistance. Appreciation is extended to all those who helped make the picnic a success, and whose co-operation was available.

THE Dominion of Canada is celebrating the bi-centenary of Confederation. But what is Confederation? Within the last half century Canada has been confederated at least twice: once when her scattered provinces were united politically to form the Dominion, and again when the builders of the first transcontinental flung a line of steel across the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

What was Canada before Confederation? It was a land of vast distances, more or less unmapped, and practically unexplored west of the Great Lakes or east of the Rocky Mountains. When the late Sir Charles Tupper was High Commissioner of Canada in London, just a quarter of a century ago, he delivered an address at St. Petersburg, before the International Railway Congress. He described how Canada, prior to 1867, consisted of three groups of provinces: the Maritime Provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, and British Columbia. These three groups were isolated physically as well as politically.

The Maritime Provinces were separated from "Canada" by a wilderness of forest and flood hundreds of miles wide. Canada, in the west, was separated from British Columbia by a thousand miles of forest, a thousand miles of prairie land, and a chain of mountains five hundred miles wide. Which was the real confederation—the one that brought the representatives of the three groups of provinces together in Parliament, or the three thousand miles of steel rails which alone made the political union worth having?

Confederation was first, last and all the time a problem of transportation. British Columbia agreed to come in if it got a railway from the western limit of "Canada" to the Pacific Coast and it got the Canadian Pacific.

The political confederation of Canada began in 1841, when Ontario and Quebec, which had been separated in 1791, were re-united. On July 1st, 1867, Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were united as the Dominion of Canada—the first Federal union in the British Empire. The Prairie Provinces were bought for £300,000 in 1870. British Columbia joined the union in 1871, and Prince Edward Island in 1873, and the inclusion of Newfoundland is more probable every day.

Who made modern Canada by making the confederation of 1867? Certainly, no one man. Sir John Macdonald has been styled the Maker of Canada, but, on the other hand, Sir Charles Tupper declared a few years before his death that without Sir George Etienne Cartier there would have been no confederation. At the first interprovincial conference, held at Quebec in 1864, there were thirty-three representatives present, and these have been termed the Fathers of Confederation.

But that was not by any means the origin of the project. As far back as 1690, Sir Francis Nicholson proposed a confederation of all the Anglo-American colonies, and the idea was revived every few years subsequent. To the Hon. A. T. Galt belongs the honor of having first advocated it in Parliament. That was in 1858, and his speech made a tremendous impression all over the country. Confederation was formally adopted as part of the programme of the Cartier Government in 1858, in the following terms:

"The expediency of a federal union of the North American Provinces will be anxiously considered, and communications with the Home Government and the Lower Provinces will be entered into on this subject."

Confederation owes its political success to the men at Ottawa. Its economic success is due to the railway men of Montreal, Mountstephen, Strathcona, R. B. Angus, Van Horne, Shaughnessy, who by linking the steel rails across the continent, linked up the trade between the east and west and annihilated distance. Quebec to-day sells 70% of its manufactures, with the exception of army supplies, west of Winnipeg, and the western prairies provide the wheat for the bread of the east. Moreover, the railway itself has new feeders in its fleets on both Atlantic and Pacific, which link China and Japan through Canada with the ports of Great Britain. Canada is now on the highway of trafic round the world, instead of being merely an outpost of the Empire.

Canada: "Here's your Empire route a right of way whose value to compute will tax the prophets."

Britannia: "Links me closer still with all my wondering sons who tame and till the world's wild wastes, and throng each paradise. In tropic seas or under southern skies, see, Halifax, Vancouver, Sydney, set fresh steps upon a path whose promise yet even ourselves have hardly measured. Lo, far China brought within a moon or so of tea-devonring London. Here it lies, the way for men and mails and merchandise striking athwart your sea-dividing sweep of land; one iron road from deep to deep—well thought well done."—(From Punch, Oct. 15, 1887.)

MILITARY ROADS IN FRANCE WILL SERVE IN TIMES OF PEACE

Hundreds of miles of the smooth white macadam roads of Northern France will remain for many years after the war as a real memorial to the devastated towns which the Germans left in ruins after their retreat this spring.

All over Northern France the roads are being widened and re-surfaced with stone and rubble taken from the wrecked houses of Peronne, Albert, Arras, and countless other ruined towns and villages. As fast as the British soldiers clear away the debris of the towns it is piled into lorries and distributed in heaps along the main roads. There German prisoners toil the day long pounding it into level patches which the great steam rollers, many of them bearing familiar American names, grind quickly into smooth macadam for the business of transport.

The brick and stone of these old buildings make a good road material as could be obtained anywhere, and the work of the German dynamiter has been so thorough that much of it is crushed fine enough to need no further preparation.

The roads of Northern France were always excellent, but they were never better than to-day. The only complaint travellers had against them in the old days was that the paved strip in the centre was too narrow. This complaint cannot be made after the British highway plans have been completed, for all the main highways will be macadamed to a width permitting three broad-gauge lorries to run abreast, and even the by-ways will have a paved surface wide enough to allow traffic to pass easily at any point.

Excessive dustiness is the only fault of the roads to-day, for war economics will not permit the use of precious oil on roadways.

There is little need anywhere in this district for straightening roads or altering routes, because the roads of Northern France mostly run straight as an arrow's flight. Most of the great highways were laid out in Napoleon's time by military surveyors, and their strategic value and importance has always been kept primarily in mind by the French government.—War Correspondence.

TURKS TRYING TO ANNIHILATE TWO RACES

Armenians and Syrians the Refugee Peoples of Western Asia Are Sadly in Need of Assistance--Have Reached the Lowest Depth of Misery, Want and Woe.

For six hundred years two Christian races of Western Asia—the Armenians and Syrians—have been the prey of the Mohammedan Turks. Persecution has been more or less constant. At intervals and on special occasions the Turks have resorted to oppression, rapine and murder, until it is little less than a miracle that their victims still survive at all.

Not only have they survived, but they have preserved social, racial, and religious integrity. Throughout the Turkish Empire it was the people of these two races who became the backbone of the nation. They were the farmers, mechanics, merchants, lawyers, doctors and bankers, while the people dominant in numbers and authority were indolent, uneducated and unprogressive. Almost invariably it was the Armenians and Syrians who came, eager-eyed, to the schools for education, who made the most of every advantage offered them.

While the religious intolerance of the Turk often incited him to deeds of wickedness, and cupidity not infrequently led individuals to follow the example of unscrupulous and rapacious government officials in acts of tyranny and oppression, political motives have been proved by government investigation to be wholly the reason for atrocities committed during the present war. "Turkey for the Turks" became a watchword which led many to believe it possible for Turkey to rid herself, once for all, of those who were so provokingly prosperous, and who were, when harassed, able to secure sympathy from foreign powers, and thus create political dangers.

The plan and desire were to exterminate the Armenians and Syrians, after which it was believed all other foreigners as well could be driven out. How well their programme is succeeding may be judged when we know that the number of Armenians and Syrians who have lost their lives as a direct result of the persecutions and atrocities of the present war is variously estimated at from one to two million. The number of these people now refugees in Turkey, Russian Caucasus, Mesopotamia, Egypt and Salonika who are wholly dependent upon American charity to keep them from starvation is conservatively estimated at two million.

So it came about that this once-thriving and prosperous population, innocent, unoffending, industrious, possessed of homes, of business property, farms and gardens; living in comfort and, in many cases, in affluence, were suddenly stripped of all possessions, driven from their homes, and left to wander in the interior, or to find such livelihood as they can obtain in places already overcrowded and among people to whom they are strangers, and where their coming seriously complicates an already well-nigh insoluble food problem. Not Belgium, Serbia, nor Poland has suffered as the Armenians and Syrians have suffered. They have reached the lowest depth of misery, want and woe. Think of peoples such as these reduced to the point of devouring grass or locusts gathered in handfuls, raw and without even salt, as authentic reports prove to have been the case. "They catch stray dogs," cables one relief worker, "and, like savages, pounce upon dead animals, whose flesh they eat eagerly and without cooking."

The clothing problem, too, is desperately acute. Relief agents have been able to provide only the latest refugees with clothes, while those who have been some time in the new lands are in tatters with little prospect of replenishing. The war has ended so many industries that employment is becoming more and more scarce. Women are walking twenty-five miles for wool to spin.

From Alexandropol comes a touching story of the poor mothers who have had to tear up their own meager clothing to make swaddling clothes for their new-born babies. It is one of the responsibilities of the women workers to search out these mothers and give them $5.00, with a blanket for the little one. Another work which they have in charge is that of listing the fatherless children, to whom we make a monthly grant of $2.00.

These are but a few instances of what horrible conditions prevail over an appallingly large area. The problem of relief is tremendous, but it is going ahead—if slowly, still with an increasing momentum. Funds and more funds are needed, and must be provided from private charity for these people can cherish no hope of grants-in-aid or government subsidies such as the dispossessed in other lands enjoy to a greater or less degree. First of all, the refugees must be saved from starvation and given shelter. Then, employment should be provided so that they may be self-supporting, and not become habitual "charity patients."

Channels for relief distribution are still open, in spite of erroneous reports to the contrary, and it is believed they will remain open. Contributions may be sent through the local Committee, or to Charles R. Crane, treasurer, American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

COMING TO PETERBOROUGH.

Prof. Dorenwend of Toronto, the originator of the celebrated patent hair-structures, for men and women, will be at the Hotel Empress, Peterborough, on Saturday, July 7th, with a special new display of transformations, pompadours, self-dressing waves, switches for ladies and toupees and wigs for men, who are bald. Anyone requiring anything in this line is invited to call at the hotel on day of visit, when a demonstration will be given free of charge.

Two Germans Live After 13,000 Feet Drop With Zepp

LONDON, June 29.—When the British recently brought down a zeppelin on the East Anglian coast they captured two members of the crew, who, in a miraculous manner, escaped death as the airship plunged to earth. This fact was made known to the newspapers by the admiralty.

One of the prisoners is an officer and the other a private. The private sustained broken legs in the fall of the airship, but is recovering. His companion escaped virtually unscathed. The zeppelin fell from a height of 13,000 feet and was in flames when it reached the ground. How the two Germans escaped death cannot be accounted for.

WILL SILK REPLACE COTTON

A Southern banker who is now an officer of a large New York City bank suggested yesterday that silk might soon replace cotton if the price of the latter continued its sensational advance. Spot cotton sold yesterday at 26.95 cents a pound, or $154.75 a bale. The banker pointed out that inasmuch as raw cotton was selling at more than double the price current this time last year, it was reasonable to suppose that cotton wearing apparel would go up in price accordingly, and perhaps a little more, in view of the increased cost of labor and other expenses of manufacture. In the circumstances he thought that the difference in price of a silk shirt and a cotton shirt would become so small relatively that the usual buyers of cotton shirts would no longer be an indication of prosperity. It was also suggested that the farmers of the South would make so much money in selling their product at record high prices that they would probably be the first to take to silk in place of cotton.

THE MAN OVERSEAS WHO CAN'T REVERT

Plight of Junior Officers Who Took Canadian Battalions to England

LONDON, June 12.—England contains many dissatisfied Canadian officers to-day, and no doubt many have arrived in Canada with grievances. These are the senior officers, who, there being no vacancies for them, have under the new more stringently enforced regulations, either to revert to lieutenancies or go home.

It does seem hard, and it is hard that captains, majors and lieutenant-colonels who have recruited enthusiastically in Canada, and rallied thousands of men to the colours, should on arrival find themselves in such plight. Many a colonel has told me his story. After gathering what he deemed with proper pride "one of the finest battalions in Canada" about him, spent much of his own hard cash on it, learned to know his men personally, and generally put his whole soul into the work, he is told that the battalion must be broken up for drafts, and stands broken-heartedly by as company after company is sent off to reinforce other regiments.

"AND NO PLACE TO GO."

As for himself, failing some job at the base, there is only one finale. After a brief sojourn in England, perhaps a two-weeks' tour of the front, if he be lucky, and a taste of the real thing in the trenches, he must go home. A lieutenant-colonel cannot become a subaltern.

With the majors it is scarcely less hard. A lieutenancy is no small step down in pay, and for married men with families a positive financial barrier forbids the reversion. Majors, too, are generally on the elderly side for lieutenant's work. So they, too, unless one of the rare base jobs comes their way, must, after an interval, take ship back to Canada.

For captains there is less excuse. Most of them are youthful enough for subaltern duties, though in the case of captain with families the consequent reduction in pay is also a serious matter.

WOULD REVERT TO FIGHT.

"They put it up to me," declared a Toronto captain not long over with a battalion which has been broken up. "They told me I would have to revert to lieutenant or go home. Well, I told them that I would revert if they could assure me that I would be sent to France at once, but they couldn't. Now, scores of lieutenant's are waiting to go over, and some have been waiting months. I guess I will go home. I can't afford the long reduction in pay." This captain is a young married man with a wife and two children.

HARD TO GO BACK HOME

"Just picture me going back to Canada, back to the town where I recruited a battalion, and facing the mothers whose sons they thought would be under me at the front! What am I to tell these people? What will they think of me for not going to France? Such was the lament of one lieutenant-colonel I talked to. A major with a family, a school teacher, who works hard for his living, is another example. Financial reasons make it impossible for this man to revert. And yet he hates to return to his home town and be upbraided as a slacker. These are examples. Many of these officers deserve sympathy. And yet surely at this late date they must have known what was likely to be their fate. For long past almost every new battalion has been broken up and its senior officers perforce stranded.

SCORES OF LIEUTENANT...

Heavy as have been the officer casualties at times, the Canadian Army Corps has never lacked a surplus. Scores of lieutenants in English camps are anxious and ready to go to France. Besides, for some time past there has been, as indeed there should be, a large promotion from the ranks. Each battalion in France is supposed to send one private or non-com., every week to take a cadet's course in England. And, needless to say, these men who have roughed it as rankers in the trenches have practical experience far beyond anything possessed by lieutenants who have never seen the front.

FAULT OF OLD SYSTEM.

The whole iniquitous system of raising battalion after battalion in Canada with full complements of officers, in face of what was happening on their arrival in England, was the fault of the old regime at Ottawa. The reserve battalion system should have been adopted long ago. In the meantime the present Canadian military administration here is striving hard to remedy the evil results of the old mismanagement and steadily has been clearing England of the host of unattached officers who, through no fault of their own, have been costing the Canadian Government a tidy sum in pay.

Canadians should be considerate, at least of these older officers who are returning. Don't be critical until you know the exact circumstances. To tell of colonels and even majors going to the front as privates is absurd, and people who argue thus don't know how nonsensical their contentions sound to those in the trenches.

Finally, remember that spry young fellows are what they want out in France as lieutenants. And who are better suited for the job than the scores of Canadian boys in France rising from the ranks every week to don Sam Browne?

Pioneer Railway Made Confederation Possible

By Walter Thornton.

Any extended reference to the Confederation Anniversary and to the development of the Dominion of Canada during the past half century would be incomplete without some allusion to the part played by the Grand Trunk Railway in the upbuilding of the Dominion. It was one of the Fathers of Confederation, Sir George Etienne Cartier, who presented to the Canadian Legislature the act to incorporate the Company. Cartier regarded with pride the fact that he had taken a prominent part in establishing the railway. "I had" charge of the Act which created the Grand Trunk," he declared in Parliament, "and I am prouder of that than any other action of my life," adding that the line was "the greatest benefit that had ever been conferred upon the country."

The building of the Grand Trunk, linking the widely separated centres of population and activity, was, in fact, the one great forward step of the pre-Confederation period. It has been justly said that the Union of British North America would have been a farce if it had been brought about before the successful operation of the railroads had been demonstrated. It was clearly realized also that unless Canada could combine with her inland water navigation plans a railroad system her great territories must forever remain unproductive.

Investors in England supplied the large amount of capital necessary for the construction of this pioneer railroad, and it may not be amiss to quote the following from the Royal Commission report recently issued:—"The Grand Trunk came into existence almost entirely as the result of the investment of private capital. It is comparable in this respect with the private railway companies of England and United States."

Unexpected difficulties were encountered from the inception of the Grand Trunk scheme; traffic did not develop to the extent anticipated, the most acute commercial crisis through which Canada had ever passed came along when the railroad was just throwing open its lines to traffic, while the Civil War in the United States caused the road heavy losses. In spite of these and other difficulties the Grand Trunk steadily persevered in the task it had undertaken, year by year extending its lines, developing its facilities and improving its service. The benefits to the national welfare of Canada which have followed as the result of the creation of the Grand Trunk Railway stand out very clearly when the history of the first half century of the Dominion's progress is examined. No single force, it has been declared, more powerfully contributed to the growth of Canada along national lines. The immigration movement which has peopled the territories of the Dominion was cradled by the Grand Trunk, which supplied the first means of reaching by rail the North-west from Quebec, Montreal and Portland. In order to make emigration to Canada as attractive as possible arrangements were made in 1857 for the giant steamship "Great Eastern" to sail to Portland in connection with the through booking arrangements of the railway. The building of the road stimulated trade of all descriptions, large expenditure of capital being made and thousands of men employed. New towns were established where hitherto there had been only forests of oak and hardwood.

In the matter of the defence of Canada the Grand Trunk also proved of great value. It is of interest to recall, in view of the demands placed upon the transportation companies by the war, that the Grand Trunk in the year before Confederation was transporting rapidly and safely the troops necessary to meet and overcome the Fenian invaders. Every man on the system was enrolled for service, and the readiness with which the invasion was dealt with was in a very great measure due to the existence of the railway as a means of communication. The people of Canada were unanimous in testifying to the military value of the line. "The Grand Trunk Railway," said one of these public tributes, "has been of the utmost service in this emergency, and the promptitude and efficiency with which that service was performed deserves great credit. The iron horses were ready at all hours; and whenever let loose thundered away with the long train of cars, filled with troops, in whatever direction they were required."

To-day, after more than sixty years' of public service, the Grand Trunk faces the future with every confidence in its ability to render the service which the growing needs of the country will demand as Canada takes her place among the mighty nations of the earth. Railway progress is well illustrated by the accompanying pictures, showing the first railway train in Canada in 1836, contrasted with The International Limited of to-day.

BUTTER AND EGG PRICES ARE EASIER

Sugar Declined During the Week--New Potatoes Coming In

The following comment on the market situation as regards foodstuffs, appeared in Canadian Grocer this week:

Various lines of produce and provisions were in an active market during the week. Both butter and eggs are reaching the distributing centres in large quantities and prices show an easy tendency. Heavy production in these commodities is now taking place at country points. Live frogs were scarcer and packers put up their prices in order to induce the farmers to bring them out. Poultry of various kinds reached the market in fairly good supply, but the demand is light and quotations were accordingly down.

FLOUR STEADY.

Flour held in steady position, due to a corresponding situation in the wheat market. There is only a light demand for the commodity as yet. Sugar declined 15c per hundred and is in light demand, but the coming of the fruit preserving season is expected to have a stimulating effect on demand. Much depends on the quantity of strawberries marketed. Reports are conflicting as to the probable production of berries. As yet they have not been reaching the market in large quantities.

Advances were recorded in salad dressing, ice cream salt, soap chips, jams, maple syrup, black pepper. Old potatoes are nearly cleaned out, and new Southern potatoes are now taking their place, prices having declined in the latter during the week. Lettuce and radishes are slow sellers owing to the backyard production which is getting under way. Canadian cabbage and beets are now reaching the market. Georgia peaches put in an appearance, being the first of the season. Business is still quiet in grocery line, particularly in the city trade.

A WORD FOR BEANS

(Philadelphia Record).

Beans do not have to be cooked and canned for preservation. When ripe and shelled and dried they will keep perfectly for long periods and any housekeeper that knows her business, having a stock of beans on hand, will have the means for providing the family table during the whole winter and the ensuing spring with nutritious and tasty food.

If you want to conquer your great vice you must go to church. It is in church and in church alone that you will find the weapons with which to successfully wage the fight. The Go to Church Movement is sweeping onward. It is irresistible. Join it now. Do not delay. Go to church next Sunday. You will see your neighbors there. You will be glad to see them. They will be glad to see you.

REV. J. A. THOMAS BEGINS HIS PASTORATE OF GEORGE ST. CHURCH

New Pastor Delivers Two Impressive Sermons on Sunday—"Our Debt to the Dominion" a Stirring Patriotic Address.

LARGE CONGREGATIONS

Rev. A. J. Thomas, M.A., D.D., who has been transferred from the London Conference to become pastor of the George Street Methodist Church here took charge of the services for the first time in his new church on Sunday. At both services the Church was filled, and the new pastor delivered two sermons that brought him at once into the highest regard of all who were present. Following the Rev. R. G. Peever, who had such a hold upon his congregation and others of the city, Rev. Mr. Thomas has a real task in maintaining the high standard of service set by his predecessor, but all who attended the George Street Church on Sunday came away convinced that the new pastor has entered upon one of the most successful periods of the Church's history. For there was an underlying foundation of determination and depth in both messages that spoke volumes with regard to the character of his ministry.

Mr. Thomas comes to George Street from Dundas Street Centre Methodist Church, London, Ont. Of the twelve churches in that city of the same denomination the Dundas Street Centre Church is the second largest, having for its aim the welfare of about the same number of families as are connected with the George Street Church, here. The two buildings have also approximately the same seating capacity. This was Mr. Thomas' third charge in the City of London, he having been a member of the London conference during the whole of his ministry.

To the Examiner, Mr. Thomas intimated that he had heard much that was favourable of Peterborough and of the George Street Church before he left London, and he had not been disappointed on his arrival in the city. He takes the leadership of the largest Methodist church in the city with a profound belief that a great responsibility rests upon the Christian Church in these days of war and strife, and that it is the duty of the ministry to call the people to renewed faith in God that they might be able to bear the sorrows the future is bound to bring forth. He believes that we are on the eve of great days; that the next twenty-five years will mean much in the life of this country, and that the Church, through all its organizations, should put forth its very best effort to contribute to the building up of a greater Canada.

"Our debt to the Dominion" was the subject of the evening sermon, and Mr. Thomas took for his text, 'Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's." The First of July had always been dear to Canadians since Confederation, but was especially so this year, as it was the Jubilee of the formation of Canada as a Dominion. The years that have passed since the passing of the British North America Act have been characterized by wonderful progress. The Provinces have increased four to nine in number, and the whole country had developed in every way. We are proud to be Canadians, because this is a wonderful country, healthy in climate, beautiful in its scenery and wonderful in its resources. Canada now contains 4,000,000 square miles, ten times its original area; is larger than our neighbours to the south of us, thirty times the size of the United Kingdom, eighteen times larger than Germany, and comprises twice the area of that vast Empire of Russia. It is the land of Faith and Freedom. Its people are intelligent and industrious. Its laws are broad and just. Education has been furthered, toleration prevails, and religion and morality have been given a high place. There is a great future in store for us. The 20th is Canada's century.

"There is no one within the sound of my voice to-night," said the speaker, "who has any idea of what the development of the next fifty years will be. Canada has been and will be, the melting pot of the world."

But we must look forward not only with great hope, but also with fear and trembling, for the future depends not only upon the breadth of our domains, but upon the character of our people. And in determining our part in the future of this country we should ask ourselves not what should Canada give to us, but rather "What should I give to this Dominion" "Next to God and home and church the dearest to any man's heart should be his country, and God help the man who has no country he can call his own."

We owe Canada a readiness to defend her liberties. It was not necessary to remind the congregation that the Empire was engaged in a terrible struggle. She is fighting the mightiest military machine ever known in the history of war, and she will stand until victory comes, though she must stand alone against the unrelenting foe. We should rally round England because she has been the source of the liberties we boast. This is our war. If Britain meets defeat we stand defeated. We must fight to save ourselves. The Canadians at the front have covered the name of Canada with glory, and we rejoice in their valor and achievements. The speaker had often thought that he would like to be with the boys across the sea, but he believed that in preaching the unsearchable riches of Jesus Christ that he was doing more for the Dominion than as a soldier. "I would make a very poor solder, anyway," remarked Mr. Thomas, probably referring to the fact that he is obviously not of Herculean physique.

We owe to the nation the safeguarding of our homes. The nation itself is beautiful and productive, just to the same extent as the home life is strong within it. God forbid that any nation should forget the inestimable importance of the home and the sacredness of the marriage vow for such a nation is on the road to ruin and destruction. The home life in this country is being undermined. It is a serious fact and it is time that we see the peril it involves, and before which we are standing at this very time.

We owe to Canada an interest in the public affairs of the country. If we would be useful we should know how we are governed; how the law is made; and in so far as possible how the public money is expended. Here the speaker paid a great tribute to the press of Canada, which, he said, was rendering a great nationl service in putting before the people the problems that confront the nation from time to time, and giving them an opportunity to form some opinion of what should be the solution of them. For a man should know what he believes and why he believes it. He should think for himself. No party should decide the issues for him.

Lastly, we owe the country the influence of a Christian character. Canada needs Christ and the truth. The strength of a nation depends on its Christian civilization. The greatest assets of any nation are its good men and women. It is righteousness that exalteth a nation. In a sense it is impossible to separate the church and the state. For the man that is true to Christ is true to his country and his fellow man.

"Oh to-night, not only for God's sake or for your own sake, but for the sake of this Dominion," was the Pastor's appeal, "I appeal to you to follow Jesus Christ. We need God as a nation. Let us then seek Him in our own individual lives."

Large Crowd Enjoyed Stony Lake Sail.

The boats will have to be built larger for A. O. F. excursions. Several hundred were turned back yesterday morning at the George Street Wharf, and the Stony Lake pulled away wih a capacity crowd. The sail up the Canal was made in good time and several hours were spent for dinner at Mt. Julian. In the afternoon the trip was continued up the lake to Burleigh Falls, and after an equally enjoyable return sail arrived in Peterborough shorty after 6 o'clock. With ideal weather, a full boat, and thoughtful committee, the day was proved a round of pleasure.

Will all those who have accounts against the July 1st Demonstration Committee please send them in at once to Rollie Deane, George Street, in order that they may be settled without delay.

George Street Choir's Annual Excursion

Choristers Have Most Enjoyable Day Down the River

The annual picnic and excursion of the choir of the George street church was held yesterday down the river. It was one of the most successful and enjoyable outings that the choir has ever held. In fact, the beautiful weather combined with the trip down the river and the picnic features will make it an event to be long remembered by the choir.

The choristers left Rye's boathouse at 9 a.m., and proceeded in launches to Thompson's Landing. An exceedingly tempting and bountiful repast had been arranged for at the nearby farm of Mr. Finney. All did more than full justice to the ample fare. At the conclusion a very sincere and hearty vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. and Mrs. Finney and family for the trouble to which they had gone in preparing such an excellent meal.

Sports were held following the luncheon at which much ability in the athletic line was displayed by both the ladies and the gentlemen. The following events were hotly contested:

Ladies' nail driving contest, winner, Mrs. W. H. Cunningham.

Men's 100 yards, Mr. Edwin Jones.

Ladies' race, Miss Marion Telgmann

Men's sewing contest, Mr. C. S. Thompson.

The star event of the day was a tug of war between two teams of ladies.

At the conclusion of the sports the return journey was begun, arriving at Wallaces Point in time for a picnic luncheon. After an hour or so, the rest of the journey was completed.

The choir feel very much indebted for such a splendid outing to the committee in charge, consisting of Messrs. W. H. Cunningham and E. Walton, and Mrs. Rehill and Miss Lilian Hill; also to Messrs. J. H. Renwick, H. B. Rye, Asa Huycke, and H. Allan for the use of their launches.

Always keep any spare tire covered and locked if possible, to the car. They should be put into use occasionally whetrer necessity requires it or not. This is to prevent them from getting hard through inactivity or sun-baked, especially if exposed.

Flattery catches silly people, but disagreeable candor never catches anybody.

War Sends Norway Food Prices Soaring

While there is complaint about high prices in this country, the people of the United States are indeed fortunate by comparison with neutral countries in Europe. For instance, in a letter written to the Department of Commerce by Charles Forman, United States Consul at Bergen, Norway, some idea of what the people of that country have to pay for the necessities of life is given.

"The expenses of Norwegian bakeries for flour, wages and fuel are now averaging about four times what they were before the outbreak of the war," writes Mr. Forman. "Under existing circumstances the price of bread may be expected to reach ten or twelve cents a pound.

"A sack of rye flour costs to-day about $16, which before the war cost $4.30; wheat flour costs $20.90 to $21.45 per sack as compared with $5.35 to $5.90 before the war. (The Norwegian sack of flour weights 100 kilos, or 220.46 pounds). Coal, which the largest bakeries use for fuel for baking, was $4 per ton, but is now $53. The wages of bakers before the war were about $8 per week of sixty-three hours, and now are about $12 per week of fifty-seven hours.

"The retail price of rye bread in Bergen on December 15, 1914, was 3.8 cents a pound. One year later it cost 4.2 cents a pound, and on December 15, 1916, the price was six cents. It now is sold at 7.3 cents a pound and is expected to go to 7.9 cents in May. Wheat bread is sold at 8.87 cents a pound."

LIVE STOCK MARKET

TORONTO, July 3.—Receipts fair, market weak for cattle, higher for hogs. Prices heavy. Steers $11 to $11.25; choice steers $10.50 to $11; choice butcher bulls $9.25 to $10.75; hogs, fed and watered 2 $16.50, off cars $16.75; f.o.b. $15.50.

Wilson Sends Congratulations

OTTAWA, July 3. — President Woodrow Wilson of the United States has tendered his congratulations to Canada on her fiftieth anniversary of confederation.

Cultivate your musical talent by listening to the perfect recreations of the songs of the World's greatest Artists. If you have children who are studying music, there is nothing you can do that will develop their talent quicker than to give them the daily intimate association of the wonderful New Edison in your home.—The J. Confederation's 50th Anniversary Loyally Celebrated In Peterboro' and to fifteen hundred soldiers on parade here in Peterboro and that on an important occasion of this nature we only have a mere handful, it is truly and substantially significant that a great war is in progress within the Empire, and to those who have friends away it must prove a longing wish that the war was over and that they were back to take part in this memorable occasion.

Upwards of fifty years ago we find that eminent statesmen were faithfully battling with the problem of a united Canada.

Long and bitter (at times) was the struggle. Many were the sessions of Parliament, numerous were the conferences both at home and abroad eloquent were the speeches, important were the suggestions. Great men broke away from their party and submitted to the opinions of others, thus overcoming stubborn opposition and supporting elements of success for the purpose of facilitating a problem of national interest to this great country, the outcome of which was Confederation, and that Canada came to mean not survival of antiquated ideas but the blessings of a well ordered civilization embodying three things: a workable plan of government, triumphant unification of the Provinces, and the preservation of the ties that bind us to the Motherland, and the cherished principles of Democracy, freedom and justice.

We are met here on this occasion to celebrate the golden jubilee of Confederation, the fiftieth anniversary of the day that brought Canada into organized being—the day when we laid the foundation of the Great Dominion of Canada as it exists to-day. When we contrast the immense area of Canada as it was fifty years ago, we see the change. Then Canada consisted of two or three groups of puny provinces, each hoeing its own row in its own little way. They were like separate countries, unconnected by common interests and unconnected by railways or other means of intercourse. Now they are bound together with links of steel—three lines of railway from ocean to ocean, a magnificent system of canals, and provided with all the material conveniences of progress.

Confederation has helped do all that and has made Canada what it is to-day. We owe it to Confederation that Canada to-day stands first among the Dominions of the Empire, that we have grown to the point where we are the factors in the triumph of the greatest world war in the world's history. We owe much to our statesmen to our captains of industry, to our men of commerce, but the greatest glory we can boast of, the glory that throws the whitest light on the golden jubilee of Confederation, comes from the heroic exploits and splendid fighting of Canadians in the battle front in Europe. They are fighting to preserve our country, that its future may be as great as our unbounded resources, our unlimited expanse of fruitful soil, and the spirit and enterprise of the people will make it. What our soldiers have done, the spirit of united effort, the spirit of doing things, they have shown, is a lesson to us. We are called upon to work together in harmony of sentiment and effort, to do our share in helping realize the splendid future that the first fifty years of Confederation shows that we can accomplish.

In natural resources we surpass many other countries. For example, we control 90 per cent. of the total nickel in the world. We have the largest potential water powers in the world; the largest area of fresh water lakes in the world.

Our banking system is the soundest in the world. At the Paris Exposition we took the grand prize for our educational facilities. We surpass nearly all other countries in many other pursuits, such as fisheries, agriculture, dairying, forestry, and numerous others.

In all this Peterborough has had her share — has had her share in what has been done all over Canada. The past half century Peterborough has grown from the village stage to the proportions of a great and prosperous city. Fifty years ago Peterborough was principally a place on the map of Ontario. Now she is a living, thriving force in the industrial, commercial and civic life of the province. Fifty years ago Peterborough's industrial forces were represented by two or three foundries and machine shops, and a few blacksmith shops. We have to-day the most important group of great manufacturing industries in the province. We have the finest array of churches, the best school buildings, the finest shops, the most and most beautiful parks and the best all round civic equipment, in water works, electric works, sewer system and street pavents, of any city of our size in the Dominion.

That is what fifty years of Confederation, coupled with the enterprise, public spirit and civic ambition of the people have done for Peterborough, and it is to the people we look to see that the pace is kept up, that the progress continues, and it is encouraging to note that we shall be equal to the task. Never in the fifty years of Confederation have the people been so united, so enthusiastic in working for the betterment and upbuilding of Peterborough than they are at the present moment, and if we continue to pull together, to work in harmony and in double harness, as citizens loyal to the town, and, above all, loyal to each other, those who may live to see the century of Confederation, will see a ten-times greater Peterborough and a ten times greater Canada. It all depends under Divine Providence, whether this shall be—it all depends upon you and me, and those who come after us, whether or not this shall come to pass. If we and those who will take our places do our bit; do our best, as patriotic Canadians, as citizens of Peterborough, loyal to our home town and loyal to each other; if we work together, in harmony and with one purpose, (the good of our common country) and the good of our neighbours; if we work in national, civic and personal harmony, then the accomplishments of the past half century will be but as a skirmish compared to the great battle of progress Canada and Peterborough will win in the fifty years to come.

In conclusion let me express the hope that the terrible European conflict which has rent so many brave hearts, which has dotted the fields of France and Flanders with soldiers' graves, which has caused the rivers to flow with blood, murdered innocent women and children, destroyed magnificent towns and villages, we may be moved with a desire to throw our petty differences, selfish paritzan ideas into a melting pot out of which will come a great empire policy of tolerance and efficiency.

G. A. GILLESPIE, M.P.

Mr. Gillespie spoke of the great advancement of Peterborough since Confederation. He said that we look back at the history of the deeds of such men as the veterans of '66 with love and are glad to co-operate with what his gone before and live up to the glorious standard they set. He said he hoped that in fifty years those who live after us will appreciate what is being done at present in Empire building, both here and in France, as we appreciate the veterans and the work of the fathers of confederation.

J. J. HARTLEY.

Mr. J. J. Hartley, representing the Trades and Labour Council said he was proud to look down upon the veterans of '66 and those of the great war. He was also proud of those who hadn't gone, for he felt sure that they would be in khaki, but for circumstances which prevented them. They had the spirit, if not the opportunity. He said the unbounded growth of Canada since Confederation was due to such spirit of the Canadians as has always been uppermost. Mr. Hartley dwelt upon the undying tales of heroism the Canadians had made in their part in the great war; deeds which will be handed down generation after generation in the history of these terrible years. He said labour had pressed on in the past years and no body has gained greater influence or is more strongly bound together.

LT.-COL. JOHNSTON.

Lt.-Col. Johnston who spoke next met with storms of applause, which proclaimed his universal popularity amongst the people. In his speech he referred to the growth of military strength since Confederation. Fifty years ago there was no smaller department than the military, since then a magnificent man-power has grown and the name of Canadians has been made undying by the men and their comrades who stood in the park in khaki. He said he regretted that the training of our men should be carried on in England, as in Canada a better training was given them than overseas. There was just as much ability to instruct here as overseas and here there is red tape, or better called tanglefoot. Col Johnston deplored the military distinction shown and contended it was a scandal that an officer and the humblest private should not be allowed to fraternize because of it. He concluded by saying that he was happy to state the country was co-operating with the military powers as he has never seen the growth more prosperous than at present.

JUDGE HUYCKE.

Judge Huycke spoke of the great depletion in the man-power of Peterborough since the war. He said but for present conditions, a magnificent celebration would have been held to mark the 50th birthday of Confederation. The cloud of war tends to obscure the calls at home and things do not receive the attention they should. He said that if Canada does as well in the future as she has done in the past 50 years, a magnificent future awaits our glorious country. The patriots of '66 must be glad to know there are patriots still. He spoke of the magnificent result Confederation had attained in binding together a few scattered provinces into a mighty Dominion, bound together in a unity that, instead of dreading an invasion, stood ready, equal to any occasion. In the years gone by, Canada had been the refuge of many a refugee from the United States, and that they were now being replaced by a few contemptible slackers who have run to the States and hoped the States may long keep them.

He concluded by saying that he hoped this year of Jubilee might mark the turning point if not the wind-up of the terrible conflict in Europe and free the world from the Hun monsters oppression. He said that Canada great now, with such spirits, working as are now engaged in the great conflict both with the rifle and the hoe would make a greater Canada than we venture even to predict.

CAPT. J. H. BURNHAM, M.P.

Capt. J. H. Burnham, M.P., spoke as follows:

Looking over the record and experiences of those living in 1867, we find a great change since that date, both socially and mechanically, and even indeed, in the interpretation of the Scriptures, and therefore, religiously, but most of all, nationally. Socially, there is no longer the promiscuous, uncertain and, therefore, frequently omitted system of aid to the unfortunate and unhappy that existed in the old time. Gradually the idea of the dignity of manhood and womanhood and the love of childhood has developed out of the old social class order, and it is now accounted very weak for a young man to accept the patronage or the bounty either of the public or of private citizens, when, if he were a real man, he would show it by helping others, not himself. That young man who is brought up to the belief that it is not so much what he can do for others as what they can do for him, is on the road to ruin no matter what his surroundings are. The man who is greater than he, who taketh a city, is still the only real man. The rest are in some way either wards, weaklings or dependents. The combination of all departments of national life to better the general condition, has been the most notable advance since 1867. Privilege is passing. We are rapidly advancing to the idea of giving every man and woman an honest, fair chance, and of lending a hand to help the young, the weak, and the old over the hard places in the road.

These are the chief developments in our social order. Nationally, it is but necessary to point to our soldiers and to France and Flanders. Our greatest history is written there. Politically, people are very largely independent. They are no longer slaves to prejudices or victims of all sorts and conditions of men. The Children's Aid Society has done a good work throughout Canada. Woman has emerged from her seclusion or perhaps, exclusion, and now takes her equal part in the whole social order. Merit and capability play a part impossible to them sixty years ago. People are much more free in every way, even in their manners, which, however, is a blemish, but about the only one.

IN THE AFTERNOON.

The programme in the afternoon opened with a parade to the Exhibition grounds by the members of the Great War Veterans' Association. The parade was headed by the band of the Salvation Army which was conveyed to the grounds in the two motor lorries of the Quaker Oats Company. The veterans followed in automobiles. The address to the veterans did not materialise at the grounds owing to the fact that the bicycle races started and the committee was anxious to run the programme through on schedule time. A small boy's toy automobile, made up to represent the new runabout car of the Fire Department, attracted a lot of attention. It was towed around the grounds by a touring car.

There was very little delay in getting the bicycle races under way. The way the officials of the Canadian Wheelman's Association handled the situation was pleasing to the large crowd that thronged the grand stand, and the park. The races were good and were well contested. The results are as follows:

BICYCLE RACES.

Five Mile Open.—1. F. McCarthy, Toronto; 2. H. McDonald, Toronto; 3. Doc Morton, Toronto.

Time of race—14.10.

CULTURE VS. KULTURE

(Boston News Bureau).

German culture received a clear appraisal at the hands of a German in 1912, when an American association of industrial chemists made an excursion from New York to Chicago thence to San Francisco, thence to New Orleans and so home to New York.

Included in the party were many Teuton representatives of the great German dye companies, famous German professors and technical men, some accompanied by their wives.

Aside from the manner in which the Germans sneered at every American endeavour in the line of industrial chemistry, their conduct was chiefly remarkable for the manner in which they scrambled over their honoured savants for automobile seats, while the Americans deferred to them.

"I am glad you brought your wife along," remarked a German lady to an American chemist, toward the end of the trip. "You have shown my countrymen how a gentleman should treat his wife."

MILITARY NEWS

overseas with the 93rd. He writes that he is still in hospital at Woolwich. "I was booked to go to the Convalescent camp at Epsom," says the lett r, "but when the time came they would not let me go. I have just got out of bed again to-day and am getting on fairly well."

"We are having some 'amusing' times here with the Fritzs coming over on their usual raids; we can see them every time they come over. The day the they killed so many people they passed right over us, but a thing like an air raid does not trouble us after being in France."

No Question of Votes for Women in Russia To-day

PETROGRAD.—In the simple, child-like Russian mind, no question seems to have arisen as to the rights of women.

When I asked whether she would vote in the New Russia, the Russian woman realized immediately that I was either an Englishman or an American.

"There is no question about it," said one Russian woman, shrugging her shoulders. "We've had bigger things to fight for in Russia than the right of women to vote. We've fought side by side with the men for human rights, with no question of sex involved. We've gone to jail, and we've died and we've even taken our turns at assassinations. Only an Anglo-Saxon, if you'll pardon me for plain speaking, would think of raising such a question."

The answer was calculated to make an Anglo-Saxon feel like a wife-beater.

I approached four of the women who sat on the various committees ta bles around the Duma building, and plainly put to each one of them this question:

"Madame, have you ever been in jail?"

They had—all four of them. They told their stories with proud smiles.

"Has any woman in Russia ever been put in jail for demanding women's rights?" I asked one of these women who had been jailed for a part in the Stolypin assassination. She was sitting in the office of the new National Peasants Union presiding over the book in which the incoming peasant delegates from every part of Russia were entering their names.

"Never! Never!" she said, emphatically. "That's one crime that has never been charged against the Czar. But we Russian women haven't been like the American and English women. The rights of all human beings, men and women, have been at stake in Russia, and men and women have been fighting side by side for them.

"All of us, men and women, have considered ourselves as human beings without any sex differences. Now that the revolution is won, men and women are still side by side. Nobody has raised the question of women's rights in the revolution until you American and English newspapermen came along."

"But are you women sure that you will be allowed to vote in the new Government"

"Why just as sure as the men are. The question isn't even raised. I tell you. It hasn't occurred to anybody that women might not vote."

FALL WHEAT MEASURES 5 FEET 11 INCHES

Wheat measuring five feet eleven inches in height is among the wonders of this season's heavy growth. The aforesaid mentioned wheat can be seen growing on the farm of Mr. Thomas Slattery, of Otonabee. The whole field represents an unusual growth and the crop will be heavy. Mr. Slattery has one of the best wheat growing farms in the township.

An Enoch Arden In Real Life In England

THEN HE DISAPPEARED TO GO "OFF TO THE FRONT" ONCE MORE.

A story which realizes in actual life more than all the pathos of Tennyson's "Enoch Arden," is just now causing a sensation in society, says the People's Journal of Dundee. The other day there walked into a London Club an officer of high birth whose death had been officially announced by the War Office more than two years ago. No word of him had been heard in the interval, and his wife believing him dead, had married again.

Over two years ago his young wife, scarcely more than a bride, received an official notification from the War Office of her husband's death in action. It was necessary, owing to the high standing of the family, to use every means of ascertaining his fate before presuming the death, and in consequence considerable expenditure was incurred and every channel of information tapped.

The family was assured that there could be no possible doubt. The officer was seen to fall while gallantly leading his men in attack, his identity disc had been recovered, and his body interred. His wife received the condolences of a host of friends and relatives, and to lessen her sorrow became a nurse in one of the military hospitals.

While acting in this capacity she met a young officer, who declared his love for her. His affections were returned, and not long ago the widow and her former patient were quietly married. It was a simple "war wedding," celebrated in one of the fashionable churches of London, and no reception followed. The honeymoon was spent on the South Coast, and within a few days the husband was again in the trenches at the front and the lady returned to the hospital to carry on her work of mercy.

Her real husband has now made a dramatic reappearance. Badly wounded, he fell on the battlefield, and when the search parties sought to bring him in they thought him dead, and so recovering his identification disc, they passed on to tend the living. Then came a German search party, and finding the officer breathing, took him into their lines a prisoner. Several days later, it now transpires, the body of another officer was brought in, and this was buried in the belief that it was the body of the officer who was in the hands of the enemy.

For months the officers who had been believed dead lay struggling for life in a German hospital, unknown and unrecognized. Then, when consciousness returned, his mind was a blank. Asked by his captors who he was, he was unable to tell, nor could he remember even that he was a soldier. Several operations were performed upon him in the hope that his memory would return, but all to no avail. In consequence of the complete blank, and his showing absolutely no desire for liberty, he was granted greater freedom than would have been the case otherwise.

Suddenly it all flashed back; he remembered the last charge, the crash, his fall, his bride in London, and the desire of freedom became uppermost. Happily he had not allowed the Germans to know that he had recovered his memory, but continued to carry out his daily round as before. Then he saw his chance and seized it. Quietly slipping away he succeeded in gaining neutral territory and at last he reached England.

One of his first acts in London was to casually stroll into his club, to the amazement of the fellow members. Many at first refused to believe his identity, declaring that a practical joke was being played upon them, but the "dead" officer was able after much argument to convince even the most sceptical that he was not dead and really very much alive. Then the news was gently broke to him that his wife had married again, thinking herself to be a widow.

Declaring that he was "off to the front," he walked out of the club.

Matters are now in the hands of the family lawyers.

Devastated French Soil Cleared and Sown

Peasants are Being Housed and Farming Started Again.

FRENCH FRONT.—British, French and American civilians are working in closest co-operation with the French military and civil authorities, in restoring the lands devastated by the Germans when they hurriedly quit the lines they had held for two years from Noyon to the Somme. The Associated Press correspondent, after visiting Noyon, went through the entire district and observed what was being done.

Others have followed the example of the Federal capital and have devoted their energies to the succor of particular localities. There are 243 villages and hamlets spread over the French zone alone of the country which the Germans before their retreat tried to make into a desert. One hundred of these small communities are now just heaps of stones and bricks without one habitable room or cellar among them while of the remainder one-third were partly demolished and the rest only slightly.

Facing Vast Problem.

In this region 35,000 old men and women and young children under fifteen years were left without shelter or food by the Germans. Some 12,000 of these were evacuated immediately to the interior of France, where a proportion of them joined their relatives.

The military authorities have grappled in a masterly way with the vast problem which confronts them, of providing for a large destitute community immediately behind the lines, where a shield of French flesh and steel are holding back the Germans from a possible return.

They set to work to organize the country and its people. The first step was to provide food, and this was done through the military commissaria, as there was no means of civilian transport of supplies from other parts of France.

Then came the question of putting in cultivation again the 250,000 acres of agricultural land comprised in the French zone. It was late in the season, but a practicable scheme was at once formulated and put into effect.

Officers of high rank were placed in charge. The devastated country was divided into seven sections, and composed of twenty-five communes and each in charge of an officer with skilled aides. Horses were lent by the army, broken ploughs and harrows were repaired by motor mechanics of the army, seeds of all kinds were produced and work on the land was begun.

For this, manual labour was necessary, and this was found among the many peasants and small farmers in the ranks. Thirty American tractors were found lying idle in a depot not far from the stricken district, and these were transported to the places where they could be most useful and put to work.

The labour was dangerous owing to the presence of unexploded shells under the surface of the fields, but only one incident has occurred from this cause.

In this way about 4,000 acres have been ploughed and sown with grain and grass and another 2,500 acres ploughed and cleared of weeds. While with the help of British, American and French donors every family has been provided with seeds and roots to form a truck garden, with the result that sufficient produce is expected to make the community self-supporting Life Endurable.

The Germans had also cultivated a considerable tract of land and sown it with rye, which they tried to destroy before their hurried departure, but with only partial success, for at least 2,500 acres will produce crops this season.

In the meantime houses are being repaired where possible and temporary shacks erected where no habitation exists. Schools have been opened military doctors attend the sick a postal service has begun, and so far as possible, life is being made endurable for the thousands who suffered so much during the German occupation and virtually lost everything they possessed when the invaders departed.

Fall Will See Big British Ship Increase

GLASGOW, June 28.—A day on the River Clyde helps explain Lloyd George's confidence that the submarine menace will be beaten.

A snare-drum roar from thousands of steam riveters and a battlefield drum-fire of crashing hydraulic hammers, unending miles of wooden and steel scaffolding with workmen swarming over them like flies; towering cranes that look capable of lifting a county courthouse and setting it down in the next county: these are some of the reasons.

Girls—Thousands and thousands of trouseretted girls—furnish so many additional reasons.

And then there are certain reasons visible to the eye concerning which secrecy is imposed. They constitute a method of direct warfare against submarines and are already proving their effectiveness, but more than that cannot be told.

Dwarfs its Own Record.

The Clyde was the greatest shipbuilding centre in the world before the war began. Now it dwarfs its own activities of three years ago. For twenty-two miles on one side of the river immense plants crowd against one another; the same is true for half the distance on the other side of the river. Soon it will be the whole distance on both sides.

The world's biggest fighting craft went down the ways here a few days ago, but work stopped many months ago on what was to be the world's biggest merchant ship. Instead smaller ships and more of them are being made; some partly dressed in their armor-plate show how the new policy of building standardized ships is being carried out. Builders report it means a forty per cent. gain in speed of construction.

Great Extension by Fall.

"Unless the destructiveness of the German submarines is greatly increased, the extension of British shipping will practically take care of the situation, by autumn," said Fred Lobnitz, munitions director for Scotland. "This does not take into account the huge preparations under way in America."

More than one shipbuilder along the river displayed a keen perception of the probable acceleration of America's output.

Women Workers.

The fact that they are compelled to rely on women and girls for an immense proportion of their labour has ceased to be considered a handicap, the shipbuilders say. Aside from such work as calls for sheery muscle, they declared, the women are completely qualified as proved by the fact that they are averaging a larger output per person than men in the same work averaged before the war. The same increase in output since the war began, of course has been shown by the men.

Women are used chiefly in work where automatic devices take the heavy lifting off their hands.

Thus feminine hands are seen turning out fifteen inch shells practically without masculine assistance doing the bulk of the work on the famous British tanks, gun carriages and, naturally on aeroplanes and air ships.

The very excellence of their workmanship makes certain the problem of adjusting labour conditions after the war will be a big one. "Just now they are giving thought to one thing only," said Lobnitz, "and that is the winning of the war."

A HIGHLAND RESORT.
Many of the returned wounded officers of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces are sojourning and recuperating their strength at the Highland Inn, Algonquin Park. 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, this delightful spot is just the place to regain health and the Inn offers to comfortable accommodation at reasonable rates. Splendid fishing, good boating billiards, lovely walks, are some of the attractions. An illustrated publication, telling all about it, sent free on request.—C. E. Horning, Grand Trunk Railway, Union Station, Tofonto.

Manchu Dynasty Is Restored

Special to Examiner:

PEKIN, July 3.—General Chan Hsuan, New Dictator of China, today restored the Manchu dynasty by inducing President Li Into resigning and placing the boy Emperor, Hsuan Tung, on the throne with appropriate ceremonies. The new Emperor forthwith proclaimed his intention of establishing a constitutional monarchy and calling Parliament together at once.

ON THE DEFENSIVE.
(New York Herald).
When the German military machine was stopped at the Marne it was stopped forever, so far as concerns any possible advance. Germany's armies and Austria's armies are on the defensive, and will be to the end. That there is much work, hard work, ahead is realised by all of the Allies. They are ready for it, and Italy is doing her part splendidly.

WHAT'S TO BE DONE.
(Toronto Star).
With a man the question is not how long he is to live, but what he will do with his life. Better ten years of useful life than half a century of selfish idleness. If the government wants an extension of its own life, what does it propose to do with it? If the opposition wants a new government, what does it propose the new government will do?

OBITUARY

MRS. MARGARET A. JOHNSTON.
Mrs. Margaret A. Johnston, relict of the late Samuel Johnston, passed away on Sunday night at the home of her son, Mr. G. W. Johnston, 528 Weller street. The funeral was held this afternoon to the Little Lake cemetery, Rev. Dr. Wilson officiating. The deceased, before her marriage, was Margaret A. Elkins. She is survived by two sons, Mr. T. W. Johnston, of Rochester, and Mr. G. W. Johnston of this city.

J. J. MAGEE.
John James Magee died on Sunday morning at Nichols Hospital, aged 55 after an illness of some months duration.
Mr. Magee was born in Emily, where he resided practically all his life and where he leaves a large circle of friends, amongst whom he was held in the greatest respect. He was a member of the Church of England.
He is survived by his wife and one son, Frank, one sister, Mrs. Frank Fowlers, Smith, and three brothers, Fred, George and Walter.
The funeral took place this morning from the family residence Lot 21, Concession 2, Emily to the Omemee cemetery.

THE CUSTOMS RETURNS FOR THE MONTH

The Customs returns for last month indicate a great increase in business activities over the same month last year:
Receipts for June, 1917, $78,827.89.
Receipts for June, 1916, $57,504.68.

MORE DEATHS IN JUNE 1917

The vital statistics for June, 1917, show a heavier mortality, but fewer births, than the same month last year:

	1917	1916
Births	39	47
Deaths	25	18
Marriages	20	18

The building permits for June this year, though fewer than June last year, are appreciably larger. This year 17 were issued, amounting to $18,165; last year 18 were issued and amounted to $28,935.

Political Offenders Are Pardoned

Boy Emperor of China Announces His "Platform"

FOREIGN TREATIES ARE TO REMAIN IN FORCE

PEKING, July 4. — The Imperial emblem is everywhere displayed, marking the restoration of the Manchu Monarchy. There has been no disorder.

In a long edict, Emperor Hsuan Tung who was restored to the throne to-day, explains how, being youthful, he was forced to relinquish sovereign power to Yuan Shih Ki, late President of the Chinese Republic.
